PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Wicked men are often interrupted in their evil courses, yet return to them when the restraint is removed, as if delivered from trouble that they might commit more sins: but the Lord disappoints their malice; and by bringing them into danger, gives them manifest proof of their folly and wickedness. We should be careful how we interpret events in providence; lest we mistake the opportunity of following our own inclinations, for an approbation of our conduct: and in doubtful cases we must neither judge by appearance, nor be determined by plausible arguments.—An accurate knowledge of the Divine law, an established judgment, and a holy state of heart, are requisite to mark out the path of duty, in some important cases. But it is always safe to deny the suggestions of revenge, covetousness, ambition, impatience, or other selfish principles: it savours more of piety to interpret a providential dispensation as a trial of faith and patience, and an exercise of self-denial, than to consider it as a license for self-indulgence: and a tender conscience will fear a plausible temptation, and "abstain from all appearance of evil."—We should perform all our relative duties from regard to the authority of God; when others violate his law in their conduct towards us, we must not do the same towards them; and in waiting for the performance of his promises, we must use lawful means alone. Under the deepest injuries we must not avenge ourselves, but after the example of David, and of David's Lord, "commit our cause to him that judgeth righteously."—Magistracy is the ordinance of God, and confers dignity on those advanced to it, who, in all ordinary cases and lawful things, should be honoured and obeyed: and if they abuse their trust, the Lord will execute vengeance upon them. If persecuted in one city we may flee to another, and use necessary means of self-preservation; but we must not lift up our hands, or adopt offensive measures against those whom God has placed over us, though like Saul or Nero.—Scott.

CHAP. XXV. SAMUEL'S DEATH.—We have here a short account of Samuel's death and burial. 1. Though he was a great man, and one that was admirably well qualified for public service, yet he spent the latter end of his days in retirement and obscurity: not because he was superannuated, for he knew how to preside in a college of the prophets, chap. xix. 20, but because Israel had rejected him, for which God thus justly chastised them, and because his desire was to be quiet, and to enjoy himself and his God in acts of devotion, now in his advanced years; and in this desire God graciously indulged him. Let old people be willing to rest themselves, though it look like burying themselves alive. 2. Though he was a fast friend to David, for which Saul hated peace be to thine house, and peace be unto all that thou hast.

7 And now I have heard that thou hast shearers: now thy shepherds which were with us, [n]we [‡]hurt them not, neither was there ought missing unto them, all the while they were in Carmel.

8 Ask thy young men, and they will shew thee. Wherefore let the young men find favour in thine eyes: for we come in [o]a good day: give, I pray thee, whatsoever cometh to thine hand unto thy servants, and to [p]thy son David.

9 And when David's young men came, they spake to Nabal according to all those words in the name of David, and [§]ceased.

10 ¶ And Nabal answered David's servants, and said, [q]Who is David? and who is the son of Jesse? [r]There be many[4] servants now a days that break away every man from his master.

11 [s]Shall I then take my bread, and my water, and my [‖]flesh that I have killed for my shearers, and [t]give it unto men, [u]whom I know not whence they be?

12 So David's young men turned their way, and went again, and [x]came and told him all those sayings.

13 And David said unto his men, [y]Gird ye on every man his sword. And they girded on every man his sword; and [z]David also girded on his sword: and there went up after David about four hundred men; [a]and two hundred abode by the stuff.[5]

14 ¶ But one of the young men told Abigail, Nabal's wife, saying, Behold, David sent messengers out of the wilderness to salute our master; and he [*]railed on them.

15 But the men were [b]very good unto us, and we were not [†]hurt, neither missed we any thing, as long as we were conversant with them, when we were in the fields:

16 They were [c]a wall unto us both by night and day, all the while we were with them keeping the sheep.

17 Now therefore know and consider what thou wilt do; for [d]evil is determined against our master, and against all his household: for he is such [e]a son of Belial,[6] that a man cannot speak to him.

18 ¶ Then Abigail [g]made haste, and [h]took two hundred loaves, and two bottles of wine,[7] and five sheep ready dressed, and five measures of parched corn, and an hundred [‡]clusters of raisins, and two hundred cakes of figs, and laid them on asses.

19 And she said unto her servants, Go on before me; behold, I come after you. [i]But she told not her husband Nabal.

20 And it was so, as she [k]rode on the ass, that she came down by the covert of the hill, and, behold, David and his men came down against her; and she met them.

21 Now David had said, [l]Surely in vain have I kept all that this fellow hath in the wilderness, so that nothing was missed of all that pertained unto him: and [m]he hath requited me evil for good.

22 [n]So and more also do God unto the enemies of David, [o]if I leave of all that pertain to him by the morning light [p]any that pisseth against the wall.[8]

23 And when Abigail saw David, she hasted, and [q]lighted off the ass, and [r]fell before David on her face, and bowed herself to the ground,

24 And [s]fell at his feet, and said, [t]Upon me, my lord, upon me let this iniquity be: and [u]let thine handmaid, I pray thee, speak in thine [§]audience, and hear the words of thine handmaid.

25 Let not my lord, I pray thee, [l]regard this [x]man of Belial, even Nabal: for as his name is, so is he; [*]Nabal is his name, and folly is with him: but I thine handmaid saw not the young men of my lord, whom thou didst send.

26 Now therefore, my lord, [y]as the LORD liveth, [z]and as thy soul liveth, seeing [a]the LORD hath withholden thee from coming to shed blood, and [b]from [†]avenging thyself with thine own hand, now [c]let thine enemies, and they that seek evil to my lord, be as Nabal.

27 And now this [‡]blessing, which thine handmaid hath brought unto my lord, let it even be given unto the young men that [§]follow my lord.

28 I pray thee, [d]forgive the trespass of thine handmaid: for [e]the LORD will certainly make my lord a sure house; because my lord [f]fighteth the battles of the LORD, and [g]evil hath not been found in thee all thy days.

29 Yet a man is risen to pursue thee, and to seek thy soul: but the soul of my lord shall be [h]bound in the bundle of life [i]with the LORD thy God; and the souls of thine enemies, them shall he [j]sling out,[9] [‖]as out of the middle of a sling.

30 And it shall come to pass, when the LORD shall have done to my lord [k]according to all the good that he hath spoken concerning thee, and shall have appointed thee ruler over Israel;

31 That this shall be no [*]grief unto thee, nor offence of heart unto my lord, either that thou hast shed blood causeless, or that my lord hath [l]avenged himself: but when the LORD shall have dealt well with my lord, then [m]remember thine handmaid.

32 ¶ And David said to Abigail, [n]Blessed him, as also for dealing plainly with him; yet he died in peace, even in the worst of the days of Saul's tyranny, who, he sometimes feared, would kill him, chap. xvi. 2. Though Saul loved him not, yet he feared him, as Herod did John; and feared the people, for all knew him to be a prophet. Thus is Saul restrained from hurting him. 3. All Israel lamented him: and they had reason, for they had all a loss in him. His personal merits commanded this honour to be done him at his death: his former services to the public, when he judged Israel, made this respect to his name and memory a just debt; it had been very ungrateful to have withheld it. The sons of the prophets had lost the founder and president of their college, and whatever weakened them was a public loss: but that was not all, Samuel was a constant intercessor for Israel, prayed daily for them, chap. xii. 23; if he go, they part with the best friend they have. The loss is the more grievous at this juncture, when Saul is grown so outrageous, and David driven from his country; never more need of Samuel than now, yet now he is removed. We will hope that the Israelites lamented Samuel's death the more bitterly, because they remembered against themselves their own sin and folly in rejecting him and desiring a king. Note, (1.) Those have hard hearts, who can bury their faithful ministers with dry eyes; who are not sensible of the loss of those who have prayed for them, and taught them the way of the Lord. (2.) When God's providence removes our relations and friends from us, we ought to be humbled for our misconduct toward them while they were with us. 4. They buried him, not in the school of the prophets at Naioth, but in his own house, or perhaps in the garden pertaining to it, at Ramah, where he was born.

NABAL THE CHURL.—Here begins the story of Nabal. 1. A short account of him, who and what he was, ver. 2, 3. A man we should never have heard of, if there had not happened some communication between him and David. Observe, 1. His name: Nabal; a fool, so it signifies. It was a wonder that his parents would give him that name, and an ill omen of what proved to be his character. Yet indeed we all of us deserve to be so called, when we come into the world; for "Man is born like the wild ass's colt," and "foolishness is bound up in our hearts." 2. His family: he was of the house of Caleb, but was indeed of another spirit. He inherited Caleb's estate; for Maon and Carmel lay near Hebron, which was given to Caleb, Josh. xv. 54, 55; xiv. 14; but he was far from inheriting his virtues. He was a disgrace to his family, and then it was no honour to him. Degeneranti genus opprobrium—A good extraction is a reproach to him who degenerates from it. The Seventy, and some other ancient versions read it appellatively; not, He was a Calebite, He was a dogged man, of a currish disposition, surly and snappish, and always snarling. He was ανδρωπος κυνικος—a man that was a cynic. 3. His wealth: he was very great, that is, very rich; for riches make men look great in the eye of the world; otherwise, to one that takes his measures aright, he really looked very mean. Riches are common blessings, which God often gives to Nabals, to whom he gives neither wisdom nor grace. 4. His wife: Abigail; a woman of great understanding. Her name signifies, "the joy of her father;" yet he could not promise himself much joy of her, when he married her to such a husband, inquiring more after his wealth than after his wisdom. Many a child is thrown away upon a great heap of the mire of worldly wealth; married to that, and to nothing else that is desirable. Wisdom is good with an inheritance, but an inheritance is good for little without wisdom. Many an Abigail is tied to a Nabal, and if it be so, be her understanding, like Abigail's, ever so great, it will be little enough for her exercises. 5. His character: he had no sense either of honour or honesty: not of honour, for he was churlish, cross, and ill-humoured; not of honesty, for he was evil in his doings, hard, and oppressive, and a man that cared not what fraud and violence he used in getting and saving, so he could but get and save. This is the character given of Nabal by Him who knows what every man is.—Henry.

ABIGAIL.—Ver. 23—31. The conduct and address of Abigail on this emergency are worthy of admiration. Nabal had insulted David as a run-away slave: but in order to pacify him, Abigail showed him the reverence due to a superior, and to her sovereign in the purpose of God. Though he was evidently in an unbecoming heat, she took no notice of it; but only entreated him to allow her, as if she had been the criminal, to plead her cause, and to give her a candid hearing. She could not excuse her husband's conduct, and the case did not allow her to veil his infirmities: but she attempted to convert his well known rashness and insolence into an argument with David why he should lay aside his resentment. She intimated, that Nabal (whose very name signified folly,) meant no peculiar affront to him; but only spoke according to his usual way of treating those who applied to him; and it was beneath a person of character and eminence to notice the rudeness of such a man; but had she been present, the young men would have met with better treatment. With consummate address, she expressed a full confidence, that the Lord had sent her to keep his servant David "from avenging himself with his own hand;" and she solemnly desired, that "as sure as the LORD lived, and as David's soul lived," all that sought evil to him might be as weak and infatuated in their counsels as Nabal: and then he would have nothing to fear from them, for they would effectually ruin themselves. The liberal present, (which she called a blessing, being an expression of her goodwill,) she represented as unworthy of his notice, but begged that it might be given to his followers. She professed her firm belief that he be the LORD God of Israel, which sent thee this day to meet me:

33 And [o]blessed be thy advice, and blessed be thou, [p]which hast kept me this day from coming to shed blood, and from [q]avenging myself with mine own hand.

34 For in very deed, as the LORD God of Israel liveth, which hath kept me back from hurting thee, except thou hadst [r]hasted and come to meet me, surely [s]there had not been left unto Nabal, by the morning light, any that pisseth against the wall.

35 So David received of her hand that which she had brought him, and said unto her, [t]Go up in peace to thine house; see, I have hearkened to thy voice, and have [u]accepted thy person.

36 ¶ And Abigail came to Nabal; and, behold, he held [x]a feast in his house, like the feast of a king; and Nabal's heart was [y]merry within him, for he was very drunken: wherefore [z]she told him nothing, less or more, until the morning light.

37 But it came to pass in the morning, when the wine was gone out of Nabal, and his wife [a]had told him these things, that [b]his heart died within him, and he became as a stone.[10]

38 And it came to pass about ten days after, that [c]the LORD smote Nabal, that he died.[11]

39 ¶ And when David heard that Nabal was dead, he said, [d]Blessed be the LORD,[12] that hath [e]pleaded the cause of my reproach from the hand of Nabal, and hath [f]kept his servant from evil: for the LORD [g]hath returned the wickedness of Nabal upon his own head. And David sent and communed with Abigail, [h]to take her to him to wife.

40 And when the servants of David were come to Abigail to Carmel, they spake unto her, saying, [i]David sent us unto thee, to take thee to him to wife.

41 And she arose, and bowed herself on her face to the earth, and said, Behold, let [k]thine handmaid be a servant [l]to wash the feet of the servants of my lord.

42 And [m]Abigail hasted, and arose, and rode upon an ass, with five damsels of hers that [†]went after her; and she went after the messengers of David, and became his wife.

43 David also took Ahinoam of [n]Jezreel; and they were also [o]both of them [p]his wives.

44 ¶ But Saul had given [q]Michal his daughter, David's wife, to [r]Phalti the son of Laish, which was of [s]Gallim.

AND the [a]Ziphites came unto Saul to Gibeah, saying, [b]Doth not David hide himself in the hill of Hachilah, which is before Jeshimon?

2 Then [c]Saul arose, and went down to the wilderness of Ziph, having [d]three thousand chosen men of Israel with him, to seek David in the wilderness of Ziph.

3 And Saul pitched in the hill of [e]Hachilah, which is before Jeshimon, by the way. But David abode in the wilderness; and he saw that Saul came after him into the wilderness.

4 David therefore [f]sent out spies, and understood that Saul was come in very deed.

5 ¶ And David arose, and came to the place where Saul had pitched: and David beheld the place where Saul lay, and [g]Abner the son of Ner, the captain of his host: and Saul lay in the [o]trench,[1] and the people pitched round about him.

6 Then answered David and said to Ahimelech the [h]Hittite, and to [i]Abishai the son of [k]Zeruiah, brother to Joab, saying, [l]Who will go down with me to Saul to the camp? And Abishai said, I will go down with thee.

7 So David and Abishai came to the people by night; and, behold, Saul lay [m]sleeping within the trench, and his spear stuck in the ground at his bolster: but Abner and the people lay round about him.[2]

8 Then said Abishai to David, [n]God hath [†]delivered thine enemy into thine hand this day: now therefore let me smite him, I pray thee, with the spear even to the earth at once, and I will not smite him [o]the second time.

9 And David said to Abishai, Destroy him not:[3] for [p]who can stretch forth his hand against the LORD's anointed, and be guiltless?

10 David said furthermore, As [q]the LORD liveth, the LORD shall smite him; or [r]his day shall come to die; or [s]he shall descend into battle, and perish.

11 The LORD forbid [t]that I should stretch forth mine hand against the LORD's anointed: but, I pray thee, take thou now the spear that is at his bolster, and the cruse of water, and let us go.

12 So David took [u]the spear and the cruse of water from Saul's bolster; and they gat them away, and no man saw it, nor knew it, neither awaked: for they were all asleep; because [v]a deep sleep from the LORD was fallen upon them.

13 ¶ Then David went over to the other side, and stood on [x]the top of an hill afar off; a great space being between them:

14 And David cried to the people, and to and his family would be established in the kingdom: she made honourable mention of his great services to Israel, and of his unblameable conduct; and adverted to the injustice of Saul's persecution, whom in honour of his authority she did not mention. She declared her assurance of David's preservation by a remarkable expression, "that his soul would be bound up in the bundle of life with the LORD his God," as men bind up those things which they are afraid of losing. He was irreversibly appointed unto the kingdom, and in consequence was numbered with those whose lives are upheld and protected against all possible dangers, by the almighty power of the everlasting God: while his enemies would be driven into destruction, as a stone is violently flung from a sling.—Scott.

ABIGAIL'S MARRIAGE.—David was so charmed with the beauty of her person, and the uncommon prudence of her conduct and address, that, as soon as was proper, after he heard she was a widow, he informed her of his attachment to her, ver. 39, not doubting, but that she who approved herself so good a wife to so bad a husband as Nabal was, would much more make him a good wife; and, having taken notice of her respect to him, and her confidence of his coming to the throne, 1. He solicited by proxy, his affairs, perhaps, not permitting him to come himself. 2. She received the address with great modesty and humility, ver. 41, reckoning herself unworthy of the honour, yet having such a respect for him, that she would gladly be one of the poorest servants in his family, to wash the feet of the other servants. None so fit to be preferred as those that can thus humble themselves. 3. She agreed to the proposal, went with his messengers, took a retinue with her agreeable to her quality, and "she became his wife," ver. 42. She did not upbraid him with his present distresses, and ask him how he could maintain her, but valued him, (1.) Because she knew he was a very good man. (2.) Because she believed he would, in due time, be a very great man: she married him in faith, not questioning but that, though now he had not a house of his own that he durst bring her to, yet God's promise to him would at length be fulfilled. Thus they who join themselves to Christ must be willing now to suffer with him, believing that hereafter they shall reign with him.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Ver. 1—17. The most honoured servants of God have the measure and period of their usefulness appointed them; but they who persevere unto the end, walking with God, and living consistently with their profession, are happy, though rejected by men, and driven into a retired situation. Their unblemished characters, their good examples, and their testimony to the truth, will produce salutary effects; and their unceasing prayers will be answered in behalf of numbers, after they are removed by death. Indeed whole nations have cause to lament, when faithful instructors, holy men of God, and public intercessors, are taken away. But Jesus, our Prophet, Priest, Intercessor, and Judge, ever liveth to take care of those who trust in him.—Riches make men look great in their own eyes, and in the eyes of other worldly people: but they are often lavished on those who have neither wisdom nor grace; and who so pervert them, as to ruin themselves, and to render numbers wicked or wretched. To be descended from honourable ancestors forms another branch of man's foolish vanity, ver. 3; yet it frequently is a most severe reproach to the character and conduct of those who value themselves upon it.—Women of virtue, good sense, and amiable qualifications, are often married, for the sake of wealth, to such unsuitable persons as render their whole lives wretched, and exposed to manifold temptations, as well as distresses. It is therefore incumbent on parents, in respect of their children, and on young persons in their own case, to resist all temptations to a conduct, which is likely to be so fatal in its consequences.—Scott.

CHAP. XXVI. DAVID'S INTREPIDITY.—David adventured into Saul's camp in the night, accompanied only by his kinsman Abishai, the son of Zeruiah. He proposed it to him and to another of his confidents, ver. 6, but the other declined it, either as too dangerous an enterprise, or, at least, was content that Abishai, who was forward to it, should run the risk of it rather than himself. Whether David was prompted to do this by his own courage, or by an extraordinary impression upon his spirits, or by the oracle, does not appear; but, like Gideon, he ventured through the guards, with a special assurance of the divine protection. "Saul lay sleeping in the trench," or as some read it, "in his chariot, and in the midst of his carriages," with "his spear stuck in the ground" by him, to be ready if his quarters should be beaten up, ver. 7, and all the soldiers, even those that were appointed to stand sentinel, were "fast asleep," ver. 12. Thus were their eyes closed and their hands bound, "for a deep sleep from the Lord was fallen upon them:" something extraordinary there was in it, that they should all be asleep together, and so fast asleep, that David and Abishai walked and talked among them, and yet none of them stirred. Sleep, when God gives it his beloved, is their rest and refreshment; but he can, when he pleases, make it to his enemies their imprisonment. Thus are the "stout-hearted spoiled; they have slept their sleep, and none of the men of might have found their hands, at thy rebuke, O God of Jacob," Ps. lxxvi. 5, 6. "It was a deep sleep from the Lord," who has the command of the powers of nature, and makes them to serve his purposes as he pleases. Whom God will disable or destroy, he binds up with "a spirit of slumber," Rom. xi. 8. How helpless do Saul and all his forces lie! All, in effect, disarmed and chained, and yet nothing is done to them; they are only rocked

Abner the son of Ner, saying, Answerest thou not, Abner? Then Abner answered and said, Who art thou that criest to the king?[4]

15 And David said to Abner, Art not thou a valiant man?[5] and who is like to thee in Israel? wherefore then hast thou not kept thy lord the king? for [y]there came one of the people in to destroy the king thy lord.

16 This thing is not good that thou hast done. As the LORD liveth, ye are [z]worthy to die, because ye have not kept your master, the [a]LORD'S anointed. And now see where the king's spear is, and the cruse of water that was at his bolster.

17 And Saul knew David's voice, and said, [b]Is this thy voice, my son David? And David said, It is my voice, my lord, O king.

18 And he said, [b]Wherefore doth my lord thus pursue after his servant? for [c]what have I done? or what evil is in mine hand?

19 Now therefore, I pray thee, [d]let my lord the king hear the words of his servant. If the LORD have [e]stirred thee up against me, let him [f]accept an offering: but if they be the children of men, [g]cursed be they before the LORD; for [g]they have driven me out this day from [h]abiding in [h]the inheritance of the LORD, saying, Go, serve other gods.[6]

20 Now therefore, [i]let not my blood fall to the earth before the face of the LORD: for [k]the king of Israel is come out to seek a flea,[7] as when one doth hunt[8] a partridge in the mountains.

21 ¶ Then said Saul, [l]I have sinned: return, my son David: for [m]I will no more do thee harm, because [n]my soul was precious in thine eyes this day: behold, I have played the fool, and have erred exceedingly.

22 And David answered and said, Behold the king's spear! and let one of the young men come over and fetch it.

23 The LORD [o]render to every man his righteousness and his faithfulness: for the LORD delivered thee into my hand to-day, but [p]I would not stretch forth mine hand against the LORD'S anointed.

24 And, behold, [q]as thy life was much set by this day in mine eyes, so let my life be much set by in the eyes of the LORD, and [r]let him deliver me out of all tribulation.

25 Then Saul said to David, [s]Blessed be thou, my son David: thou shalt both do great things, and also shalt still [t]prevail. [u]So David went on his way, and Saul returned to his place.

[b] Judg. iii. 1-4.

[b]there is nothing better for me than that I should speedily escape [c]into the land of the Philistines; and Saul shall despair of me, to seek me any more in any coast of Israel: so shall I escape out of his hand.

2 And David arose, and he passed over with [d]the six hundred men that were with him unto [e]Achish, the son of Maoch, king of Gath.

3 And David dwelt with Achish at Gath, he and his men, every man with his household, even David [f]with his two wives, Ahinoam the Jezreelitess, and Abigail the Carmelitess, Nabal's wife.

4 And it was told Saul that David was fled to Gath: and [g]he sought no more again for him.

5 ¶ And David said unto Achish, If I have now found grace in thine eyes, let them give me a place in [h]some town in the country, that I may dwell there: for why should thy servant dwell in the royal city with thee?

6 Then Achish gave him [i]Ziklag that day:[1] wherefore Ziklag pertaineth unto the kings of Judah unto this day.

7 And [t]the time that David dwelt in the country of the Philistines was [u]a full year and four months.

8 ¶ And David and his men went up, and invaded [k]the Geshurites, and [l]the [s]Gezerites, and [m]the Amalekites: for those nations were of old the inhabitants of the land, [n]as thou goest to Shur, even unto the land of Egypt.

9 And David smote the land, and [o]left neither man nor woman alive, and took away the sheep, and the oxen, and the asses, and the camels, and the apparel, and returned, and came to Achish.

10 And Achish said, [v]Whither have ye made a road to-day? [p]And David said,[2] Against the south of Judah, and against the south of [q]the Jerahmeelites, and against the south of the [r]Kenites.

11 And David saved neither man nor woman alive, to bring tidings to Gath, saying, [s]Lest they should tell on us, saying, So did David,[3] and so will be his manner all the while he dwelleth in the country of the Philistines.

12 And Achish believed David, saying, He hath made *his people Israel utterly to abhor him; therefore he shall be my servant for ever.

Saul, having destroyed the witches, 1, afterward seeketh to one, 7; who, being encouraged by him, raiseth up Samuel, 9. Saul's ruin foreshewed, 15.

AND it came to pass in those days, [a]that the [b]Philistines gathered their armies to-asleep. How easily can God weaken the strongest, befool the wisest, and baffle the most watchful! Let all his friends therefore trust him, and all his enemies fear him.

DAVID'S GENEROSITY OF NATURE.—Ver. 9. David charged Abishai not to destroy Saul; would not only not do it himself, but not permit another to do it. And he gave two reasons for it. 1. It would be a sinful affront to God's ordinance. Saul was the Lord's anointed king of Israel, by the special appointment and nomination of the God of Israel; the power that was; and to resist him was to "resist the ordinance of God," Rom. xiii. 2. No man could do it and be guiltless; the thing he feared was guilt, and his concern respected his innocence more than his safety. 2. It would be a sinful anticipation of God's providence; God had sufficiently showed him, in Nabal's case, that, if he left it to him to do him right, he would do it in due time. Encouraged therefore by his experience, in that instance, he resolves to wait till God shall think fit to avenge him on Saul, and he will by no means "avenge himself," ver. 10; "The Lord shall smite him," as he did Nabal, with some sudden stroke, or he shall "die in battle," (as it proved he did soon after,) or, however, "his day shall come to die" a natural death, and David will contentedly wait till then, rather than force his way to the promised crown by any indirect methods. The temptation indeed was very strong; but if he yield, he sins against God, and therefore he resists the temptation with the utmost resolution, ver. 11. "'The Lord forbid that I should stretch forth mine hand against the Lord's anointed;' no, I will never do it, nor suffer it to be done." Thus bravely does he prefer his conscience to his interest, and trust God with the issue.—Henry.

DAVID'S PLEA FOR HIMSELF.—Ver. 13—16. David, by retiring to a place of safety, before he called to Abner, seems to have manifested more entire distrust of Saul, than he did on a former occasion. Yet he desired that Saul and all Israel should be informed of his conduct at this time. Abner and his soldiers, by neglecting to guard Saul when he slept, had exposed his life, and merited to be treated as his enemies, though he confided in them as friends: for though their "sound sleep" was supernatural, ver. 12, yet there might be a neglect of placing sentinels, arising from contempt of David's small company. Saul also deemed David his enemy; and yet David had spared and protected his life in the most friendly manner! Ver. 17—19. David had not offended Saul, but he was a sinner against the Lord: and if convinced that his sufferings were a divine rebuke for any particular offence, he would offer a sacrifice, that his sin being pardoned, his trials might cease: or, if Saul was instigated to this persecution by the evil spirit, whom God judicially permitted to trouble him, he advised him to seek forgiveness and deliverance in the appointed way. But if wicked men influenced him to it, they might expect severe vengeance, for thus banishing David from the worship of JEHOVAH, and tempting him to turn idolater. The clause might be rendered, "they are accursed." David carefully avoided mentioning Saul's envy and malice, which were the real causes of his conduct; for he did not mean to irritate, but to mollify him. Ver. 20. Though David was so very inconsiderable a person, according to his modest representation of himself, yet he intimated that if his blood were shed, the Lord would certainly require it. The word rendered a partridge, is supposed to mean a kind of bird which was very difficult to be caught, and of very little value.—Scott.

CHAP. XXVII. DAVID WITH ACHISH.—Ver. 1, 2.—David, while reflecting on the inveterate malice of Saul, and the neglect or treachery of his countrymen, lost sight of his having been anointed to be king of Israel, with the annexed promises of God, and the manifold deliverances which he had experienced: so that, being weak in faith, he despaired of safety in the land of Judah; and he went to Gath, perhaps invited by Achish, but probably without inquiring of the Lord. This measure was calculated to alienate the affections of the Israelites, and to give credit to the slanders of his accusers; he thus ran himself and his men into temptations to idolatry, and he laid himself under obligations to those whom he could never favour without betraying the cause of God. Ver. 3. Achish probably hoped that he should be able to fix David in his interests, and employ him against the Israelites; or, that he should thus secure an advantageous alliance with him, if ever he came to be king of Israel. Ver. 4. It does not appear that Saul's malice was abated; but the object of it was out of his reach. Ver. 5, 6. David wanted to avoid ostentation, and to escape the effects of envy; and perhaps to be out of the way of temptation, more at leisure for the exercises of religion, and more unembarrassed in his whole conduct, than he could be near the court, and among the nobles of Achish. After the division of the land, the Philistines had seized Ziklag; but in this manner it came again into the possession of the Israelites. Ver. 8—12. Probably, the Jeshurites and Gezrites were tribes of the Amalekites, or of Canaanites who were in alliance with them. We may therefore commend David for attempting to complete the work which Saul had begun; and should not censure the severity with which he conducted the war.—These nations lived to the south of Judah; and David used such equivocal terms in speaking to Achish, as induced him to conclude that he had been fighting against his own countrymen. Intelligence was not then readily conveyed, and so no one undeceived Achish; and he believed, that David had so widened the breach between himself and his people, that it could not be healed.—Scott.

CHAP. XXVIII. SAUL IN DISTRESS.—Saul had provoked God to forsake him, his gether for warfare, to fight with Israel. And Achish said unto David, Know thou assuredly, that [c]thou shalt go out with me to battle, thou and thy men.

2 And David said to Achish, [d]Surely thou shalt know what thy servant can do. And Achish said to David, Therefore will I make thee keeper of mine head for ever.

3 ¶ Now [e]Samuel was dead, and all Israel had lamented him, and buried him in Ramah, even in his own city. And Saul had [f]put away those that had familiar spirits,[1] and the wizards, out of the land.

4 ¶ And the Philistines gathered themselves together, and came and pitched in [g]Shunem:[2] and Saul gathered all Israel together, and they pitched in [h]Gilboa.[3]

5 And when Saul saw the host of the Philistines, [i]he was afraid, and his heart greatly trembled.

6 And when Saul [k]enquired of the LORD, the LORD answered him not, neither [l]by dreams, nor [m]by Urim, nor [n]by prophets.

7 ¶ Then said Saul unto his servants, [o]Seek me a woman that hath [p]a familiar spirit, that I may go to her, and enquire of her. And his servants said to him, Behold, there is a woman that hath a familiar spirit at [q]En-dor.[4]

8 And Saul [r]disguised himself, and put on other raiment, and he went, and two men with him, and they came to the woman by night: and he said, [s]I pray thee, divine unto me by the familiar spirit, and [t]bring me him up whom I shall name unto thee.

9 And the woman said unto him, Behold, thou knowest what Saul hath done, [u]how he hath cut off those that have familiar spirits, and the wizards, out of the land: [v]wherefore then layest thou a snare for my life, to cause me to die?

10 And Saul [x]sware to her by the LORD, saying, As the LORD liveth, there shall no punishment happen to thee for this thing.

11 Then said the woman, Whom shall I bring up unto thee? And he said, Bring me up Samuel.

12 And when the woman saw Samuel, she cried with a loud voice: and the woman spake to Saul, saying, Why hast thou deceived me? for [y]thou art Saul.

13 And the king said unto her, Be not afraid: for what sawest thou? And the woman said unto Saul, I saw [z]gods ascending out of the earth.

14 And he said unto her, [*]What form is he of? And she said, An old man cometh up: and he is covered with [a]a mantle. And Saul perceived that it was Samuel,[5] and he stooped with his face to the ground, and bowed himself.

15 ¶ And Samuel said to Saul, [b]Why hast thou disquieted me, to bring me up? And Saul answered, [c]I am sore distressed; for [d]the Philistines make war against me, and [e]God is departed from me, and [f]answereth me no more, neither by [†]prophets, nor by dreams: [g]therefore I have called thee, that thou mayest make known unto me what I shall do.

16 Then said Samuel, [h]Wherefore then dost thou ask of me, seeing the LORD is departed from thee, and is become thine enemy?

17 And the LORD hath done [‡]to him, [i]as he spake by [§]me: for the LORD hath rent the kingdom out of thine hand, and given it to [k]thy neighbour, even to David:

18 Because thou [l]obeyedst not the voice of the LORD, nor executedst his fierce wrath upon Amalek, therefore hath the LORD done this thing unto thee this day.

19 Moreover [m]the LORD will also deliver Israel with thee into the hand of the Philistines: and [n]to-morrow shalt thou and thy sons be with me: the LORD also shall deliver the host of Israel into the hand of the Philistines.

20 Then Saul [i]fell straightway all along on the earth,[6] and was [o]sore afraid, because of the words of Samuel: and there was no strength in him; for he had eaten no bread all the day, nor all the night.

21 ¶ And the woman came unto Saul, and saw that he was sore troubled, and said unto him, Behold, thine handmaid hath obeyed thy voice, and [p]I have put my life in my hand, and have hearkened unto thy words which thou spakest unto me.

22 Now therefore, I pray thee, hearken thou also unto the voice of thine handmaid, and let me set a morsel of bread before thee; and eat, that thou mayest have strength, when thou goest on thy way.

23 But he refused, and said, [q]I will not eat. But his servants, together with the woman, [r]compelled him; and he hearkened unto their voice. So he arose from the earth, and sat upon the bed.

24 And the woman had [s]a fat calf in the house; and she hasted, and killed it, and took flour, and kneaded it, and did bake unleavened bread thereof:

25 And she brought it before Saul, and before his servants; and they did eat. Then they rose up, and went away that night.

[5] The most probable, and best supported opinion is, that God suffered Samuel's departed spirit, or a miraculous representation of his person, to appear to Saul, and, as a punishment for his presumptuous impiety, to disclose his impending fate. The text positively calls him Samuel (Samuel "himself," in the original), and what he prophesied proved true; for "on the morrow," that is, soon after, Saul and his sons were slain, and the host of Israel defeated. The woman was herself terrified at a real appearance, when probably she designed a deception, and was preparing her incantations.—GRAY.

interest failed, his armies dwindled and looked mean, and, which was worse, his spirits failed him, his heart sunk within him. A guilty conscience made him tremble at the shaking of a leaf: now he remembered the guilty blood of the Amalekites, which he had spared, and the innocent blood of the priests which he had spilt; his sins are set in order before his eyes, they put him into confusion, embarrass all his counsels, and rob him of his courage; so that there remained only a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation. Note, Troubles are terrors to the children of disobedience. In this distress, "Saul inquired of the Lord," ver. 6. Need drives those to God, who, in the day of their prosperity, slighted his oracles and altars. "Lord, in trouble have they visited thee," Isa. xxvi. 16. Did ever any seek the Lord, and not find him? Yes, Saul did; "the Lord answered him not," took no notice either of his petitions or of his inquiries; gave him no directions what to do, nor any encouragement to hope that he would be with him. "Should he be inquired of at all" by such a one as Saul? Ezek. xiv. 3. No, he could not expect an answer of peace, for, 1. He inquired in such a manner, that it was as if he had "not inquired at all." Therefore it is said, 1 Chron. x. 14, "He inquired not of the Lord;" for he did it faintly, and coldly, and with a secret design, if God did not answer him, to consult the Devil. He did not inquire in faith, but with a double, unstable mind. 2. He inquired of the Lord when it was too late, when the days of his probation were over, and he was finally rejected. "Seek the Lord while he may be found," for there is a time when he will not be found. 3. He had forfeited the benefit of all the methods of inquiry. Could he that hated and persecuted Samuel and David who were both prophets, expect to be answered by prophets? Or he that hath slain the high priest, to be answered by Urim? Or he that had sinned away the Spirit of grace to be answered by dreams? No, "Be not deceived, God is not mocked."—Henry.

THE WITCH OF ENDOR.—Ver. 12—19. It is much disputed, who it was that appeared on this occasion: and the whole narrative manifests that it was no human imposture. Many expositors, ancient and modern, have maintained that it was Satan personating Samuel; though the text gives not the least intimation of it. Now it is by no means advisable to give those men any countenance, who, to support a favourite system, put a forced construction on the words of holy writ, very different to their obvious meaning: and scarcely any of their interpretations can sound harsher, than the insertion in every place, where Samuel is mentioned, "that it was Satan personating Samuel." It is indeed argued, that the woman's incantations could have "no power over a glorified saint:" but to this it may fairly be answered, that neither could an evil spirit appear at her call without the Lord's permission. Though the woman was not the cause of Samuel's being sent, Saul's inquiry might be the occasion of it. The word disquieted, seems to be used merely in accommodation to the general notions of mankind on that subject: and the woman's surprise and terror proved, that it was an unusual and unexpected appearance, and not the ordinary effect of her art. It is, however further urged, that the apparition's discourse tended to drive Saul to despair, which is one of Satan's temptations; and that it contained no exhortations to repentance, which were usual with the prophets. But to this it may be replied, that Elijah's message to Ahaziah, Daniel's address to Belshazzar, and even Christ's discourse in the presence of Judas, were equally calculated to drive each of them to despair; and equally void of exhortations to repent, or proposals of mercy. Saul had despised Samuel's solemn warnings in his lifetime; yet now he hoped, as it were, in defiance of God, to obtain some counsel and encouragement from him: and why might not God permit the soul of his departed prophet to appear and confirm his former sentence, and denounce Saul's irrevocable doom? It was not beyond the power of God, nor, that I can see, any way unworthy of him; but rather a declaration of his immutable and irreversible truth and justice. Satan could not have predicted the several events, (which came to pass accordingly, as far as we know,) without being inspired by God to do so; and it would give far more countenance to consulting witches, to suppose that he inspired to prophesy by them, than that Samuel was sent with this tremendous message from God when Saul consulted one of them. Indeed this would most powerfully discourage such attempts; as the request of the rich man in hell to Abraham, being entirely vain, is calculated to discourage praying to departed saints. The local situation of departed spirits is so concealed from us, that the circumstance of the spirit apparently "arising out of the earth," forms no real objection against its being the soul of Samuel: and the expression, "shalt thou and thy sons be with me," means no more, than that they should be in the eternal world. The transaction was suited to impress the idea of a future state, and it determined nothing about the different conditions of the righteous and the wicked. Upon the whole there appears much solemnity in God for once permitting the soul of a departed prophet to make his appearance, as a witness from heaven; and in sending him to confirm the word which he spake on earth, (evincing, that the words of the prophets would surely take effect;) and to sit in judgment upon a proud enemy of God, who foolishly sought encouragement in his impenitency, by the most atrocious crimes. This interpretation is certainly more obvious, and suited to the apprehensions of the unlearned reader, and according to the general simplicity of the Scriptures; and nothing short of unanswerable arguments and objections, should constrain us to suppose, that when the Holy Spirit said Samuel, he meant Satan, not speaking by Samuel, as he did by the serpent and by the demoniacs; but actually counterfeiting his shape, and speaking with his voice though Samuel him-

NOW [a]the Philistines gathered together all their armies to [b]Aphek:[1] and the Israelites pitched by a fountain which is in [c]Jezreel.

2 And [d]the lords of the Philistines passed on by hundreds, and by thousands: but [e]David and his men passed on in the rereward with Achish.

3 Then said the princes of the Philistines, What do these Hebrews here? And Achish said unto the princes of the Philistines, Is not this David, the servant of Saul the king of Israel, which hath been with me [f]these days, or these years,[2] and I have [g]found no fault in him since he fell unto me unto this day?

4 And the princes of the Philistines were wroth with him; and the princes of the Philistines said unto him, [h]Make this fellow return,[3] that he may go again to his place which thou hast appointed him, and let him not go down with us to battle, lest in the battle he be an adversary to us: for wherewith should he reconcile himself unto his master? should it not be with the heads of these men?

5 Is [i]not this David, of whom they sang one to another in dances, saying, Saul slew his thousands, and David his ten thousands?

6 ¶ Then Achish called David, and said unto him, Surely, as [j]the LORD liveth, [k]thou hast been upright, and [l]thy going out and thy coming in with me in the host is good in my sight: for I have not found evil in thee since the day of thy coming unto me unto this day: nevertheless *the lords favour thee not.

7 Wherefore now return, and go in peace, that thou †displease not the lords of the Philistines.

8 And David said unto Achish, [m]But what have I done? and what hast thou found in thy servant so long as I have been ‡with thee unto this day, [n]that I may not go fight against the enemies of my lord the king?

9 And Achish answered and said to David, I know that thou art good in my sight, [o]as an angel of God:[4] notwithstanding the princes of the Philistines have said, He shall not go up with us to the battle.

10 Wherefore [p]now rise up early in the morning with thy master's servants that are come with thee: and as soon as ye be up early in the morning, and have light, depart.

11 So David and his men rose up early[5] to depart in the morning, to return into the land of the Philistines. [q]And the Philistines went up to Jezreel.

The Amalekites spoil Ziklag, 1; David, encouraged by God, pursueth them, 7; and, overtaking them, recovereth all the spoil, 11.

AND it came to pass, when David and his men [a]were come to Ziklag on the third day, that [b]the Amalekites had invaded the south, and Ziklag, and smitten Ziklag, and burned it with fire;

2 And had taken the women captives, that were therein: they [c]slew not any, either great or small, but carried them away, and went on their way.

3 ¶ So David and his men came to the city, and, behold, it was [d]burned with fire; and their wives, and their sons, and their daughters, were taken captives.

4 Then David and the people that were with him [e]lifted up their voice and wept, until they had no more power to weep.

5 And David's [f]two wives were taken captives, Ahinoam the Jezreelitess, and Abigail the wife of Nabal the Carmelite.

6 And David [g]was greatly distressed; for [h]the people spake of stoning him, because the soul of all the people was *grieved, every man for his sons and for his daughters: but [i]David encouraged himself in the LORD his God.

7 And David said to [k]Abiathar the priest, Ahimelech's son, I pray thee, bring me hither the ephod.[1] And Abiathar brought thither the ephod to David.

8 And David [l]enquired at the LORD,[2] saying, Shall I pursue after this troop? shall I overtake them? And [m]he answered him, Pursue: for thou shalt surely overtake them, and without fail recover all.

9 ¶ So David went, he and the six hundred men that were with him, and came to the brook Besor,[3] where those that were left behind stayed.

10 But David pursued, he and four hundred men: for two hundred abode behind, which were [n]so faint that they could not go over the brook Besor.

11 And they found an Egyptian in the field, and brought him to David, and [o]gave him bread, and he did eat; and they made him drink water;

12 And they gave him a piece of a cake of figs,[4] and two clusters of raisins: and when he had eaten, [p]his spirit came again to him: for he had eaten no bread, nor drunk any water, [q]three days and three nights.

13 And David said unto him, To whom belongest thou? and whence art thou? And he said, I am a young man of Egypt, servant to an Amalekite; and [r]my master left me, because three days agone I fell sick.

self was in every sense absent from the place. The venerable appearance of Samuel, or somewhat that he spoke, convinced the woman that it was Saul who consulted her. Saul's bowing down before Samuel, was not an act of religious worship, any more than Abigail's bowing down before David. The answer of Samuel was very suitable to his character, and to the occasion. It was entirely in vain for Saul to consult the servant, when the Lord was become his enemy: the Lord was only doing to him, or for himself, as he declared he would: and as Samuel knew him to be finally given up, he neither gave him counsel nor comfort. The woman first saw the appearance: but afterwards Saul seems to have seen it, as well as to have heard the words spoken. Some think that neither Saul's servants nor the woman heard what passed.—Scott.

CHAP. XXIX. DAVID'S DISMISSAL FROM ACHISH.—Kings cannot always do as they would, nor have such as they would about them. 1. The discharge Achish gives David is very honourable, and not a final discharge, but only from the present service. (1.) He signifies the great pleasure and satisfaction he had taken in him, and in his conversation. Thou art "good in my sight, as an angel of God," ver. 9. Wise and good men will gain respect, wherever they go, from all that know how to make a right estimate of persons and things, though of different professions in religion. What Achish says of David, God, by the prophet, says "of the house of David," Zech. xii. 8, that it shall be "as the angel of the Lord." But the former is a court compliment; the latter is a divine promise. (2.) He gives him a testimonial of his good behaviour, ver. 6. It is very full, and in obliging terms; "'Thou hast been upright,' and thy whole conduct has been 'good in my sight,' and 'I have not found evil in thee.'" Saul would not have given him such a testimonial, though he had done far more service to him than to Achish. God's people should behave themselves always so unoffensively, as, if possible, to get the good word of all they have dealings with: and it is a debt we owe to those who have acquitted themselves well, to give them the praise of it. (3.) He lays all the blame of his dismission upon the princes, who would by no means suffer him to continue in the camp. "The king loves thee entirely, and would venture his life in thy hand: 'but the lords favour thee not,' and we must not disoblige them, nor can we oppose them, therefore 'return, and go in peace.'" He had better part with his favourite, than occasion a disgust among his generals, and a mutiny in his army. He intimates a reason why they were uneasy; it was not so much for his own sake, as for the sake of his soldiers that attended him, whom he calls "his master's servants," namely, Saul's, ver. 10; they could trust him, but not them. (4.) He orders him to be gone early, as soon as it was light, ver. 10, to prevent their further resentments, and the jealousies they would have been apt to conceive if he had lingered. 2. His reception of this discourse is very complimental; but, I fear, not without some degree of dissimulation. "What!" says David, "must I leave 'my lord the king,' whom I am bound by office to protect, just now when he is going to expose himself in the field? Why may not I go 'fight against the enemies of my lord the king?'" ver. 8. He seemed anxious to serve him, when he was at this juncture really anxious to leave him; but he was not willing that Achish should know that he was. No one knows how strong the temptation is to compliment and dissemble, which they are in that attend great men, and how hard it is to avoid it.—Henry.

CHAP. XXX. INVASION OF ZIKLAG.—Ver. 1—3. Ziklag was distant from the camp of the Philistines about three days' march: and David did not receive an authentic account of the battle at Gilboa till two days after his return thither. But it does not thence follow, that the battle was not fought on the morrow after Saul consulted the witch of Endor, as some have thought, chap. xxviii. 19; for the narrative of Saul's conduct is perfectly distinct from that which relates to David and the Philistines: and it is not said at what time Saul went to Endor.—The Lord had extricated David reputably from his ensnaring connexion with Achish; but he severely rebuked him for his misconduct, by the calamity that came upon Ziklag in his absence.—He might reasonably have expected that the Amalekites would watch their opportunity of retaliating; and his fear of offending Achish made him very improvident, in leaving the city and the women and children in it, without any adequate guard.—But the Amalekites were wonderfully restrained from slaying any of them, after the example set them: preferring the profit of enslaving them to the pleasure of revenge: for God intended to rebuke his servant, but not to permit his family and friends to be destroyed.

DAVID'S PIETY AND PROWESS.—Ver. 6. The loss of his wives, the desolations of the city, and the bitterness of his followers, who, not entirely without reason, were enraged against him for thus exposing their families, all combined to enhance David's distress: at the same time he could not but consider his calamities as resulting from unbelief, in leaving the land of Judah, in being so much afraid of Achish, and in neglecting to consult the Lord. Yet in the midst of all these complicated troubles, his spirit was soon calmed and encouraged: he neither murmured against God, nor resented the rage of his soldiers, nor despaired of redress, nor confided in his own valour or conduct; "but he encouraged himself in the LORD his God." He meditated upon his perfections, upon his promises in general to all believers, and in particular to him; and his own experience of the faithfulness of God, as well as his wonderful works of old in behalf of his worship-

14 We made an invasion upon the south of [a]the Cherethites, and upon the coast which belongeth to Judah, and upon the south of [b]Caleb;[5] and we burned Ziklag with fire.

15 And David said unto him, [c]Canst thou bring me down to this company? And he said, [x]Swear unto me by God, that thou wilt neither kill me, [y]nor deliver me into the hands of my master, and I will bring thee down to this company.

16 ¶ And [z]when he had brought him down, behold, they were spread abroad upon all the earth, [a]eating and drinking, and dancing, [b]because of all the great spoil that they had taken out of the land of the Philistines, and out of the land of Judah.

17 And David smote them from the twilight[6] even unto the evening of [†]the next day: [c]and there escaped not a man of them, save four hundred young men, which rode upon camels,[7] and fled.

18 And David recovered all that the Amalekites had carried away: and David rescued his two wives.

19 And [d]there was nothing lacking to them, neither small nor great, neither sons nor daughters, neither spoil, nor any thing that they had taken to them: David recovered all.

20 And David took all the flocks and the herds, which they drave before those other cattle, and said, [e]This is David's spoil.

22 ¶ Then answered all the [h]wicked men and men of Belial, of [§]those that went with David, and said, [i]Because they went not with us, we will not give them ought of the spoil that we have recovered, save to every man his wife and his children, that they may lead them away, and depart.

23 Then said David, Ye shall not do so, [k]my brethren,[8] with that [l]which the LORD hath given us, [m]who hath preserved us, and delivered the company that came against us into our hand.

24 For who will hearken unto you in this matter? [n]but as his part is that goeth down to the battle, so shall his part be that [o]tarrieth by the stuff:[9] they shall part [p]alike.

Saul, having lost his army and his sons, killeth himself, 1; the Philistines triumph over their dead bodies, 8; the men of Jabesh-gilead recover the bodies by night, 11.

NOW [a]the Philistines fought against Israel: and the men of Israel fled from before the Philistines, and [b]fell down [*]slain in mount [c]Gilboa.

2 And the Philistines [d]followed hard upon Saul and upon his sons; and the Philistines slew [e]Jonathan, and Abinadab, and Malchi-shua, [f]Saul's sons.

3 And the battle [g]went sore against Saul, and the [†]archers hit him;[1] and he was sore wounded of the archers.

pers: and upon the relations in which he stood to those who had been enabled to choose him as their salvation and portion. Thus he was encouraged to expect forgiveness, protection, help, and a favourable event, notwithstanding external appearances. Ver. 7—10. Circumstanced as David was, no time was to be lost; and as his troubles originated from neglecting to inquire of the Lord, he immediately consulted him by the high priest. His answer quieted the minds of his followers; so that after their long march they were willing to go in pursuit of the ravagers, without taking rest or regular refreshment. But the fatigue of the former march continued in this new expedition, and the anguish of their spirits, rendered a part of the company so faint, that they could proceed no farther. David, however, though his small troop was thus reduced, and he might fear that the others would be unable to proceed, still "encouraged himself in the LORD his God."—Scott.

HIS VICTORY.—The spoil was recovered and brought off, and nothing was lost, but a great deal gotten. 1. They retrieved all their own, ver. 18, 19; "David rescued his two wives;" that is mentioned particularly, because that pleased David more than all the rest of his achievements. Providence had so ordered it, that the Amalekites carefully preserved all that they had taken, concluding that they kept it for themselves, though really they preserved it for the right owners; so that there was nothing lacking to them; so it proved, when they concluded all was gone; so much better is God oftentimes to us than our own fears. Our Lord Jesus was indeed the Son of David, and the Son of Abraham, in this resembling them both, that he "took the prey from the mighty, and led captivity captive:" Abraham, Gen. xiv. 16, and David here. But this was not all. 2. They took all that belonged to the Amalekites besides, ver. 20, "flocks and herds;" either such as were taken from the Philistines, and others which David had the disposal of by the law of war; or perhaps he made a sally into the enemy's country, and fetched off these flocks and herds from thence, as interest for his own. This drove was put in the van of the triumph, with this proclamation, "'This is David's spoil.' This we may thank him for." Those who lately spake of stoning him, now caressed him, and cried him up, because they got by him more than they had then lost. Thus are the world and its sentiments governed by interest.

HIS LIBERALITY.—David was generous and kind to all his friends. When he had given every one his own with interest, there was a considerable overplus which David, in general, had the disposal of: probably the spoil of the tents of the Amalekites consisted much in plate and jewels, Judg. viii. 24, 26; and those because he thought they [illegible] his own soldiers proud and effeminate, he thought fit to make presents [illegible] with the "blessing of Israel," ver. 26. In David's sending [illegible] observe, 1. His generosity. He aimed not to enrich himself, but to serve his country; and therefore God afterwards enriched him, and set him to rule the country he had served. It becomes gracious souls to be generous; "there is that scatters, and yet increases." 2. His gratitude. He sent presents to "all the places where he and his men were wont to haunt," ver. 31, that is, to all that he had received kindness from, that had sheltered him, and sent him intelligence or provisions. Note, Honesty, as well as honour, obliges us to requite the favours that have been done us, or, at least, make a real acknowledgment of them as far as is in the power of our hand. 3. His piety; that he calls it "a blessing;" for no present we give to our friends will be a comfort to them, but as it is made so by the blessing of God: it intimates that his prayers for them accompanied his present; also that he sent them out of "the spoil of the enemies of the Lord," (so he calls them, not his enemies,) that they might rejoice in the victory for the Lord's sake, and might join with him in thanksgivings for it. 4. His policy: that he sent these presents among his countrymen, to oblige them to be ready to appear for him, upon his accession to the throne, which he now saw at hand. "A man's gift maketh room for him." He was fit to be a king who thus showed the bounty and liberality of a king. Munificence recommends a man more than magnificence.—Henry.

CHAP. XXXI. SAUL'S LAST BATTLE AND DEATH.—Saul was sorely wounded by the Philistines, and then slain by his own hand. The archers hit him, ver. 3, so that he could neither fight nor fly, and therefore must inevitably fall into their hands. Thus, to make him the more miserable, destruction comes gradually upon him, and he dies so as to feel himself die. To that extremity was he now reduced, that, 1. He was desirous to die by the hand of his own servant, rather than by the hand of the Philistines, lest they should abuse him as they did Samson. Miserable man! He finds himself dying, and all his care is, to keep his body out of the hands of the Philistines, but no care to resign his soul into the hands of God who gave it, Eccl. xii. 7. As he lived, so he died, proud and jealous, and a terror to himself and all about him. They who rightly understand themselves, think it of small account, in comparison, how it is with them in death, so it may but be well with them after death. Those are in a deplorable condition indeed, who, being "bitter in soul, long for death, but it cometh not," Job iii. 20, 21; especially those who, despairing of the mercy of God, like Judas, [illegible] to escape a hell within them. 2. When he could not escape [illegible] he became his own executioner, thinking thereby to avoid [illegible] with it entailing upon his own name a [illegible]

CHAP. I.

An Amalekite bringeth tidings of the overthrow, and accusing himself of Saul's death, is slain, 1. David's lamentation over Saul and Jonathan, 17.

NOW it came to pass after the death of Saul, [a] when David was returned from the slaughter of the Amalekites, and David had abode two days in [b] Ziklag;

2 It came even to pass on [c] the third day, that, behold, [d] a man came out of the camp from Saul with [e] his clothes rent, and [f] earth upon his head: and so it was, when he came to David, that [g] he fell to the earth, and did obeisance.

3 And David said unto him, [h] From whence comest thou? And he said unto him, Out of the camp of Israel [i] am I escaped.

4 And David said unto him, [*] How went the matter? I pray thee, tell me. And he answered, That [k] the people are fled from the battle, and many of the people also are fallen and dead; and Saul and Jonathan his son are dead also.

5 And David said unto the young man that told him, [l] How knowest thou that Saul and Jonathan his son be dead?

6 And the young man that told him, said, As [m] I happened by chance upon [n] mount Gilboa, behold, [o] Saul leaned upon his spear;[†] and, lo, the chariots and horsemen followed hard after him.

7 And when he looked behind him, he saw me, and called unto me. And I answered, [†] Here am I.

8 And he said unto me, Who art thou? And I answered him, I am [p] an Amalekite.

9 He said unto me again, Stand, I pray thee, upon me, and slay me: for [‡] anguish is come upon me, because my life is yet whole in me.

10 So I stood upon him, and [q] slew him, because I was sure that he could not live after that he was fallen: and I took [r] the crown that was upon his head, and the bracelet that was on his arm, and have brought them hither unto my lord.

11 ¶ Then David took hold on his clothes, and [s] rent them; and [t] likewise all the men that were with him:

12 And they [u] mourned, and wept, and fasted until even, for Saul, and for Jonathan his son, and for the people of the LORD, and for the house of Israel; because they were fallen by the sword.

13 ¶ And David said unto the young man that told him, [x] Whence art thou? And he answered, I am the son of a stranger, an Amalekite.

14 And David said unto him, [y] How wast thou not afraid [z] to stretch forth thine hand to destroy the LORD'S anointed?

15 And David called one of the young men, and said, [a] Go near, and fall upon him. And he smote him that he died.[2]

16 And David said unto him, [b] Thy blood be upon thy head; for [c] thy mouth hath testified against thee, saying, I have slain the LORD'S anointed.

17 ¶ And David [d] lamented with this lamentation[3] over Saul and over Jonathan his son:

18 (Also he bade them [e] teach the children of Judah the use of the bow: behold, it is written in [f] the book of [§] Jasher.)

and bravely yielded to the fate of war, died in the bed of honour; but Saul died as a fool dieth, as a coward dieth, a proud fool, a sneaking coward; he died as a man that had neither the fear of God, nor hope in God; neither the reason of a man, nor the religion of an Israelite, nor the resolution of a soldier. Let us all pray, "Lord, lead us not into temptation," this temptation. His armour-bearer would not run him through, and he did well to refuse it; for no man's servant ought to be a slave to his master's lusts or passions of any kind: the reason given, is that "he was sore afraid," not of death, for he himself ran wilfully upon that immediately; but, having a profound reverence for the king his master, he could not conquer that so far as to do him any hurt; or perhaps he feared lest his trembling hand should have given him but half a blow, and so have put him to the greater misery. His armour-bearer, who refused to kill him, refused not to die with him, but "fell likewise upon his sword," ver. 5. This was an aggravating circumstance of the death of Saul, that, by the example of his wickedness in murdering himself, he drew in his servant to be guilty of the same wickedness, and "perished not alone in his iniquity." The Jews say that Saul's armour-bearer was Doeg, whom he preferred to that dignity for killing the priests, and if so, justly does his "violent dealing return on his own head." David had foretold concerning him, that God would "destroy him for ever," Ps. lii. 5.—Henry.

CHAP. I. DAVID'S ELEGY OVER SAUL AND JONATHAN.—Ver. 19—27. This elegy contains little directly relating to religion; but is highly poetical. It was intended as a tribute of respect to the memory of Saul, and of affection to that of Jonathan; who perhaps was principally meant by "the beauty of Israel," being in every respect an ornament to his religion and people. Saul's valour and military renown are celebrated, and his faults are veiled; but nothing is spoken of his piety or justice. The charge given to every one, not to mention the catastrophe in the cities of the Philistines, lest the enemies of God should rejoice, is very beautiful. The wish that neither rain nor dew might fructify the fields on which the fatal battle was fought; and that no sacrifices might thence be brought to the altar of God, because there the anointed of the LORD had cast away his shield, as if he had been a common soldier, is a strong expression of regret for such an event. The harmony, which generally subsisted betwixt Saul and Jonathan, in warring against the enemies of Israel; the impetuosity and fury with which they had together charged and pursued them; and their falling in the same battle, are touched upon in a very poetical manner. It is probable that Saul had encouraged the manufactures of Israel, and perhaps had increased their wealth: the daughters of Israel, therefore, as most delighted with external ornaments, are called upon to lament over their prince. Every thing is mentioned to his commendation which truth permitted: but Jonathan is named with most passionate affection; as having fallen upon the high places, where he had often successfully displayed his valour; and as having shown a strong and faithful affection, in such trying circumstances, and in so disinterested a manner, as could not be equalled by any instances of conjugal fidelity, or the most constant love which has subsisted betwixt the sexes. Considering therefore how pleasant his friendship had been to David, he could not but be greatly distressed at his premature death.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Ver. 1—16. The deepest distress sometimes immediately precedes the dawning of deliverance: but they who have committed their concerns to the Lord should quietly abide his will, and repress that eagerness and anxiety with which others disquiet themselves, when they expect important changes.—Many secretly wish for the death of those who keep them from honours or estates, without excepting even their nearest relations; and inwardly rejoice at those events for which they decently appear to mourn. This is well known to mercenary men, who form their plans accordingly; and are apt to conclude that all are actuated by the same selfish principles. But the grace of God subdues this base disposition, and forms the mind to a more liberal temper: the true believer does not allow himself to desire, or to rejoice in, the calamity or death of a rival or an enemy; much less for that of a kind and superior relation, to whom gratitude and honour are justly due: and his mourning will on such occasions be unfeigned, though moderated by submission to the will of God. He cannot exult in the prospect of worldly advancement; for he considers himself as by it intrusted with more talents, surrounded by greater temptations, and called to increasing cares, duties, and burdens. Those therefore will be deceived, who court his favour, as sycophants do that of ungodly superiors: they will meet with a frown, a rebuke, and perhaps punishment, where they expected a large reward: and this treatment of such mercenary men promises an useful and honourable possession of worldly pre-eminence. The faults even of our enemies should not be needlessly exposed, and all remembrance of injuries should be buried with the deceased, except the glory of God and the benefit of men require the contrary; and the offices and rank of distinguished persons are entitled to respect, though their characters do not deserve our esteem.—Useful endowments are conferred on those who are destitute of true piety; and it is in some cases allowable and decent to give them due commendation, yet we must on no account praise them for virtues which they do not possess. But holiness demands our peculiar love, and renders the society of those who possess it very pleasant to the true believer. Next to the love which subsists between the Lord and his people, that endeared affection which springs from it, produces the most vigorous, durable, faithful, and disinterested friendship; yet even this heavenly

CHAP. II.

David, by God's direction, goeth up to Hebron, and is there made king of Judah, 1. Abner maketh Ish-bosheth king of Israel, 8. Asahel slain, 18.

AND it came to pass after this, that David [a]enquired of the LORD, saying, Shall I go up into any of the cities of Judah? And the LORD said unto him, Go up. And David said, Whither shall I go up? And he said, Unto [b]Hebron.[1]

2 So David went up thither, and [c]his two wives also, Ahinoam the Jezreelitess, and Abigail Nabal's wife the Carmelite.

3 And [d]his men that were with him did David bring up, every man with his household: and they dwelt in [e]the cities of Hebron.

4 And [f]the men of Judah came; and there they [g]anointed David king over the house of Judah. And they told David, saying, That [h]the men of Jabesh-gilead were they that buried Saul.

5 ¶ And David sent messengers unto the men of Jabesh-gilead, and said unto them, [i]Blessed be ye of the LORD, that ye have shewed this kindness unto your lord, even unto Saul, and have buried him.

6 And now [k]the LORD shew kindness and truth unto you: and [l]I also will requite you this kindness, because ye have done this thing.

7 Therefore now [m]let your hands be strengthened, and be ye [*]valiant: for your master Saul is dead, and also the house of Judah have anointed me king over them.

8 ¶ But [n]Abner[2] the son of Ner, captain of [†]Saul's host, took [o]Ish-bosheth the son of Saul, and brought him over to [p]Mahanaim;

9 And made him king over [q]Gilead, and over the [r]Ashurites, and over Jezreel, and over Ephraim, and over Benjamin, and over all Israel.[3]

10 Ish-bosheth Saul's son was forty years old when he began to reign over Israel, and reigned two years: but the house of Judah followed David.

11 And [s]the [‡]time that David was king in Hebron over the house of Judah was seven years and six months.

12 ¶ And Abner the son of Ner, and the servants of Ish-bosheth the son of Saul, went out from Mahanaim to [t]Gibeon.

13 And [u]Joab the son of Zeruiah, and the servants of David, went out, and [§]met together by the [x]pool of Gibeon: and they sat down, the one on the one side of the pool, and the other on the other side of the pool.

14 And Abner said to Joab, Let the young men now arise, and [y]play before us.[4] And Joab said, Let them arise.

15 Then there arose and went over by number twelve of Benjamin, which pertained to Ish-bosheth the son of Saul, and twelve of the servants of David.

16 And they caught every one his fellow[5] by the head, and thrust his sword in his fellow's side; so they fell down together: wherefore that place was called [l]Helkath-hazzurim, which is in Gibeon.

17 And there was a very sore battle that day; and Abner was beaten, and the men of Israel, before the servants of David.

18 ¶ And there were [z]three sons of Zeruiah there, Joab, and Abishai, and Asahel: and Asahel [a]was as light of [*]foot as [†]a wild roe.

19 And Asahel pursued after Abner; and in going he [b]turned not to the right hand nor to the left from [‡]following Abner.

20 Then Abner looked behind him, and said, Art thou Asahel? And he answered, I am.

21 And Abner said to him, Turn thee aside to thy right hand or to thy left, and lay thee hold on one of the young men, and take thee his [§]armour. But Asahel would not turn aside from following of him.

22 And Abner said again to Asahel, Turn love occasions deep distress in this world, in which it is an exotic; but in its own climate above, it will flourish into unalloyed and eternal pleasure.—The calamities of the Lord's people, and the triumphs of his enemies, always grieve the hearts of true believers, whatever advantages they may incidentally derive from them; and it would be well if many things which continually occur among professed Christians could be concealed from infidels and profligates, who are exceedingly hardened and emboldened by them. But it is not enough to conceal, we must watch and pray against, such offences. Let us then learn to repress ambition, resentment, and self-love; and to exercise patience, meekness, gratitude to our benefactors, love to our country, and good-will to men; with zeal for the glory of God, and the interests of true religion.—Scott.

CHAP. II. DAVID'S PIETY.—David doubted not of success, yet he uses proper means, both divine and human. Assurance of hope in God's promise, will be so far from slackening, that it will quicken pious endeavours. If I be elected to the crown of life, it does not follow, Then I will do nothing; but, Then I will do all that he directs me, and follow his conduct who chose me: this good use David made of his election, and so will all whom God has chosen. David, according to the precept, "acknowledged God in his way." He inquired of the Lord, by the breastplate of judgment, which Abiathar brought him. We must apply ourselves to God, not only when we are in distress, but even then when the world smiles upon us, and second causes work in favour of us. His inquiry was, "'Shall I go up to any of the cities of Judah?' Shall I stir hence?" Though Ziklag be in ruins, he will not quit it without directions from God: "If I stir hence, 'shall I go to one of the cities of Judah?'" Not limiting God to them; if God should so direct him, he would go to any of the cities of Israel. But it bespeaks his prudence, in the cities of Judah he would find most friends; and his modesty, he would look no further at present than his own tribe. In all our motions and removes, it is comfortable to see God going before us; and we may, if by faith and prayer we set him before us.

BARBAROUS PASTIME.—The engagement was first proposed by Abner, and accepted by Joab, to be between twelve and twelve of a side. 1. It should seem this trial of skill began in sport. Abner made the motion, ver. 14, "Let the young men arise and play before us," as gladiators; perhaps Saul had used his men to these barbarous pastimes, like a tyrant indeed, and Abner had learnt it of him, to make a jest of wounds and death, and divert himself with the scenes of blood and horror. He meant, "Let them fight before us," when he said, "Let them play before us;" "fools" thus "make a mock at sin." But he is unworthy the name of a man, that can be thus prodigal of human blood, that can thus "throw about fire-brands, arrows, and death," and say, "Am not I in sport?" Prov. xxvi. 18, 19. Joab having been bred up under David, had so much wisdom as not to make such a proposal, yet had not resolution enough to resist and gainsay it when another made it. For he stood upon a point of honour, and thought it a blemish to his reputation to refuse a challenge; and therefore said, "Let them arise;" not that he was fond of the sport, or expected that the duels would be decisive, but he would not be hectored by his antagonist. How many precious lives have thus been sacrificed to the caprice of proud men! Twelve of each side were accordingly called out as champions to enter the lists, a double jury of life and death, not of others, but their own; and the champions on Abner's side seem to have been most forward, for they took the field first, ver. 15, having, perhaps, been bred up in a foolish ambition thus to serve the humour of their commander-in-chief. But, 2. However it began, it ended in blood, ver. 16, they thrust "every man his sword into his fellow's side," spurred on by honour, not by enmity; so they "fell down together," that is, all the twenty-four were slain; such an equal match were they for one another, and so resolute, that neither side would either beg or give quarter; they did as it were by agreement, (says Josephus,) depatch one another with mutual wounds. They that strike at other men's lives, often throw away their own, and death only conquers and rides in triumph. The wonderful obstinacy of both sides was remembered in the name given to the place, Helkath-hazzurim, the field of rocky men; men that were not only strong in body, but of firm and unshaken constancy, that stirred not at the sight of death.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Ver. 12—32. Ambitious and bloody men often consider the trade of war, and the slaughter of their fellow-creatures, as a mere diversion; and the lives of millions have been trifled away, out of an irrational point of honour, to the great gratification of Satan, that first great murderer of the bodies and souls of men. From age to age numbers are ambitious of venturing their lives and souls, for the empty hope of being celebrated as valiant men, after they are dead! and from the same motive they mingle the blood of their brethren with their own; though they bear them no resentment, and have received no provocation from them: but what can be more senseless and infatuated than such a conduct!—The sword of civil war when once unsheathed, is not easily returned into the scabbard: and they who, in their eagerness to engage, have made light of such unnatural contests, will perceive in the event that they are bitterness to all concerned.—Men are exceedingly disposed to throw the blame of manifest evil upon others, that they may exculpate themselves: and those arguments which were disregarded as futile, when they made against them, will often be deemed very conclusive when urged on their own behalf.—Success, as well as self-love, has a great effect in determining men's judgments: of the evil of prosperous attempts, they cannot be con-thee aside from following me: [c]wherefore should I smite thee to the ground? [d]how then should I hold up my face to Joab thy brother?

23 Howbeit he refused to turn aside: wherefore Abner with the hinder end of the spear[6] smote him under [e]the fifth rib, that the spear came out behind him; and he fell down there, and died in the same place: and it came to pass, that as many as came to the place where Asahel fell down and died [f]stood still.

24 Joab also and Abishai pursued after Abner: and the sun went down when they were come to the hill of Ammah, that lieth before Giah by the way of the wilderness of Gibeon.

25 ¶ And the children of Benjamin gathered themselves together after Abner, and became one troop, and stood on the top of an hill.

26 Then Abner called to Joab, and said, [g]Shall the [h]sword devour for ever? knowest thou not that it will be bitterness in the latter end? [i]how long shall it be then ere thou bid the people return from following their brethren?

27 And Joab said, As [k]God liveth, [l]unless thou hadst spoken,[7] surely then [l]in the morning the people had *gone up every one from following his brother.

28 So Joab blew a trumpet, and all the people stood still, and pursued after Israel no more, neither fought they any more.

29 And Abner and his men walked all that night through the plain, and passed over Jordan, and went through all [m]Bithron, and they came to Mahanaim.

30 And Joab returned from following Abner: and when he had gathered all the people together, there lacked of David's servants nineteen men[8] and Asahel.

31 But the servants of David had smitten of Benjamin, and of Abner's men, so that [n]three hundred and threescore men died.

32 ¶ And they took up Asahel, and [o]buried him in the sepulchre of his father, which was in Beth-lehem. And Joab and his men [p]went all night, and they came to Hebron at break of day.

3 And his second, [g]Chileab, [h]of Abigail the wife of Nabal the Carmelite; and the third, [i]Absalom the son of Maacah, the daughter of [j]Talmai king of [k]Geshur;[1]

4 And the fourth [l]Adonijah the son of Haggith; and the fifth, Shephatiah the son of Abital;

5 And the sixth, Ithream, by Eglah David's wife. These were born to David in Hebron.

6 ¶ And it came to pass, while there was war between the house of Saul and the house of David, that [m]Abner made himself strong for the house of Saul.

7 And Saul had a concubine, whose name was [n]Rizpah, the daughter of Aiah: and Ish-bosheth said to Abner,[2] Wherefore hast thou [o]gone in unto my father's concubine?

8 Then was Abner [p]very wroth for the words of Ish-bosheth, and said, Am [q]I a dog's head, which against Judah [r]do shew kindness this day unto the house of Saul thy father, to his brethren, and to his friends, and have not delivered thee into the hand of David, that thou chargest me to-day with a fault concerning this woman?

9 [s]So do God to Abner, and more also, except [t]as the Lord hath sworn to David, even so I do to him;

10 To translate the kingdom from the house of Saul, and to set up the throne of David over Israel and over Judah, [u]from Dan even to Beer-sheba.

11 And he could not answer Abner a word again, [x]because he feared him.

12 ¶ And Abner sent messengers to David on his behalf, saying, [y]Whose is the land? saying also, [z]Make thy league with me, and, behold, [a]my hand shall be with thee, to bring about all Israel unto thee.

13 ¶ And he said, Well; I will make a league with thee: but one thing I require of thee, *that is, [b]Thou shalt not see my face, except thou first bring [c]Michal Saul's daughter, when thou comest to see my face.

14 And David sent messengers to Ish-bosheth Saul's son, saying, Deliver me my wife Michal, which I espoused to me for an hundred foreskins of the Philistines.

15 And Ish-bosheth sent,[3] and took her from her husband, even from [d]Phaltiel the son of Laish.

16 And her husband went with her along †weeping behind her to [e]Bahurim. Then said Abner unto him, Go, return. And he returned.

17 ¶ And Abner had communication with the elders of Israel, saying, Ye sought for David ‡in times past to be king over you:

vinced; yet they can easily perceive those measures to be wrong, which occasion loss or peril to themselves! Such partial decisions should be exposed and rebuked: yet it is always right to exercise clemency to the vanquished, and generosity to the wretched; to spare the shedding of human blood, and to alleviate the sum of human misery, and to strive for peace, especially in the intestine contentions of nations or churches, where the common cause must suffer, which party soever may acquire the ascendancy. Different endowments qualify us for varied kinds of service; and should be improved for that purpose. But when talents are overrated, and when men confide and glory in them, they will go out of the line of duty, in order to distinguish themselves; they will despise warning and counsel, as the effect of envy and cowardice; and they will always be shamed, and frequently ruined, by those qualifications in which they prided themselves. Often do men fancy themselves about to seize upon happiness, when death stops their career, and lays them in the dust: and if they will rush forwards in the road to destruction, though plainly warned of their danger, they can blame none but themselves. Finally, there are many distinctions among us, both during life, and in the disposal of our bodies after death; but in the eternal world no distinction subsists, except betwixt those "who have served the Lord, and those who have not served him."—Scott.

CHAP. III. Last Struggles of the House of Saul.—Here is, The struggle that David had with the house of Saul, before his settlement in the throne was completed, ver. 1. 1. Both sides contested; Saul's house, though beheaded and diminished, would not fall tamely. It is not strange that there was war between them; but one would wonder it should be a long war, when David's house had right on its side, and therefore God on its side: but though truth and equity will triumph at last, God may, for wise and holy ends, prolong the conflict. The length of this war tried the faith and patience of David, and made his establishment at last the more welcome to him. 2. David's side got ground. The house of Saul waxed weaker and weaker, lost places, lost men, sunk in its reputation, grew less considerable, and was foiled in every engagement; but the house of David grew stronger and stronger; many deserted the declining cause of Saul's house, and prudently came into David's interest, being convinced that he would certainly win the day. The contest between grace and corruption in the hearts of believers, who are sanctified but in part, may fitly be compared to this recorded here. There is a long war between them, the flesh lusting against the spirit, and the spirit against the flesh; but as the work of sanctification is carried on, corruption, like the house of Saul, grows weaker; while grace, like the house of David, grows stronger and stronger, till it come to a perfect man, and judgment be brought forth into victory.—Henry.

Abner's Defection.—Ver. 6—10. Perhaps Abner was weary of Ish-bosheth's unsuccessful cause, and was glad of an occasion of seeking preferment in David's service. No doubt he was guilty of the crime charged upon him, which was considered as a claim to the kingdom of a deceased prince. Ish-bosheth, however, was very imprudent to mention it, as he was entirely dependent upon Abner. He proudly disdained to be called to account by Ish-bosheth, after all his services to the house of Saul, of which he boasted; whom he had supported, not only against the house of Judah, but against the known appointment of God confirmed by an oath, ver. 17, 18, against the convictions of his own conscience. Ambition, and not regard to Ish-bosheth, had hitherto induced him to support his interest: and revenge and policy, not regard to the will of God, at length prevailed with him at this time to join David's party. "Such is the genius of many great courtiers, who are irritated on slight occasions; and rather rule over princes, than are ruled by them."—[Pellicanus.]

Abner's Proposals to David, &c.—Ver. 12. "Whose is the land?" Abner, by this expression, seems to have insinuated, that he, not Ish-bosheth, retained the authority; if therefore David would grant him advantageous terms, he would put him in possession of the whole land. Some, however, interpret the words as an acknowledgment of David's title to the kingdom over all Israel. Ver. 13—16. David knew that the kingdom was his in the purpose of God; it was desirable to sheath the sword of civil war, and to unite all Israel voluntarily under one king; he was not accountable for Abner's secret motives; and doubtless he meant to grant Ish-bosheth very favourable terms, had not his purposes been prevented. If David had divorced Michal, and she had in consequence been married to another, he must not have received her again; but the separation was violent on both sides. It is probable that her marriage to Phaltiel was a force upon her inclinations: and Phaltiel was very criminal in taking another man's wife, whatever affection he had for her. David required Michal to be restored, perhaps out of affection for her; or to strengthen his interest by asserting, and showing the value which he put upon, his affinity with the house of Saul; or to show his regard for the law of God, and to rebuke a man who openly violated it. As Abner did not deem it politic, at that juncture, directly to take Michal from Phaltiel, David addressed himself to Ish-bosheth, who complied with his demand; perhaps being willing to be upon amicable terms with him, as he could not overcome him by arms. Ver. 17—21. Abner, being satisfied that David would recompense his services, was very active in bringing the elders of the other tribes, and of Benjamin in particular, to receive David as their king. It seems that the people in general had desired this, especially when Saul and his sons were slain; but that Abner's great authority had induced them to set up Ish-bosheth: so that now when Abner entered

18 Now then do it: [f]for the LORD hath spoken of David, saying, [g]By the hand of my servant David I will save my people Israel out of the hand of the Philistines, and out of the hand of all their enemies.

19 And Abner also spake in the ears of [h]Benjamin; and Abner went also to speak in the ears of David in Hebron, all that seemed good to Israel, and that seemed good to the whole house of Benjamin.

20 So Abner came to David to Hebron, and twenty men with him. And [i]David made Abner and the men that were with him a feast.

21 And Abner said unto David, I will arise and go, and [j]will gather all Israel unto my lord the king, that they may make a league with thee, and that thou mayest [k]reign over all that thine heart desireth. And David sent Abner away; and he went in peace.

22 ¶ And, behold, the servants of David and Joab came from pursuing[4] a troop, and brought in a great spoil with them: but Abner was not with David in Hebron; for he had sent him away, and he was gone in peace.

23 When Joab and all the host that was with him were come, they told Joab, saying, Abner the son of Ner came to the king, and he hath sent him away, and he is gone in peace.

24 Then Joab came to the king, and said, [l]What hast thou done?[5] behold, Abner came unto thee: why is it that thou hast sent him away, and he is quite gone?

25 Thou knowest Abner the son of Ner, [m]that he came to deceive thee, [n]and to know thy going out and thy coming in, and to know all that thou doest.

26 And when Joab was come out from David, [o]he sent messengers after Abner, which brought him again from the well of Sirah: but David knew it not.

27 And when Abner was returned to Hebron, Joab took him aside in the gate[6] to speak with him [s]quietly, and smote him there [p]under the fifth rib, that he died, [q]for the blood of Asahel his brother.

28 ¶ And afterward when David heard it, he said, I and my kingdom are [r]guiltless before the LORD for ever from the [t]blood of Abner the son of Ner:

29 Let it [u]rest on the head of Joab,[7] and on all his father's house; and [v]let there not [*]fail from the house of Joab one that hath [w]an issue, or that is a [x]leper, or that leaneth on a staff, or that falleth on the sword, or that lacketh bread.

30 So Joab and Abishai his brother [y]slew Abner, [z]because he had slain their brother Asahel at Gibeon in the battle.

into the interests of David, he had little difficulty in bringing them over to him. The words Abner mentions, as spoken by the LORD concerning David, are not found in the preceding history; but the meaning of it is implied in the promises given him. Having made all requisite preparations, Abner went to David, and being cordially entertained, and peaceably dismissed, he expected, no doubt, to obtain high preferment under him.—Scott.

ASSASSINATION OF ABNER.—It is certain that Joab was unrighteous, and, in what he did, did wickedly. David was a man according to God's own heart, but could not have those about him, no, not in places of the greatest trust, after his own heart. Many a good prince, and a good master, has been forced to employ bad men. 1. Even the pretence for doing this was very unjust. Abner had indeed slain his brother Asahel, and Joab and Abishai pretended herein to be the avengers of his blood; ver. 27, 30; but Abner slew Asahel in an open war, wherein Abner indeed had given the challenge, but Joab himself had accepted it, and had slain many of Abner's friends; he did it likewise in his own defence, and not till he had given him fair warning, (which he would not take,) and he did it with reluctancy; but Joab here shed "the blood of war in peace," 1 Kings ii. 5. 2. That which we have reason to think was at the bottom of Joab's enmity to Abner, made it much worse. Joab was now general of David's forces; but if Abner should come into his interest, he would possibly be preferred before him, being a senior officer, and more experienced in the art of war. This Joab was jealous of, and could better bear the guilt of blood than the thoughts of a rival. 3. He did it treacherously, and under the pretence of speaking peaceably to him, Deut. xxvii. 24. Had he challenged him, he had done like a soldier; but to assassinate him, was done villanously and like a coward. "His words were softer than oil, yet were they drawn swords," Ps. lv. 21. Thus he basely slew Amasa, chap. xx. 9, 10. 4. The doing of it was a great affront and injury to David, who was now in treaty with Abner, and Joab knew it. Abner was now actually in his master's service, so that, through his side, he struck at David himself. 5. It was a great aggravation of the murder, that he did it in the gate, openly and avowedly, as one that was not ashamed, nor could blush. The gate was the place of judgment and the place of concourse; so that he did it in defiance of justice, both the just sentence of the magistrates, and the just resentments of the crowd; as one that neither feared God nor regarded man, but thought himself above all control: and Hebron was a Levites' city, and a city of refuge. —Henry.

DAVID'S GRIEF FOR ABNER.—Ver. 28, 29. David no doubt intended by these protestations, and imprecations upon Joab and his family, to wipe off all suspicion of his own guilt, and to remove it from the land; being perhaps afraid of a revolt of the soldiers, if he proceeded to execute vengeance on the murderer. But he should have remembered that He, "who stilleth the raging of the sea," is able also "to still the madness of the people." In so just a cause he ought to have risked all consequences. He was anointed king to administer justice without respect of persons; and he might have been assured of the Lord's support in doing so important a duty; the example would have been very salutary; all impartial persons would have applauded his firmness; perhaps Ish-bosheth's murder would have been prevented, and many other crimes and calamities, in the latter part of his reign. But his fear of man in this instance overcame his faith in God, and Joab continued and increased in authority, and in crimes, to the end of David's life: he was at length, however, called to account for them all. Ver. 31. Joab was constrained to do penance, so to speak, by appearing as a mourner for Abner; but as his revenge was gratified, his rival removed, and no heavier punishment inflicted, it is likely he would have but little objection to such a ceremonial. David, however, no doubt intended to lessen Joab's authority with the people, by requiring his attendance.—Scott.

CHAP. IV. ASSASSINATION OF ISH-BOSHETH.—Ver. 5. Ish-bosheth had enough to do in this emergency, without sleeping on his bed at noon. But he appears to have been an inactive, self-indulged man. It was indeed, and is still, a custom in the East countries to retire for sleep about noon; that is for such as live in ease and luxury, not for others, except in very sultry regions. The Scripture gives no intimation that this was a common practice in Israel. Ver. 8. These men entirely mistook David's character, as if he had such a thirst for revenge, that he would reward any villany by which it could be accomplished; and they presumed that they had performed the will of God in this complicated treason and parricide! The LORD had indeed avenged his servant of his enemies; but neither David nor David's LORD, had commissioned them to murder their prince, whom they professed to serve. Ver. 10—12. Whatever Ish-bosheth's character was before God, he was righteous, "as to his murderers," having done them no injury, and given them no provocation; so that in slaying him, they shed innocent blood, for the basest motives, and with the greatest aggravations; and David, as God's vicegerent, most justly executed vengeance upon them for it. It had been well if he had been equally decisive in the case of Joab; that there might have been no appearance of partiality, and no hope of impunity to any criminal.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Every thing will concur in forwarding the accomplishment of God's word, whether of promise or of wrath, when the appointed time approaches: on one hand there can be no failure, on the other no escape. Wretched indeed are they who are engaged in such undertakings, that none can serve them without opposing the known will of God! the very men in whom they repose their chief confidence are destitute of principle, serve them only for gain, and will betray or murder them when their mercenary schemes require it. Alas! what numbers sink from self-indulgence and carnal security into unsuspected and inevitable destruction! Many are conscious that they should be pleased with villany, provided it conduced greatly to their profit; they are led confidently to conclude that others will be so too; and as numbers are rewarded for villanous actions, they expect the same. Persons in authority should therefore decidedly manifest that they will not be served by such wretches, but will, instead of rewarding, severely punish their crimes. The servants of God are encouraged by the Scriptures, and by their own experience, to trust him in the path of duty, to redeem them from all adversity, without countenancing, any more than committing, sin for that purpose; and they will pity and pray for, and behave kindly to their opposers, and speak as favourably of them as they can; and on no account become their own avengers. Finally, the Son of David will requite those who pretend to serve his cause by frauds, treasons, massacres, and persecutions, with more dreadful vengeance than was inflicted by David on Ish-bosheth's murderers.—Scott.

CHAP. V. DAVID'S RECOGNITION AS KING BY THE TRIBES.—Judah had submitted to David as their king, above seven years ago, and their ease and happiness, under his administration, encouraged the rest of the tribes to make their court to him. What numbers came from each tribe, with what zeal and sincerity they came, and how they were entertained for three days at Hebron, when they were all of one heart to make David king, we have a full account, 1 Chron. xii. 23—40. Here we have only the heads of their address, containing the grounds they went upon in making David king. 1. Their relation to him was some inducement. "'We are thy bone and thy flesh,' ver. 1. Not only thou art our bone, and our flesh, not a stranger, unqualified by the law to be king, (Deut. xvii. 15,) but we are thine;" that is, "we know that thou considerest us thy bone and flesh, and hast a tender concern for us, as a man has for his own body, which Saul and his house had not. 'We are thy bone and thy flesh,' and therefore thou wilt be as glad as we shall be to put an end to this long civil war; and thou wilt take pity on us, protect us, and do thine utmost for our welfare." Those who take Christ for their King, may thus plead with him, "'We are thy bone and thy flesh;' thou hast made thyself in all things 'like unto thy brethren,' Heb. ii. 17, therefore be thou our Ruler, and let this ruin be under thy hand," Isa. iii. 6.—Henry.

DAVID'S CAPTURE OF THE CITADEL OF JERUSALEM.—Ver. 6—8. The greater part of Jerusalem lay in the lot of Benjamin, and had hitherto been possessed by the Jebusites; but as soon as Israel had submitted to David, he marched to dispossess them. The citadel, called "the stronghold of Zion," was fortified by nature and art, and the Jebusites set him at defiance. Confiding in its strength, they told him that blind and lame men could defend it against his army; and, perhaps in derision, placed a company of such persons upon it, who insulted David and his soldiers: for the last clause, ver. 8, may be read, "They had said, even the blind and the lame, that he shall not come into the house." But David commanded his men, "when they smote the Jebusites; to throw down the blind and the lame into the gutter," or ditch, as it might be read; which, under the conduct of Joab, they effected accordingly. These were said to be "hated of David's soul;" for they were devoted Canaanites and idolaters, if not blasphemers of God.—But, by "the blind and the lame," some understand the idols of the Jebusites, which David's soldiers had thus called in contempt: but their worshippers so confided in them, that they defied David to take the citadel whilst they kept their station, or by any means to remove them; and declared, that if he did, they would no longer admit them into their temples or houses. David, however, got possession: and near to this mount the ark was placed, and the temple was built: and the residence of the family of David was fixed.—Scott.

THE PRESENCE OF THE LORD OF THE HEBREW HOSTS.—God gave David sensible tokens of his presence with him, bade him not fall upon them directly, as he had done before, but "fetch a compass behind them," ver. 23. 1. God appoints him to draw back, as "Israel stood still to see the salvation of the Lord." 2. He promised him to charge the enemy himself, by an invisible host of angels, ver. 24. Thou shalt hear the "sound of a going," like the march of an army in the air, "upon the tops of the mulberry-trees. Angels tread light, and he that can walk upon the clouds, can, when he pleases, walk on the tops of trees, or (as Bishop Patrick understands it,) at the head of the mulberry-trees, that is, of the wood, or hedgerow, of those trees. "And by that sign thou shalt know that 'the Lord goes out before thee;' though thou see him not, yet thou shalt hear him, and faith shall come, and be confirmed by hearing. He goes forth 'to smite the host of the Philistines.'" When David had himself smitten them, ver. 20, he ascribed it to God; "The Lord has broken forth upon mine enemies;" to reward him for which thankful acknowledgment, the next time God did it himself alone, without putting him to any toil or peril: for those that own God in what he has done for them, he will do more. But observe, though God promised to "go before him, and smite the Philistines," yet David, when he heard the sound of the going, must bestir himself, and be ready to pursue the victory. Note, God's grace must quicken our endeavours. If God work in us, both to will and to do, it does not follow that we must sit still, as those that have nothing to do, but we must therefore "work doubtless deliver the Philistines into thine hand.

20 And David came to [o]Baal-perazim,[5] and David smote them there, and said, The LORD hath broken forth upon mine enemies before me, as the breach of waters. Therefore he called the name of that place [*]Baal-perazim.

21 And there they left their images, and [p]David and his men [†]burned them.

22 And the Philistines [q]came up yet again, and spread themselves in the valley of Rephaim.

23 And when David [r]enquired of the LORD, he said, Thou shalt not go up; but [s]fetch a compass behind them, and come upon them over against the mulberry trees.

24 And let it be, when thou hearest [t]the sound of a going in the tops[6] of the mulberry trees, that then [u]thou shalt bestir thyself: for then shall the LORD go out before thee, to smite the host of the Philistines.

25 And David did so, as the LORD had commanded him; and smote the Philistines from [x]Geba until thou come to [y]Gazer.

CHAP. VI.

David fetches the ark from Kirjath-jearim on a new cart, 1. Uzza his smitten, David is disconcerted, and the ark is left with Obed-edom, whose house is blessed on account of it, 6. David brings the ark to Zion with sacrifices, and dances before it, for which Michal despises him, 12; he places it in a tabernacle, with joy and feasting, 17. Michal, deriding David for his religious joy, is childless till her death, 20.

AGAIN, David [a]gathered together all the chosen men of Israel, thirty thousand.

2 And David arose, and went with all the people, that were with him from [b]Baale of Judah, to bring up from thence the ark of God, [*]whose name is called by the name of the LORD of hosts that [c]dwelleth between the cherubims.

3 And they [†]set the ark of God upon [d]a new cart,[1] and brought it out of the house of Abinadab that was in [‡]Gibeah: and Uzzah and Ahio, the sons of Abinadab, drave the new cart.

4 And they brought it out of [e]the house of Abinadab which was at Gibeah, [§]accompanying the ark of God: and Ahio went before the ark.

5 And [f]David and all the house of Israel played before the LORD on all manner of instruments made of fir wood,[2] even on harps, and on psalteries, and on timbrels, and on cornets, and on cymbals.

6 And when they came to [g]Nachon's thrashing-floor, Uzzah [h]put forth his hand to the ark of God, and took hold of it; for the oxen [†]shook it.

7 And the anger of the LORD was kindled against Uzzah; and [i]God smote him there for his [*]error; and there he died by the ark of God.

8 And David was [k]displeased because the LORD [†]had made a breach upon Uzzah: and he called the name of the place [‡]Perez-uzzah to this day.

9 And David was [l]afraid of the LORD that day, and said, [m]How shall the ark of the LORD come to me.

10 So David would not remove the ark of the LORD unto him into the city of David: but David carried it aside into the house of [n]Obed-edom the [o]Gittite.

11 And the ark of the LORD continued in the house of Obed-edom the Gittite three months: and [p]the LORD blessed Obed-edom, and all his household.

12 And it was told king David, saying, The LORD hath blessed the house of Obed-edom, and all that pertaineth unto him, because of the ark of God. [q]So David went and brought up the ark of God from the house of Obed-edom into the city of David with gladness.

13 And it was so, that [r]when they that bare the ark of the LORD had gone six paces, he sacrificed [s]oxen and fatlings.

14 And David [t]danced before the LORD [u]with all his might: and David was [v]girded with a linen ephod.

15 So David and all the house of Israel brought up the ark of the LORD [x]with shouting, and with [y]the sound of the trumpet.

16 And as the ark of the LORD came into the city of David, [z]Michal Saul's daughter looked through a window, and saw king David leaping and dancing before the LORD; and she [a]despised him[3] in her heart.

17 And [b]they brought in the ark of the LORD, and set it in his place, in the midst of the tabernacle that David had pitched for it: and David [c]offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings before the LORD.

18 And as soon [d]as David had made an end of offering burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, [e]he blessed the people in the name of the LORD of hosts.

19 And [f]he dealt among all the people, even among the whole multitude of Israel, as well to the women as men, to every one a cake of bread, and a good piece of flesh, and a flagon of wine. [g]So all the people departed every one to his house.

20 Then David returned to [h]bless his household. And [i]Michal the daughter of out our salvation" with all possible care and diligence, Phil. ii. 12, 13. The sound of the going was, (1.) A signal to David when to move; it is comfortable going out when God goes before us. And, (2.) Perhaps it was an alarm to the enemy, and put them into confusion. Hearing the march of an army against their front, they retreated with precipitation, and fell into David's army, which lay behind them in their rear. Of those whom God fights against, it is said, Lev. xxvi. 36, "The sound of a shaken leaf shall chase them." The success of this is briefly set down, ver. 25. David observed his orders, waited till God moved and stirred them, but not till then. Thus he was trained up in a dependence on God and his providence. God performed his promise, went before him, and routed all the enemies' force, and David failed not to improve his advantages; he smote the Philistines, even to the borders of their own country. When the kingdom of the Messiah was to be set up, the apostles, that were to beat down the devil's kingdom, must not attempt any thing till they received the promise of the Spirit, who "came with a sound from heaven, as of a rushing mighty wind," Acts ii. 2, which was typified by this sound of the going on the tops of the mulberry trees; and, when they heard that, they must bestir themselves, and did so; they went forth conquering and to conquer.—Henry.

CHAP. VI. PRESUMPTION SIGNALLY PUNISHED.—Ver. 6, 7. Uzzah, fearing lest the ark should fall, because the oxen stumbled, apparently with a good intention laid hold of it: yet "God smote him for his error." But in what did his error consist? Even the Kohathites, who were appointed to carry the ark, were forbidden to touch it on pain of death: that is, it must first be covered by the priests, and then the Kohathites must carry it by the staves only, and not touch the ark itself, Num. iv. 15; but Uzzah, who certainly was not a priest, laid hold on the ark, which probably was not covered. It may be supposed that neither Eleazar, nor Uzzah, nor Ahio, had thus touched it during all the years it had remained with them, and that it was placed on the cart by the staves only; and though it seemed necessary for Uzzah to lay hold of it, yet the necessity arose from the method of conveyance, which some think Uzzah had proposed, and he was therefore answerable for all the consequences. It is probable that he had become too familiar with this sacred symbol of the Lord's especial presence, and that he presumed on the services which he and his family had rendered in taking care of it, when generally neglected; as if that had given him a sanctity equal, or even superior, to that of the priests; so that he and his brother seem to have taken the principal management of the business on themselves. Whereas, when all orders of men concurred in showing honour to the ark, they ought to have declined any further interference, and referred the care of it to the priests on whom it properly devolved. No doubt, the Lord saw that in Uzzah's conduct which indicated irreverence and presumption; not wholly unlike the sin of Nadab and Abihu, when they offered strange fire before him; and therefore he smote him, perhaps in a similar manner, and for the same reasons. But though he was singled out to be made an example of, his death was a rebuke and warning to David, to the priests, and to all Israel.—Scott.

BLESSING OF OBED-EDOM.—David lodged the ark in a good house, the house of Obed-edom, a Levite, which happened to be near the place where this disaster happened, and there, 1. It was kindly entertained and bid welcome, and continued there three months, ver. 10, 11. Obed-edom knew what slaughter the ark had made among the Philistines that imprisoned it, and the Bethshemites that looked into it. He saw Uzzah struck dead for touching it, and perceived that David himself was afraid of meddling with it; yet he cheerfully invites it to his own house, and opens his doors to it without fear, knowing it was a "savour of death unto death," to those only that treated it ill. "Oh, the courage," says Bishop Hall, "of an honest and faithful heart; nothing can make God otherwise than amiable to his own: even his very justice is lovely." 2. It paid well for his entertainment. "The Lord blessed Obed-edom and all his household." The same hand that punished Uzzah's proud presumption, rewarded Obed-edom's humble boldness, and made the ark to him a "savour of life unto life." Let none think the worse of the gospel for the judgments inflicted on those that reject it, but set in opposition to them the blessings it brings to those that duly receive it. None ever had, or ever shall have, reason to say that "it is in vain to serve God." Let masters of families be encouraged to keep up religion in their families, and to serve God and the interests of his kingdom, with their houses and estates; for that is the way to bring a blessing upon all they have. The ark is a guest which none shall lose by that bid it welcome—Henry.

SAUL'S DAUGHTER.—Ver. 16. Saul had neglected the ark and religion; and Michal seems to have had no deep sense of the importance and excellency of heavenly things: but she was possessed with high thoughts of temporal dignity and royalty. Perhaps she considered David's zeal for the ark as a reproach of her father's negligence: at least she considered his transports of religious joy, in the midst of the people, as a degradation of his character, and as exposing him to contempt. David the brave captain, leading forth the people to battle, and returning with them in triumph, she had admired: but David the saint, leading the people in the ordinances of God, and setting them an example of fervency of spirit in his service, she despised in her heart; yet this was by far the most illustrious part of his character. Michal spake the language of passion and contempt. Because David had expressed great zeal and earnestness, she sug-

David purposes to build a temple, and Nathan encourages him, 1. God, by Nathan, forbids it, but with promises of special blessings to Israel, to David, and to his seed, 4. David's prayer and thanksgiving, 18.

AND it came to pass, [a]when the king sat in his house, and [b]the LORD had given him rest round about from all his enemies;

2 That the king said unto [c]Nathan the prophet, See now, [d]I dwell[1] in an house of cedar, but [e]the ark of God dwelleth within [f]curtains.

3 And Nathan said to the king, [g]Go, do [h]all that is in thine heart; [i]for the LORD is with thee.

4 ¶ And it came to pass [j]that night, that the word of the LORD came unto Nathan, saying,

5 Go and tell [*]my servant David, Thus saith the LORD, [k]Shalt thou build me[2] an house for me to dwell in?

6 Whereas [l]I have not dwelt in any house since the time that I brought up the children of Israel out of Egypt, even to this day, but have [m]walked in [n]a tent and in a tabernacle.

7 In all the places wherein I have walked with all the children of Israel spake I a word with any of the [o]tribes of Israel, whom I commanded to [p]feed my people Israel, saying, Why build ye not me an house of cedar?

8 Now therefore so shalt thou say unto my servant David, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [q]I took thee from the sheepcote, from [t]following the sheep, to be [r]ruler over my people, over Israel:

9 And [s]I was with thee whithersoever thou wentest, and have [t]cut off all thine enemies [‡]out of thy sight, and have made thee [u]a great name, [x]like unto the name of the great men that are in the earth.

10 Moreover I will appoint a place for my people Israel, and will [y]plant them, that they may dwell in a place of their own, and move no more; [z]neither shall the children of wickedness afflict them any more, [a]as beforetime,

11 And as [b]since the time that I commanded judges to be over my people Israel, and [c]have caused thee to rest from all thine enemies. Also the LORD telleth thee that [d]he will make thee an house.

12 ¶ And [e]when thy days be fulfilled, and thou shalt [f]sleep with thy fathers, [g]I will set up thy seed after thee, which shall proceed out of thy bowels, and I will establish his kingdom.

13 [h]He shall build an house for my name, and [i]I will establish the throne of his kingdom for ever.

14 [k]I will be his father, and he shall be my son. [l]If he commit iniquity, [m]I will chasten him[3] with the rod of men, and with the stripes of the children of men:

15 But [n]my mercy shall not depart away from him, [o]as I took it from Saul, whom I put away before thee.

16 And [p]thine house and thy kingdom shall be established for ever before thee: thy throne shall be established for ever.

17 [q]According to all these words, and according to all these visions, so did Nathan speak unto David.

18 ¶ Then went king David in, and [r]sat[4] before the LORD, and he said, [s]Who am I, O LORD God? and what is my house, that thou hast brought me hitherto?

19 And [t]this was yet a small thing in thy sight, O LORD God; but [u]thou hast spoken also of thy servant's house for a great while to come. [x]And is this the [$]manner of man, O LORD God?

20 And what can David say more unto thee? for thou, LORD God, [y]knowest thy servant.

21 For [z]thy word's sake, and [a]according to thine own heart, hast thou done all these great things, to make thy servant know them.

22 Wherefore [b]thou art great, O LORD God: for there is [c]none like thee, neither is there any God beside thee, according to all that we have heard with our ears.

23 And [d]what one nation in the earth is like thy people, even like Israel, whom God [e]went to redeem for a people to himself, and to [f]make him a name, and to do for you [g]great things and terrible, for thy land, before [h]thy people, which thou redeemedst to thee from Egypt, from the nations and [i]their gods?

gested that he had behaved in an indecent manner: and as he had laid aside his royal robes, she would represent it as if he had improperly stripped himself. But it cannot be supposed that David did any thing indecorous on the occasion; except as Michal considered his piety and activity in religion as unbecoming the dignity of a king. Ver. 21—23. David very properly gloried in his zeal for the service and glory of God: before him he was willing to be abased both in his own eyes, and in those of others. And if his earnestness in religion was considered as playing the fool, and rendering himself vile, he desired to be still more vile; for he resolved to be still more zealous in that good cause. But he intimated to Michal, that for want of similar zeal, her father had been rejected; and that he was chosen in his stead to be "ruler of the people of the LORD." He was therefore bound by every tie to be very earnest in promoting his worship: and that which she despised as disgraceful to him, would in the event prove his greatest honour.—Scott.

CHAP. VII. THE TEMPLE—DAVID'S PURPOSE.—The building of a temple was to be a work of time, and preparation made for it; but it was a thing that had never been spoken of till now. God tells him, 1. That hitherto he never had had a house built for him, ver. 6; a tabernacle had served hitherto, and it might serve a while longer. God values not outward pomp in his service; his presence was as surely with his people when the ark was in a tent, as when it was in a temple; David was uneasy that the ark was in curtains, (a mean and moveable habitation,) but God never complained of it as any uneasiness to him. He did not dwell, but walk, and yet fainted not, nor was weary. Christ, like the ark, when here on earth, walked in a tent and tabernacle, for he "went about doing good," and dwelt not in any house of his own, till he ascended on high, to the mansions above, in his Father's house, and there he sat down. The church, like the ark, in this world, is ambulatory, dwells in a tent, because its present state is both pastoral and military; its continuing city is to come. David, in his Psalms, often calls the tabernacle a temple, (as Ps. v. 7; xxvii. 4; xxix. 9; lxv. 4; cxxxviii. 2,) because it answered the intention of a temple, though it was made but of curtains: wise and good men value not the show, while they have the substance. David perhaps had more true devotion, and sweeter communion with God, in a house of curtains, than any of his successors in the house of cedar. 2. That he had never given any orders or directions, or the least intimation, to any of the sceptres of Israel, that is, to any of the judges, 1 Chron. xvii. 6, (for rulers are called sceptres, Ezek. xix. 14, the great Ruler is called so, Num. xxiv. 17,) concerning the building of the temple, ver. 7. That worship only is acceptable which is instituted; why should David therefore design what God never ordained? Let him wait for a warrant, and then let him do it. Better a tent of God's appointing, than a temple of his own inventing.

CONCLUSION OF DAVID'S PRAYER.—1. He prays for the performance of his promise, ver. 25, "Let the word be made good to me, 'on which thou hast caused me to hope,' Ps. cxix. 49, 'and do as thou hast said;' I desire no more, and I expect no less; so full is the promise, and so firm." Thus we must turn God's promises into prayers, and then they shall be turned into performances, for, with God, saying and doing are not two things, as they often are with men; God will do as he hath said. 2. He prays for the glorifying of God's name, ver. 26, "Let thy name be magnified for ever;" this ought to be the summary and centre of all our prayers, the Alpha and the Omega of them; begin with "Hallowed be thy name," and end with "Thine is the glory for ever and ever." Whether I be magnified or no, "let thy name be magnified." And he reckons that nothing magnifies God's name more than this, to say, with suitable affections, "The Lord of hosts is the God over Israel." This bespeaks the "God of Israel gloriously great," that he is the "Lord of hosts;" and this bespeaks the "Lord of Hosts" gloriously good, that he is "God over Israel;" in both, "let his name be magnified for ever:" let all the creatures, and all the churches, give him the glory of these two. David desired the performance of God's promise for the honour, not of his own name, but of God's. Thus the son of David prayed, "Father, glorify thy name," John xii. 28, and chap. xvii. 1. "Glorify thy Son, that thy Son may also glorify thee." 3. He prays for his house, for to that the promise has special reference; First, That it might be happy, ver. 29, "Let it please thee to bless the house of thy servant," and again, "with thy blessing; let the house of thy servant be truly and eternally blessed. Those whom thou blessest, are blessed indeed." The care of good men is very much concerning their families; and the best entail on their families is that of the blessing of God. The repetition of this request is not a vain repetition, but expressive of the value he had of the divine blessing, and his earnest desire of it, is all in all to the happiness of his family. Secondly, That the happiness of it might remain. Let it be "established before thee," ver. 26. Let it "continue for ever before thee," ver. 29. He prays, (1.) That the entail of the crown might not be cut off, but remain in his family; that they might walk before God, and that would be their establishment. (2.) That his kingdom might have its perfection and perpetuity in the kingdom of the Messiah. When Christ for ever sat down on the right hand of God, Heb. x. 12, and received all possible assurance that his seed and throne shall be as the days of heaven, this prayer of David the son of Jesse for his seed was abundantly answered, that it might "continue before God for ever." See Ps. lxxii. 17. The perpetuity of the Messiah's kingdom is the desire and faith of all good people.—Henry.

AND [a]after this it came to pass, that David smote the Philistines, and subdued them: and David took *Metheg-ammah out of the hand of the Philistines.

2 And [b]he smote Moab, and [c]measured them with a line, casting them down to the ground; even with two lines measured he to put to death, and with one full line to keep alive. [d]And so the Moabites became David's servants, and [e]brought gifts.

3 ¶ David smote also [f]Hadadezer, the son of Rehob, king of [g]Zobah, as he went to recover his border [h]at the river Euphrates.

4 And David took [t]from him a thousand [i]chariots, and seven hundred horsemen, and twenty thousand footmen: and [l]David houghed[1] all the chariot horses, but [k]reserved of them for an hundred chariots.

5 And [l]when the Syrians of Damascus [m]came to succour Hadadezer king of Zobah, David slew of the Syrians two and twenty thousand men.

6 Then David put [n]garrisons in Syria of Damascus: and the Syrians became servants to David, and brought gifts. And [o]the LORD preserved David whithersoever he went.

7 And David took [p]the shields of gold that were on the servants of Hadadezer, and brought them to Jerusalem.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The greater leisure and ability any man is favoured with, the more should he form, and attempt to execute, plans of important usefulness; and they, who are largely replenished with the grace of God, will most comfortably enjoy their possessions, while they can render them subservient to his glory and the salvation of souls: they will often be grieved to reflect how much is expended on themselves, and how little in the service of God; and scarcely deem any thing done for him while so much remains undone.—Scott.

CHAP. VIII. DAVID'S VICTORIES.—Ver. 2. The Jews say, that the Moabites had slain David's parents. It may be supposed that he had just cause for this war; and for the severity with which he treated the vanquished: as he seems to have measured their country, and desolated two-thirds of it, and to have slaughtered two-thirds of the captives. Thus the Moabites became tributaries to Israel, as Balaam had predicted. Ver. 3. Zobah seems to have been a part of Syria, to the north-east of Canaan, to the south of Damascus, and reaching to the river Euphrates. It is probable that Hadadezer was jealous of David's growing greatness, and came to assist the Moabites in order to secure his own dominions: and that this gave David a fair opportunity of extending his conquests to the Euphrates.—Some think, however, that David went to establish his dominion over all the countries as far as that river, according to the grant made to Israel; and that he was opposed by Hadadezer. Ver. 4. Seven hundred. Seven thousand horsemen are mentioned in Chronicles: perhaps they were divided into seven hundred divisions of ten men each: however, David disabled the most of the horses, not desiring to trust in chariots or in horses, but in the living God. He reserved, however, horses for an hundred chariots; and this is the first time that chariots of any kind are mentioned, as possessed by a ruler in Israel. Ver. 9—11. Hamath lay north of Canaan and south of Damascus.—Thus, by arms or alliances, the heathen nations became tributary to David, and furnished those riches which he dedicated to the Lord for the building of the temple. Ver. 13, 14. Syrians. It is said in Chronicles, that "Abishai smote eighteen thousand Edomites in the Valley of Salt." Perhaps they were Edomites fighting for the Syrians. It is evident, however, that Edom was subjected in consequence of this victory, by which David acquired great renown.—In the title of the sixtieth Psalm, twelve thousand of Edom are mentioned, as slain by Joab. Perhaps Joab and Abishai commanded distinct bodies of troops, and eighteen thousand were slain between them, six thousand by Abishai, and twelve thousand by Joab. Thus the predictions concerning the Edomites began to be fulfilled.

DAVID'S CABINET.—Ver. 15—18. The assiduity, as well as the equity and impartiality of David's administration is here stated; in which, as well as in his victories, he was a type of Christ. Under David, Joab was commander-in-chief of the forces. Jehoshaphat recorded and brought forward every business in an orderly manner, or acted as judge or chancellor. Under Abiathar the high priest, Ahimelech his son, and Zadok descended from Eleazar, were the presiding priests; probably the one on Mount Zion, the other at Gibeon where the tabernacle was. Seraiah was scribe or secretary, to inspect and manage all writings concerning foreign or domestic transactions. And Benaiah commanded the Cherethites and Pelethites, David's constant attendants or guards, who were chosen out from his other troops, and probably consisted chiefly of those who had accompanied him in his distresses; or of such as had joined him from among the Philistines, for these are called Cherethites.—Scott.

CHAP. IX. DAVID'S KINDNESS.—Ver. 1. Mephibosheth was only five years old at his father's death, chap. iv. 4; but at this time he had a son, ver. 12; so that many years must have elapsed before David made this inquiry. For above seven years he had been opposed by Ish-bosheth, and his engagements afterwards had been numerous. He had not indeed injured any of Saul's family; yet he seems to have been too forgetful of his friendship with Jonathan, and his engagements to him. As, however, Mephibosheth was brought up in obscurity beyond Jordan, and perhaps purposely concealed by the suspicious care of his friends, David might not know that Jonathan had any child living. But at length recollecting himself he desired to show his entire forgiveness of Saul's injuries, and his gratitude for Jonathan's kindness, by restoring Saul's estate to some of his remaining posterity; and by conferring further favours on them for the sake of his friend.—Scott.

MEPHIBOSHETH.—Mephibosheth presents himself to David with all the respect that was owing to his character. Lame as he was, "he fell on his face and did reverence," ver. 6. David had thus made his honours to Mephibosheth's father, Jonathan, when he was next to the throne, 1 Sam. xx. 41, "he bowed himself to him three times;" and now Mephibosheth in like manner addresses him, when affairs are so completely reversed. Those who, when they are in inferior relations, show respect, when they come to be advanced, shall have respect showed them. 1. David received him with all the kindness that could be. (1.) He spoke to him as one surprised, but pleased to see him. "Mephibosheth! Why, is there such a man living?" He remembered his name, for it is probable that he was born about the time of the intimacy between him and Jonathan. (2.) He bade him not be afraid. "Fear not," ver. 7. It is probable that the sight of David put him into some confusion; to free him from which, he assures him that he

4 And the king said unto him, Where is he? And Ziba said unto the king, Behold, he is in the house of [f]Machir, the son of Ammiel, in Lo-debar.[2]

5 ¶ Then king David sent, and fetched him out of the house of Machir, the son of Ammiel, from Lo-debar.

6 Now when [g]Mephibosheth, the son of Jonathan, the son of Saul, was come unto David, [h]he fell on his face, and did reverence. And David said, Mephibosheth. And he answered, Behold thy servant!

7 ¶ And David said unto him, [i]Fear not:[3] [j]for I will surely shew thee kindness for Jonathan thy father's sake, and will restore thee all the land of Saul thy father; and thou shalt [k]eat bread at my table continually.

8 And he bowed himself, and said, What is thy servant, that thou shouldest look upon such [l]a dead dog as I am?

9 ¶ Then the king called to Ziba, Saul's servant, and said unto him, [m]I have given unto thy master's son all that pertained to Saul and to all his house.

10 Thou therefore, and thy sons, and thy servants, shall till the land for him, and thou shalt bring in the fruits, that thy master's son may have food to eat: but Mephibosheth thy master's son [n]shall eat bread alway at my table. [o]Now Ziba had fifteen sons and twenty servants.

11 Then said Ziba unto the king, [p]According to all that my lord the king hath commanded his servant, so shall thy servant do. As for Mephibosheth, said the king, he shall eat at my table, as one of the king's sons.

12 And Mephibosheth had a young [q]son, whose name was Micha. And all that dwelt in the house of Ziba were [r]servants unto Mephibosheth.

13 So Mephibosheth dwelt in Jerusalem: for [s]he did eat continually at the king's table; and was lame on both his feet.[4]

CHAP X.

David's messengers, sent to comfort Hanun, are villainously entreated, 1. The Ammonites and Syrians overcome, 6.

AND it came to pass after this, that the [a]king of the children of Ammon died, and Hanun his son reigned in his stead.

2 Then said David, I will [b]shew kindness unto Hanun the son of Nahash, [c]as his father shewed kindness unto me. And David sent to comfort him by the hand of his servants for his father. And David's servants came into the land of the children of Ammon.

3 And the princes of the children of Ammon said unto Hanun their lord, [*]Thinkest thou that David doth honour thy father, that he hath sent comforters unto thee? [d]hath not David rather sent his servants unto thee, to search the city, and to spy it out, and to overthrow it?

4 Wherefore Hanun took David's servants, [e]and shaved off[1] the one half of their beards, and [f]cut off their garments in the middle,[2] even to their buttocks, and sent them away.

5 When they told it unto David, he sent to meet them, because the men were greatly ashamed: and the king said, Tarry at [g]Jericho until your beards be grown, and then return.

6 ¶ And when the children of Ammon saw that they [h]stank before David, the children of Ammon sent and hired [i]the Syrians of Beth-rehob, and the Syrians of Zoba, twenty thousand footmen, and of king [k]Maacah a thousand men, and of [†]Ish-tob twelve thousand men.

7 And when David heard of it, he sent Joab, and [l]all the host of the mighty men.

8 And the children of Ammon came out, and put the battle in array at the entering in of the gate: and the Syrians of Zoba, and of [m]Rehob, and Ish-tob, and Maacah, were by themselves in the field.

9 When Joab saw that [n]the front of the battle was against him before and behind,[3] he chose of all the choice men of Israel, and put them in array against the Syrians:

10 And the rest of the people he delivered into the hand of Abishai his brother, that he might put them in array against the children of Ammon.

11 And he said, [o]If the Syrians be too strong for me, then thou shalt help me: but if the children of Ammon be too strong for thee, then I will come and help thee.

12 Be [p]of good courage, and let us [q]play the men for our people, and for the cities of our God: and [r]the LORD do that which seemeth him good.

13 And Joab drew nigh, and the people that were with him, unto the battle against the Syrians: and [s]they fled before him.

14 And when the children of Ammon saw that the Syrians were fled, then fled they also before Abishai, and entered into the city. So Joab returned from the children of Ammon, and came to Jerusalem.

15 ¶ And when the Syrians saw that they were smitten before Israel, they [t]gathered themselves together.

16 And [u]Hadarezer sent, and brought out the Syrians that were beyond [‡]the river:[4] and they came to Helam; and [§]Shobach the captain of the host of Hadarezer went before them.

sent for him, not out of any jealousy he had of him, or with any bad design upon him, but to show him kindness. Great men should not take a pleasure in the timorous approaches of their inferiors, (for the great God does not,) but should encourage them. (3.) He gives him, by grant from the crown, "all the land of Saul his father," that is, his paternal estate, which was forfeited by Ish-bosheth's rebellion, and added to his own revenue. This was a real favour, and more than giving him a kind word. True friendship will be generous. 2. Mephibosheth accepts this kindness with great humility and self-abasement. He was none of those that take every favour as a debt, and think every thing too little that their friends do for them; but, on the contrary, speaks as one amazed at the grants David made him, ver. 8, "What is thy servant that thou shouldest look upon such a dead dog as I am?" How does he villify himself! Though the son of a prince, and the grandson of a king, yet, his family being under guilt and wrath, and himself poor and lame, he calls himself "a dead dog" before David. Note, It is good to have the heart humble under humbling providences: if, when Divine Providence brings our condition down, divine grace brings our spirits down with it, we shall be easy. And those who thus humble themselves shall be exalted.—Henry.

CHAP. X. INSULT.—Ver. 4. Hanun basely abused David's ambassadors, like a man of a sordid, villanous spirit, that was fitter to rake a kennel than to wear a crown. If he had any reason to suspect that David's messengers came on a bad design, he had done prudently enough to be upon the reserve with them, and to dismiss them as soon as he could; but it is plain he only sought an occasion to put the utmost disgrace he could upon them, out of an antipathy to their king and country. They were themselves men of honour, and much more so, as they represented the prince that sent them; they and their reputation were under the special protection of the law of nations; they put a confidence in the Ammonites, and came among them unarmed; yet Hanun used them like rogues and vagabonds, and worse; "shaved off the one half of their beards, and cut off their garments in the midst," to expose them to the contempt and ridicule of his servants, that they might make sport with them, and that they might seem vile.

REPEATED VICTORIES OF DAVID.—The forces of Syria that were lately dispersed rallied again, and "gathered themselves together," ver. 15. Even the baffled cause will make head as long as there is any life in it; the enemies of the Son of David do so, Matt. xxii. 34; Rev. xix. 19. These, being conscious of their insufficiency, called in the aid of their allies and dependencies on the other side "the river," ver. 16, and, being thus recruited, they hoped to make their part good against Israel, but "they knew not the thoughts of the Lord, for he gathered them as sheaves into the floor;" see Mic. iv. 11—13. 1. The defeat of this attempt by the vigilance and valour of David, who, upon notice of their design, resolved not to stay till they attacked him, but went in person at the head of his army over Jordan, ver. 17, and in a pitched battle routed the Syrians, ver. 18, slew 7000 men, who belonged to 700 chariots, and 40,000 other soldiers, horse and foot, as appears by comparing 1 Chron. xix. 18. Their general was killed in the battle, and David came home in triumph, no doubt. 2. The consequence of this victory over the Syrians. (1.) David gained several tributaries, ver. 19. "The kings," or petty princes, that had been subject to Hadarezer, when they saw how powerful David was, very wisely "made peace with Israel," whom they found they could not make war with, "and served them" who were able to give them protection. Thus the promise made to Abraham, Gen. xv. 18, and repeated to Joshua, chap. i. 4, that the borders of Israel should extend to the river Euphrates, was performed at length. (2.) The Ammonites lost their old allies. "The Syrians feared to help the children of Ammon," not because they had an unrighteous cause, (justifying a crime which was a breach of the law of nations,) but because they found it was an unsuccessful cause. It is dangerous helping those that have God against them; for when they fall, their helpers will fall with them. Jesus Christ, the Son of David, sent his ambassadors, his apostles and ministers, after all his servants the prophets, to the Jewish church and nation: but they treated them shamefully, as Hanun did David's ambassadors, mocked them, abused them, slew them: and this was it that filled the measure of their iniquity, and brought upon them ruin without remedy, Matt. xxi. 35, 41; xxii. 7, compare 2 Chron. xxxvi. 16, for Christ takes the affronts and injuries done to his ministers as done to himself, and will avenge them accordingly.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—We ought to sympathise with the afflicted, and show gratitude to our friends; but nothing except vexation and disappointment can be expected by courting the friendship of ungodly men.—Treacherous minds are always suspicious: as they are conscious that they themselves mean to deceive when they can gain by it, they naturally suppose that others intend the same; and weak and wicked princes generally employ counsellors of this description.—It is the height of folly to awaken the resentment of those, by insult and contempt, whose power of taking vengeance cannot be thus diminished; and the fatal effects of rash affronts, though little feared, are often severely felt.—We should show respect and kindness to those who have been unjustly disgraced; yet it is needless to lay such affronts to heart: unmerited reproaches or contempt will soon wear away, and a clear conscience should be deemed sufficient to counterbalance the present uneasiness. Yet, by measures of this kind, valuable persons are often driven for a season into obscurity, to the loss of the public gathered all Israel together, and passed over Jordan, and came to Helam. And the Syrians set themselves in array against David, and fought with him.

18 And the Syrians [y]fled before Israel; and David slew the men of seven hundred chariots of the Syrians, and forty thousand [z]horsemen, and smote [a]Shobach the captain of their host, who died there.

19 And when all the kings that were [b]servants to Hadarezer saw that they were smitten before Israel, they made peace with Israel, and served them.[5] So the Syrians [c]feared to help the children of Ammon any more.

CHAP. XI.

Joab besiegeth Rabbah, 1. David committeth adultery with Bath-sheba, 2. Uriah is slain, 6. David taketh Bath-sheba to wife, 26.

AND it came to pass, [*]after the year [a]was expired, at the time when kings go forth to battle, that [b]David sent Joab, and his servants with him, and all Israel; and they destroyed the children of Ammon, and besieged [c]Rabbah.[1] But David tarried still at Jerusalem.

2 ¶ And it came to pass in an evening-tide, that David [d]arose from off his bed, and walked upon [e]the roof of the king's house: and from the roof [f]he saw a woman washing herself; and the woman was [g]very beautiful to look upon.

3 And David [h]sent and enquired after the woman. And one said, Is not this [†]Bath-sheba, the daughter of [‡]Eliam, the wife of [i]Uriah the Hittite?

4 And David [k]sent messengers, and took her; and she came in unto him, and [l]he lay with her; for [§]she was [m]purified from her uncleanness: and she returned unto her house.

5 ¶ And the woman conceived, and sent and told David, and said, [n]I am with child.[2]

6 And David sent to Joab, saying, [o]Send me Uriah the Hittite. And Joab sent Uriah to David.

7 And when Uriah was come unto him, David demanded of him [l]how Joab did, and how the people did, and how the war prospered.

8 And David said to Uriah, [p]Go down to thy house, and [q]wash thy feet. And Uriah departed out of the king's house, and [r]there [*]followed him [s]a mess of meat from the king.

9 But [t]Uriah slept at the door of the king's house with all the servants of his lord, and went not down to his house.[3]

10 And when they had told David, saying, Uriah went not down unto his house, David said unto Uriah, Camest not thou from thy journey? why then didst thou not go down unto thine house?

11 And Uriah said unto David, [u]The ark,[4] and Israel, and Judah, abide in tents; and [x]my lord Joab, and the servants of my lord, are encamped in the open fields; shall I then go into mine house, to eat and to drink, and to lie with my wife? [y]as thou livest, and as thy soul liveth, I will not do this thing.

12 And David said to Uriah, [z]Tarry here to-day also, and to-morrow I will let thee depart. So Uriah abode in Jerusalem that day, and the morrow.

13 And when David had called him, he did eat and drink before him; and he [a]made him drunk:[5] and at even he went out to lie on his bed with the servants of his lord, but went not down to his house.

14 ¶ And it came to pass in the morning, that David [b]wrote a letter to Joab, and sent it by the hand of Uriah.

15 And he wrote in the letter, saying, [c]Set ye Uriah in the forefront of the [†]hottest battle, and retire ye [‡]from him, that he may be smitten, [d]and die.[6]

16 And it came to pass, when Joab observed the city, that [*]he assigned Uriah unto a place where he knew that valiant men were.

17 And the men of the city went out, and fought with Joab: and [f]there fell some of the people of the servants of David; and Uriah the Hittite died also.

18 ¶ Then Joab sent and told David all the things concerning the war;

19 And charged the messenger, saying, When thou hast made an end of telling the matters of the war unto the king,

20 And if so be that the king's wrath arise, and he say unto thee, Wherefore approached ye so nigh unto the city when ye did fight? knew ye not that they would shoot from the wall?

21 Who smote [g]Abimelech the son of [h]Jerub-besheth?[7] did not a woman cast a piece of a millstone upon him from the wall, that he died in Thebez? why went ye nigh the wall? Then say thou, [i]Thy servant Uriah the Hittite is dead also.

22 ¶ So the messenger went, and came and shewed David all that Joab had sent him for.

23 And the messenger said unto David, Surely the men prevailed against us, and came out unto us into the field, and we were upon them even unto the entering of the gate.

24 And the shooters shot from off the wall upon thy servants; and some of the king's rather than of themselves.—They who are the most ready to commit injustice, are commonly the most averse to reconciliation: and confidence in number, strength, or valour, frequently buoys up men to their destruction; for, "though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not be unpunished." But a good cause, and a single dependence upon the Lord, afford the surest indications of success: and when valiant men are cordial to the interests of their country, and are defending its civil and religious liberties, their animation and presence of mind often increase in proportion to dangers and difficulties.—Scott.

CHAP. XI. TEMPTATION.—Observe the occasions of this sin. 1. David's neglect of his business. When he should have been abroad with his army in the field fighting the battles of the Lord, he devolved the care upon others, and he himself "tarried still at Jerusalem," ver. 1. To the war with the Syrians David went in person, chap. x. 17. Had he been now at his post, at the head of his forces, he had been out of the way of this temptation. When we are out of the way of our duty, we are in temptation. 2. Love of ease, and the indulgence of a slothful temper. "He came off his bed at evening-tide," ver. 2, there he had dozed away the afternoon in idleness, which he should have spent in some exercise for his own improvement, or the good of others. He used to pray, not only morning and evening, but at noon, in the day of his trouble: it is to be feared he had, this noon, omitted it. Idleness gives great advantage to the tempter. Standing waters gather filth. The bed of sloth oft proves the bed of lust. 3. A wandering eye. "He saw a woman washing herself," probably from some ceremonial pollution, according to the law. The sin came in at the eye, as Eve's did. Perhaps, he sought to see her; at least, he did not practise according to his own prayer, "Turn away mine eyes from beholding vanity;" and his son's caution in a like case, "Look not thou on the wine when it is red." Either he had not, like Job, "made a covenant with his eyes," or, at this time, he had forgotten it.

SIN GROWING IN AGGRAVATION.—Ver. 5. It is resolved, in David's breast, (which one would think could never possibly have harboured so vile a thought,) that Uriah must die; that innocent, valiant, gallant man, who was ready to die for his prince's honour, must die by his prince's hand. David has sinned, and Bath-sheba has sinned, and both against him, and therefore he must die; David determines he must. Is this the man whose heart smote him, because he had cut of Saul's skirt? Quantum mutatis ab illo!—But ah, how changed! Is this he that executed judgment and justice to all his people? How can he now do so unjust a thing? See how fleshly lusts war against the soul, and what devastations they make in that war; how they blind the eyes, harden the hearts, scar the conscience, and deprive men of all sense of honour and justice. "Whoso committeth adultery with a woman, lacketh understanding," and quite loses it; he that doth it "destroys his own soul," Prov. vi. 32. But as the eye of the adulterer, so the hand of the murderer, seeks concealment, Job xxiv. 14, 15. Works of darkness hate the light. When David bravely slew Goliath, it was done publicly, and he gloried in it; but when he basely slew Uriah, it must be done clandestinely, for he is ashamed of it, and well he may. Who would do a thing that he dare not own? The Devil having, as a poisonous serpent, put it into David's heart to murder Uriah, as a subtle serpent, he puts it into his head how to do it. Not as Absalom slew Amnon, by commanding his servants to assassinate him, or as Ahab slew Naboth, by suborning witnesses to accuse him, but by exposing him to the enemy; a way of doing it, which, perhaps, would not seem so odious to conscience, and the world, because soldiers expose themselves of course; if Uriah had not been in that dangerous post, another must; he has (as we say) a chance for his life; if he fight stoutly, he may, perhaps, come off; and if he die, it is in the field of honour, where a soldier would choose to die; and yet all this will not save it from being a wilful murder, of malice prepense.—Henry.

THE AWFUL LESSON.—Ver. 27. But why was this permitted? or why was it recorded? It is certain that thousands through succeeding generations have, by this fall of "the man after God's own heart," been prejudiced against true religion, hardened in infidelity, or emboldened in blasphemy: while others have thence taken occasion to commit habitual wickedness under a religious profession, and with presumptuous confidence, to the still greater discredit of the gospel. It should, however, be considered, that all these have been, previously, either open enemies to true religion, or hypocritical pretenders to it: and it is the righteous purpose of God, that stumblingblocks should be thrown in the way of such men, that they "may stumble, and fall, and be snared, and taken, and perish:" it is his holy will thus to detect the secret malignity of their hearts, and to make way for the display of his justice in their condemnation.—On the other hand, thousands, from age to age, have by this awful example been rendered more suspicious of themselves, more watchful, more afraid of temptation, more dependent on the Lord, and more fervent in prayer; and by means of David's fall, have themselves been preserved from falling. Numbers, who have been overcome by temptation, have thus been preserved from despair. Every upright soul will eventually derive benefit from the impartial record of this event; and none will finally be injured by it, except those who desire an excuse for sin, or an objection to the religion of the Bible. Bees will collect honey, and spiders poison from the same plants, according to their different natures. No excuse can be made for David; he attempted none for himself: and much self-knowledge is requisite to account for his conduct, or to deem it possible that a man, who had so long enjoyed 25 Then David said unto the messenger, Thus shalt thou say unto Joab, Let not this thing [s]displease thee, [k]for the sword devoureth [t]one as well as another: [l]make thy battle more strong against the city, and overthrow it: and encourage thou him.

26 ¶ And when the wife of Uriah heard that Uriah her husband was dead, [m]she mourned for her husband.

27 And when the mourning[s] was past, David sent and [n]fetched her to his house, and she became his wife, and bare him a son. [o]But the thing that David had done *displeased the LORD.

Nathan's parable, 1. David confesseth his sin, and is pardoned, 7. Solomon is born, 24. Rabbah is taken, 26.

AND [a]the LORD sent Nathan [b]unto David. And [c]he came unto him, and said unto him, [d]There were two men in one city; the one rich, and the other poor.

2 The rich man had [e]exceeding many flocks and herds:

3 But the poor man had nothing, save [f]one little ewe lamb, which he had bought and nourished up: and it grew up together with him, and with his children; it did eat of his *own meat, and drank of his own cup, and [g]lay in his bosom, and was unto him as a daughter.

4 And there came [h]a traveller unto the rich man, and he spared to take of his own flock, and of his own herd, to dress for the wayfaring man that was come unto him; but [i]took the poor man's lamb, and dressed it for the man that was come to him.

5 And [k]David's anger was greatly kindled against the man; and he said to Nathan, [l]As the LORD liveth, the man that hath done this thing †shall surely die:

6 And he shall [m]restore the lamb fourfold,[1] because he did this thing, and [n]because he had no pity.

7 ¶ And Nathan said to David, [o]Thou art the man.[2] Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, [p]I anointed thee king over Israel, and [q]I delivered thee out of the hand of Saul;

8 And I gave thee thy master's house, and thy [r]master's wives into thy bosom, and [s]gave thee the house of Israel and of Judah; and, if that had been too little, [t]I would moreover have given unto thee such and such things.

9 Wherefore hast thou [u]despised the commandment of the LORD, [x]to do evil in his sight? [y]thou hast killed Uriah the Hittite with the sword, and hast taken his wife to be thy wife, and hast slain him with the sword of the children of Ammon.

10 Now therefore [z]the sword[3] shall never depart from thine house; [a]because thou hast despised me, and [b]hast taken the wife of Uriah the Hittite to be thy wife.

11 Thus saith the LORD, Behold, [c]I will raise up evil[4] against thee out of thine own house, and [d]I will take thy wives before thine eyes, and give them unto thy neighbour, and he shall lie with thy wives in the sight of this sun.

12 For thou didst it [e]secretly: but I will do this thing before all Israel, and before the sun.

13 And [f]David said unto Nathan, [g]I have sinned against the LORD. And Nathan said unto David, [h]The LORD also hath put away thy sin; [i]thou shalt not die.

14 Howbeit, because [k]by this deed thou hast given great occasion to the enemies of the LORD to blaspheme, [l]the child also that is born unto thee shall surely die.

15 ¶ And Nathan departed unto his house: and the LORD [m]struck the child that Uriah's wife bare unto David, and it was very sick.

16 David therefore [n]besought God[5] for the child; and David ‡fasted, and went in, and [o]lay all night upon the earth.

17 And [p]the elders of his house arose, and went to him, to raise him up from the earth: but he would not, neither did he eat bread with them.

18 And it came to pass on the seventh day,[6] that the child died. And the servants of David feared to tell him that the child was dead: for they said, Behold, while the child was yet alive, we spake unto him, and he would not hearken unto our voice: how will he then [s]vex himself, if we tell him that the child is dead?

19 But when David saw that his servants whispered, David perceived that the child was dead: therefore David said unto his servants, Is the child dead? And they said, He is dead.

20 Then David [q]arose from the earth, and washed, and [r]anointed himself, and changed his apparel, and came into [s]the house of the LORD, and worshipped: then he came to his own house; and when he required, they set bread before him, and he did eat.

21 Then said his servants unto him, [t]What thing is this that thou hast done? thou didst fast and weep for the child, while it was alive; but when the child was dead, thou didst rise and eat bread.

22 And he said, While the child was yet alive, [u]I fasted and wept: for I said, Who can tell whether God will be gracious[7] to me, that the child may live?

communion with God, in the highest exercise of devotion, could commit such enormous crimes, and continue so long impenitent. But the Lord's design in leaving him to himself was doubtless wise, righteous, and merciful; and he can and will overrule it for great good to those who fear and love him. The glory of all the good is his due; the blame of all the evil, original or consequent, belongs to those who commit it.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Ver. 1—13.—A deep conviction, that the human heart, even the heart of every man, is "deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked," is of vast importance to the due exercise of repentance, faith, and every christian grace: and in order to impress this humiliating conviction on the minds of those who attend to the word of God, a few of his most eminent servants have been left to fall, in such a manner as fully to prove that every evil dwells in each of us; and that in circumstances of concurring temptations, we are capable of committing any crime; even that which we now most dread and detest!—Scott.

CHAP. XII. NATHAN'S PARABLE.—Ver. 1—6. When God was displeased with his servant David, he did not immediately inflict heavy judgments upon him; but he sent a prophet, to call him to repentance. Nathan did not go of his own accord and in his own name, to reprove David for his offences: but when sent by the Lord, he plainly delivered his message; without being induced by David's royal authority, his previous eminent character as a saint and psalmist, or his own peculiar affection for him, to conceal or mutilate it. It is probable that this took place soon after the birth of David's son by Bath-sheba; when the scandalous transactions would begin to be generally noticed. But whatever others whispered and circulated, David seems not to have been in any due measure sensible of his exceeding wickedness, till the Lord thus awakened his conscience.—In order to insinuate the necessary truths, without exciting the resistance of David's partial self-love, and to induce him to give sentence against himself before he was aware, Nathan introduced his message with a parable. There scarcely ever was any thing more calculated, on the one hand to awaken emotions of sympathy, and on the other, those of indignation, than the case here supposed; and the several circumstances, by which the heart must be interested in the poor man's case, and by which the unfeeling oppression of his rich neighbour was aggravated. Several expressions, however, might have excited a suspicion, that more was intended than merely to plead the cause of an injured man against his oppressor: yet David evidently supposed it to be matter of fact, till Nathan made the application. The rich man, who had many flocks and herds, represented David with his many wives and concubines: the poor man, with his ewe lamb, which was so tenderly brought up by him, was Uriah with his one well-beloved wife; and the traveller may mean David's sensual lust, which nothing could satisfy but the wife of Uriah. Yet this parable, apposite and beautiful as it was, pointed out only a small part of the enormity of David's conduct. Uriah's loyal and gallant services, and David's ingratitude and treachery, with the murder of him and his fellow-soldiers, were not so much as alluded to. His injury to Uriah and Bath-sheba in the crime of adultery alone were shadowed forth: for perhaps the prophet meant to bring him by degrees to a view of his exceeding sinfulness, and would not make the case too exact in all particulars, lest he should suspect his intentions, and be kept from giving sentence against himself. David, forgetful of his own crimes, was fired with indignation against the imaginary offender; and with a solemn oath condemned him, not only to make legal restitution, but also to suffer death, or at least declared that he was deserving of death.—Scott.

DAVID'S EXERCISE OF HEART UPON HIS CHILD'S DEATH.—David's servants thought it strange that he should afflict himself so for the sickness of the child, and yet take the death of it so easily, and asked him the reason of it, ver. 21. In answer to which, he gives this plain account of his conduct, 1. That, while the child was alive, he thought it his duty to importune the divine favour towards it, ver. 22. Nathan had indeed said the child should die, but, for aught that he knew, the threatening might be conditional, as that concerning Hezekiah: upon his great humiliation and earnest prayer, he that had so often "heard the voice of his weeping" might be pleased to reverse the sentence, and spare the child; "Who can tell whether God will yet be gracious to me?" God gives us leave to be earnest with him in prayer for particular blessings, from a confidence in his power and general mercy, though we have no particular promise to build upon: we cannot be sure, yet let us pray, "for who can tell but God will be gracious to us" in this or that particular? When our relations and friends have fallen sick, the prayer of faith has prevailed much; while there is life there is hope, and while there is hope there is room for prayer. 2. That, the child being dead, he thought it as much his duty to be satisfied in the divine disposal concerning it, ver. 23. "Now, wherefore should I fast?" Two things checked his grief, (1.) "I cannot bring him back again;" and again, "He shall not return to me." Those that are dead are out of the reach of prayer; nor can our tears profit them; we can neither weep nor pray them back to this life. Wherefore, then, should we fast? "To what purpose is this waste?" Yet David fasted and wept for Jonathan when he was dead, in honour to him. (2.) "I shall go to him." First, To him, to the grave. Note, The consideration of our own death should moderate our sorrow at the death of our relations. It is the common lot; instead of mourning for their death, we should think of our own: and, whatever loss we have of them now, we shall Amnon loving Tamar, ravisheth her, 1; he hateth her, and turneth her away, 15. Absalom killeth Amnon, 23; and fleeth, 37.

AND it came to pass after this, that [a]Absalom the son of David had [b]a fair sister, whose name was [c]Tamar; and Amnon the son of David [d]loved her.

2 And Amnon was so [e]vexed, that he fell sick for his sister Tamar; for she was a virgin; and [*]Amnon thought it hard for him to do any thing to her.

3 But Amnon had [f]a friend, whose name was Jonadab the son of [g]Shimeah David's brother: and Jonadab was a very [h]subtile man.

4 And he said unto him, [i]Why art thou, being the king's son, [†]lean [‡]from day to day? wilt thou not tell me? And Amnon said unto him, [k]I love Tamar, [l]my brother Absalom's sister.

5 And Jonadab said unto him,[1] [m]Lay thee down on thy bed, and make thyself sick: and when thy father cometh to see thee, say unto him, I pray thee, let my sister Tamar come, and give me meat, and dress the meat in my sight, that I may see it, and eat it at her hand.

6 ¶ So Amnon lay down, and made himself sick: and when the king was come to see him, Amnon said unto the king, I pray thee, let Tamar my sister come, and [n]make me a couple of cakes[2] in my sight, that I may eat at her hand.

7 Then David sent home to Tamar, saying, Go now to thy brother Amnon's house, and dress him meat.

8 So Tamar went to her brother Amnon's house; and he was laid down. And she took [§]flour, and kneaded it, and made cakes in his sight, and did bake the cakes.

9 And she took a pan, and poured them out before him; but he refused to eat. [o]And Amnon said, Have out all men from me. And they went out every man from him.

10 And Amnon said unto Tamar, Bring the meat into the chamber, that I may eat of thine hand. And Tamar took the cakes which she had made, and brought them into the chamber to Amnon her brother.

11 And when she had brought them unto him to eat, he took hold of her, and said unto her, [p]Come, lie with me, my sister.

12 And she answered him, Nay, my brother, do not [†]force me; for [*]no such thing ought to be done in Israel: do not thou this [q]folly.

13 And I, whither shall I cause my shame to go? and as for thee, thou shalt be as one of the fools in Israel. [r]Now therefore, I pray thee, speak unto the king; for he will not withhold me from thee.

14 Howbeit he would not hearken unto her voice; but, being stronger than she, [s]forced her, and lay with her.

15 ¶ Then Amnon [t]hated her [†]exceedingly;[3] so that the hatred wherewith he hated her was greater than the love wherewith he had loved her. And Amnon said unto her, Arise, be gone.

16 And she said unto him, There is no cause: this evil in sending me away is greater[4] than the other that thou didst unto me. But he would not hearken unto her.

17 Then he called his servant that ministered unto him, and said, Put now this woman out from me, and bolt the door after her.

18 And she had [u]a garment of divers colours upon her: for with such robes were the king's daughters that were virgins apparelled. Then his servant brought her out, and bolted the door after her.

[9] Some are of opinion that this royal city of Rabbah was called the city of waters; either because it stood on a river, or was encompassed with water for its defence. But Junius renders the words, "he cut off the waters which supplied the town;" which translation Josephus seems to approve, by telling us that Joab seized on all the aqueducts which led to the city.—STACKHOUSE.

[3] It is no uncommon thing for men of violent and irregular passions to pass from one extreme to another. The shame which accompanies a bad action, the remorse, repentance, and many bad consequences which immediately pursue it, make a recoil in every man's temper. Amnon now hated his sister when he should have hated himself; and, as his outrageous treatment of her made it impossible for his guilt to be concealed, so God seems to have abandoned him to the tumult of his intemperate mind, on purpose to make his punishment of David's adultery more marked, and the prophet's prediction of raising up evil to him out of his own house (xii. 11) more conspicuous.—STACKHOUSE.

die shortly, and go to them. Secondly, To him, to heaven, to a state of blessedness, which even the Old Testament saints had some expectation of. Godly parents have great reason to hope, concerning their children that die in infancy, that it is well with their souls in the other world; for "the promise is to us and to our seed," which shall be performed to those that do not put a bar in their own door, as infants do not.

BIRTH OF SOLOMON.—The child was called Solomon, peaceful, because his birth was a token of God's being at peace with them, because of the prosperity which was entailed upon him, and because he was to be a type of Christ, the Prince of peace. God had removed one son from them, but now gave them another instead of him, like "Seth instead of Abel," Gen. iv. 25. Thus God often balances the griefs of his people with comforts in the same thing wherein he hath afflicted them, setting the one over against the other. "The Lord loved him," ver. 24, and ver. 25, ordered him, by the prophet Nathan, to be called Jedidiah, Beloved of the Lord; though a seed of evil-doers, (for such David and Bath-sheba were,) yet so well-ordered was the covenant, and the crown entailed by it, that it took away all attainders, and corruption of blood, signifying that those who were by nature children of wrath and disobedience, should, by the covenant of grace, not only be reconciled, but made favourites.—Henry.

CHAP. XIII. AMNON'S INCEST.—Ver. 1, 2. Nathan's word began to take effect not very long after it was delivered. David seems to have been too indulgent of his children: probably their mothers had a great share in their education, and some of these instilled into them bad principles; which are natural effects of polygamy. Yet, they had been restrained from open wickedness by his example, influence, and occasional instructions, until he had committed those crimes which have been considered. Notwithstanding David's repentance, his sons, now grown up, would naturally consider his conduct as a license to their youthful inclinations, and conclude that he could not greatly censure them, after he had set them such an example. Thus he might clearly trace the sins of his children from his own misconduct, and this would increase the anguish of the chastisement.—Tamar was Amnon's sister by the same father, but of another mother. If Amnon had not been secretly habituated to vice, surely he never could, in the first instance, have given way to so unnatural a passion! By gazing upon Tamar's beauty, his concupiscence was excited, and, being indulged, it gained an entire ascendancy. He was not restrained from his base purpose by the fear of God, by conscience, shame, regard to the peace or favour of his father, or to the reputation, virtue, or comfort of Tamar, or any foresight of evil consequences; but, by reason of her modesty, and the care which was taken of her, he could not find an opportunity of getting her into his power. His passion therefore preyed upon his spirits, and impaired his health. Amnon deemed Jonadab his friend, because he was his flatterer, and the caterer for his lusts. He was "a very subtle man;" one very wise as to this present world; or rather, a very crafty courtier, who readily discerned the inclinations of his superiors, and was very ingenious in devising means for their gratification. Observing Amnon to look more and more languid, one day after another, he suspected the cause, and intimated to him, that a person of his rank might obtain his desires if he went about it: and thus he drew from him the shameful secret. Had he not interposed, probably Amnon's passion might have been suppressed, and at length supplanted by an affection for some other object. But when Jonadab understood the state of his mind, he speedily put him in a way of obtaining his wishes. Amnon was the heir apparent of the crown: David was growing old, and, probably, showed Jonadab but little favour, though he was his nephew, ver. 32; he therefore paid court to Amnon; and supposed that his rank and authority would bear him out in any crime which he was disposed to commit.—Scott.

ABSALOM'S VENGEANCE.—Ver. 28, 29. 1. Absalom's entertainment was very plentiful; for he resolves that they shall all be merry with wine; at least concludes that Amnon will be so, for he knew that he was apt to drink to excess. But, 2. The orders he gave to his servants concerning Amnon, that they should mingle his blood with his wine, were very barbarous. Had he challenged him, and, in reliance upon the goodness of his cause, and the justice of God, fought him himself, though that had been bad enough, yet it had been more honourable and excusable; (our ancient law, in some cases, allowed trial by battle;) but to murder him, as he did, was to copy Cain's example, only that the reason made a difference; Abel was slain for his righteousness, Amnon for his wickedness. Observe the aggravations of this sin: (1.) He would have Amnon slain, "when his heart was merry with wine," and he was, consequently, least apprehensive of danger, least able to resist it, and also least fit to go out of the world; as if his malice aimed to destroy both soul and body, not giving him time to say, "Lord, have mercy upon me." What a dreadful surprise has death been to many, whose hearts have been "overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness!" (2.) His servants must be employed to do it, and so involved in the guilt. He was to give the word of command, "Smite Amnon;" and then they in obedience to him, and, upon presumption that his authority would bear them out, must "kill him." What an impious defiance does he bid to the divine law, when, though the command of God is express, "Thou shalt not kill," he bids them kill Amnon, with this warrant, "'Have not I commanded you?' That is enough; 'Be courageous,' and fear neither God nor man." Those servants are ill taught, (and have wicked masters,) who obey, in contradiction to God. Those are too obsequious, that will and rent her garment of divers colours that was on her, and [y]laid her hand on her head, and went on crying.

20 And Absalom her brother said unto her, Hath [‡]Amnon thy brother been with thee? [z]but hold now thy peace, my sister: he is thy brother; [§]regard not this thing. So Tamar remained [‖]desolate in her brother Absalom's house.

21 ¶ But when king David heard of all these things, [a]he was very wroth.

22 And Absalom [b]spake unto his brother Amnon [c]neither good nor bad: for Absalom [d]hated Amnon, because he had forced his sister Tamar.

23 ¶ And it came to pass after two full years, that Absalom had [e]sheep-shearers in Baal-hazor, which is beside Ephraim: and Absalom [f]invited all the king's sons.

24 And Absalom came to the king, and said, Behold now, thy servant hath sheep-shearers; [g]let the king, I beseech thee, and his servants, go with thy servant.

25 And the king said to Absalom, Nay, my son, let us not all now go, lest we be chargeable unto thee. And he [h]pressed him: howbeit he would not go, but [i]blessed him.

26 Then said Absalom, If not, I pray thee, [k]let my brother Amnon go with us. And the king said unto him, Why should he go with thee?

27 But Absalom pressed him, that he let Amnon and all the king's sons go with him.

28 ¶ Now Absalom had [l]commanded his servants, saying, Mark ye now when Amnon's [m]heart is merry with wine, and when I say unto you, Smite Amnon; then kill him, [n]fear not: [*]have not I commanded you? be courageous, and be [†]valiant.

29 And the [o]servants of Absalom did unto Amnon as Absalom had commanded. Then all the king's sons arose, and every man [‡]gat him up upon his [p]mule,[5] and fled.

30 ¶ And it came to pass, while they were in the way, that tidings came to David, saying, Absalom hath slain all the king's sons,[6] and there is not one of them left.

31 Then the king [q]arose, and tare his garments, and lay on the earth; and [r]all his servants stood by with their clothes rent.

32 And [s]Jonadab, the son of [t]Shimeah David's brother, answered and said, Let not my lord suppose that they have slain all the young men the king's sons; for Amnon only is dead: for by the [§]appointment of Absalom this hath been [‖]determined, from the day that he forced his sister Tamar.

33 Now therefore [u]let not my lord the king take the thing to his heart, to think that all the king's sons are dead: for Amnon only is dead.

34 But [x]Absalom fled. And the young man that kept the watch lifted up his eyes, and looked, and, behold, there came much people by the way of the hill side behind him.

35 And Jonadab said unto the king, Behold, the king's sons come: [*]as thy servant said, so it is.

36 And it came to pass, as soon as he had made an end of speaking, that, behold, the king's sons came, and lifted up their voice, and wept: and the king also and all his servants wept [†]very sore.

37 ¶ But Absalom fled, and went to [y]Talmai,[7] the son of [‡]Ammihud, king of Geshur. And David mourned for his son every day.

38 So Absalom fled, and went to [z]Geshur, and was there three years.

39 And [a]the soul of king David [§]longed to go forth unto Absalom: for he was [b]comforted concerning Amnon, seeing he was dead.

NOW [a]Joab the son of Zeruiah perceived that the king's heart was [b]toward Absalom.

2 And Joab sent [c]to Tekoah, and fetched thence a wise woman, and said unto her, I pray thee, feign thyself to be a mourner, and put on now [d]mourning apparel, and anoint not thyself with oil, but be as a woman that had a long time mourned for the dead:

3 And come to the king, and speak on this manner unto him. So Joab [e]put the words in her mouth.

4 ¶ And when the woman of Tekoah spake to the king,[1] she [f]fell on her face to the ground, and did obeisance, and said, [*]Help, O king.

5 And the king said unto her, What aileth thee? And she answered, [g]I am indeed a widow woman, and mine husband is dead.

6 And thy handmaid had two sons, [h]and [†]they two strove together in the field, and there was none to part them, but the one smote the other, and slew him.

7 And, behold, [i]the whole family is risen against thine handmaid, and they said, Deliver him that smote his brother, that we may kill him, for the life of his brother whom he slew; and we will destroy the heir also: and [k]so they shall [l]quench my coal which is left,[2] and shall not leave to my husband neither name nor remainder [‡]upon the earth.

8 And the king said unto the woman, Go to thine house, and [m]I will give charge concerning thee.

damn their souls to please their masters, whose big words cannot secure them from God's wrath. Masters must always command their servants, as those that know they also have a Master in heaven. (3.) He did it in the presence of "all the king's sons," of whom it is said, chap. viii. 18, that they were "chief rulers;" so that it was an affront to public justice, which they had the administration of, and to the king, his father, whom they represented, and a contempt of that sword which should have been a terror to his evil deeds; while his evil deeds, on the contrary, were a terror to them that bare it. (4.) There is reason to suspect that Absalom did this, not only to revenge his sister's quarrel, but to make way for himself to the throne; which he was ambitious of, and which he would stand fair for, if Amnon the eldest son was taken off. When the word of command was given, Absalom's servants failed not to execute it, being buoyed up with an opinion, that their master, being now next heir to the crown, (for Chileab was dead, as Bishop Patrick thinks,) would save them from harm. Now the threatened sword is drawn in David's house, which should not depart from it. First, His eldest son falls by it, himself being, by his wickedness, the cause of it, and his father, by his connivance, accessary to it. Secondly, All his sons flee from it, and come home in terror, not knowing how far their brother Absalom's bloody design might extend. See what mischief sin makes in families.—Henry.

Practical Observations.—Sensual love soon changes into hatred, and concupiscence into loathing: nor can it reasonably be expected that they who make no scruple of debauching the persons for whom they pretend affection, will feel any remorse at deserting them with cruelty and disdain, at exposing them to shame and contempt, or at leaving them to all the horrors of penury or prostitution. Let no one ever expect better treatment from those who are capable of attempting to seduce them.—But whatever anguish and distress may result from injuries received, nothing will eventually harm us, except our own iniquity; and it is better to suffer the greatest wrong, than to commit the least sin, though apparently with impunity and without rebuke. It is every one's duty to comfort those who are in distress: and generally it is most advisable for injured persons to be quiet, and leave their cause with God. When less atrocious crimes escape punishment from man, more and greater will be committed: and the magistrate's anger against heinous offences should stimulate him to enforce the laws without respect to persons: but all others must learn to bear every injury without seeking to revenge themselves; and if mild expostulations and prayers will not prevail, they must quietly leave the event to God.—Hatred and revenge, however, possess the hearts of ungodly men: and some are so artful and malicious, that they defer their vengeance, and cover it with the appearance of affection, till they have an opportunity of executing it with more determined malignity.—Often have festive interviews, and seasons of sensual indulgence, been the chosen scenes for assassinations and massacres; and men have been sent into the eternal world from the midst of riot and excess! Such is human nature, left to itself, armed with power, and emboldened by prosperity: what need then have we to pray for converting grace!—no crime is so great or evident, that men will not be found daring enough to commit, in order to please their superiors: but, alas! their command will not bear out the guilty at the day of judgment, for violating the law of God.—Evil tidings are generally enhanced: yet the imaginary calamity proves a real affliction for the time, and may serve the purpose of an humiliating chastisement.—Children are always uncertain comforts: but indulged children will surely prove trials to pious parents, whose foolish fondness induces them to neglect their duty to God: yet parental affection can scarcely be extinguished by any degree of misconduct. But the case of parents is very deplorable, when the children copy their conduct in the crimes which they perpetrate; and when it is nevertheless their duty to punish them with great severity for those very imitations! —Scott.

CHAP. XIV. Joab's Policy.—Here is, 1. Joab's design to get Absalom recalled out of banishment, his crime pardoned, and his attainder reversed, ver. 1. Joab made himself very busy in this affair. 1. As a courtier, that was studious, by all ways possible, to ingratiate himself with his prince, and improve his interest in his favour; he "perceived that the king's heart was towards Absalom," and that, the heat of his displeasure being over, he still retained his old affection for him, and only wanted a friend to court him to be reconciled, and to contrive for him how he might do it, without impeaching the honour of his justice. Joab, finding how David stood affected, undertook this good office. 2. As a friend to Absalom, whom, perhaps, he had a particular kindness for, at least looked upon as the rising sun, to whom it was his interest to recommend himself. He plainly foresaw that his father would, at length, be reconciled to him, and therefore thought he should make both his friends, if he were instrumental to bring it about. 3. As a statesman, and one concerned for the public welfare. He knew how much Absalom was the darling of the people, and if David should die while he was in banishment, it might occasion a civil war between those that were for him and those that were against him; for it is probable, that, though all Israel loved his person, yet they were much divided upon his case. 4. As one who was himself a delinquent, by the murder of Abner; he was conscious to himself of the guilt of blood, and that he was himself obnoxious to public justice, and therefore, whatever favour he could procure to be shown to Absalom, would corroborate his reprieve.—Henry.

9 And the woman of Tekoah said unto the king, My lord, O king, [n]the iniquity be on me, and on my father's house: [o]and the king and his throne be guiltless.

10 And the king said, Whosoever saith ought unto thee, bring him to me, and he shall not touch thee any more.

11 Then said she, I pray thee, [p]let the king remember the LORD thy God, that [q]thou wouldest not suffer [r]the revengers of blood to destroy any more, lest they destroy my son. And he said, [s]As the LORD liveth, there shall [t]not one hair of thy son fall to the earth.

12 Then the woman said, [u]Let thine handmaid, I pray thee, [v]speak one word unto my lord the king. And he said, [w]Say on.

13 And the woman said, [x]Wherefore then hast thou thought such a thing [y]against [z]the people of God? for the king doth speak this thing as one which is faulty, [a]in that the king doth not fetch home again his banished.

14 For [b]we must needs die, and are [c]as water spilt upon the ground, which cannot be gathered up again; [d]neither doth [e]God respect any person: yet doth he [f]devise means, that his banished be not expelled from him.

15 Now therefore that I am come to speak of this thing unto my lord the king, it is because the people have made me afraid:[4] and thy handmaid said, I will now speak unto the king; it may be that the king will perform the request of his handmaid.

16 For the king will hear, to deliver his handmaid out of the hand of the man that would destroy me and my son together out of the inheritance of God.

17 Then thine handmaid said, The word of my lord the king shall now be [*]comfortable: for [g]as an angel of God, so is my lord the king [†]to [h]discern good and bad: therefore the LORD thy God will be with thee.

18 Then the king answered and said unto the woman, [i]Hide not from me, I pray thee, the thing that I shall ask thee. And the woman said, Let my lord the king now speak.

19 And the king said, Is not the hand [j]of Joab with thee in all this? And the woman answered and said, [k]As thy soul liveth, my lord the king, none can [l]turn to the right hand or to the left from ought that my lord the king hath spoken:[5] for thy servant Joab, he bade me, and [m]he put all these words in the mouth of thine handmaid:

20 To [n]fetch about this form of speech hath thy servant Joab done this thing: and my lord is wise, [o]according to the wisdom of an angel of God, [p]to know all things that are in the earth.

21 ¶ And the king said unto Joab, Behold now, [q]I have done this thing: go therefore, bring the young man Absalom again.

22 And Joab fell to the ground on his face, and bowed himself, and [‡]thanked the king: and Joab said, To-day thy servant knoweth that [r]I have found grace in thy sight, my lord, O king, in that the king hath fulfilled the request of [§]his servant.

23 So Joab arose and went to [s]Geshur, and brought Absalom to Jerusalem.

24 And the king said, Let him turn to his own house, and [t]let him not see my face. So Absalom returned to his own house, and saw not the king's face.

25 ¶ [‖]But in all Israel there was none to be so much praised as Absalom for his beauty: [u]from the sole of his foot even to the crown of his head there was no blemish in him.

26 And [x]when he polled his head, (for it was at every year's end that he polled it: because the hair was heavy on him, therefore he polled it:) he weighed the hair of his head at [y]two hundred shekels after the king's weight.[6]

27 ¶ And unto Absalom there were [z]born three sons, and one daughter,[7] whose name was [a]Tamar: she was a woman of a fair countenance.

28 ¶ So Absalom dwelt two full years in Jerusalem, and saw not the king's face.

29 Therefore Absalom sent for Joab, to have sent him to the king; [b]but he would not come to him: and when he sent again the second time, he would not come.

30 Therefore he said unto his servants,[8] See, Joab's field is near [*]mine, and he hath barley there; [c]go and set it on fire. [d]And Absalom's servants set the field on fire.

31 Then Joab arose, and came to Absalom unto his house, and said unto him, Wherefore have thy servants set my field on fire?

32 And Absalom answered Joab, Behold, I sent unto thee,[9] saying, Come hither, that I may send thee to the king, to say, Wherefore am I come from Geshur? [e]it had been good for me to have been there still: now therefore let me see the king's face; and [f]if there be any iniquity in me, let him kill me.

33 So Joab came to the king, and told him: and when he had called for Absalom, he came to the king, and bowed himself on his face to the ground before the king: and the king [g]kissed Absalom.

THE WISE WOMAN.—Ver. 1. The woman, having thus far carried her point, proceeded, gradually and ambiguously, to apply David's concession to the case of Absalom; and her speech was most artfully devised, so that she might retract, or be more explicit, according as he took it. She intimated that the king's severity to his son was injurious to the people of God; and that he was wanting in his duty to the kingdom, in delaying to recall him: as if Absalom had been so excellent a young man, that all the hopes of Israel centred in him! She represented his flight to Geshur as a banishment, which had already been too severe a punishment of his offence. She pleaded the certainty of death, and the impossibility of recalling the dead to life again; by which she would either insinuate that Amnon would have died in some other way, if Absalom had not slain him; or that the punishment of Absalom would not bring him to life again; or that, as David himself must at length die, it was proper that Absalom should be recalled to succeed him. But whatever she meant, it was nothing to the purpose: for God hath commanded the death of the murderer, which exceedingly tends to the preservation of the life of man, though it cannot raise the dead; and if such an argument were of any force, no malefactor must be put to death!—She also pleaded the mercy of God, in sparing, and re-admitting sinful men into his presence and favour, though justly banished from it; and yet he is no respecter of persons: in which she seems to have referred to the return of the manslayer to his inheritance, at the death of the high priest.—The marginal reading, "because God hath not taken away," &c., seems to be the proper translation; and it is intimated, that as God had spared Absalom, David ought to pardon him.—But God pardons none, to the dishonour of his law and justice; nor any who are impenitent, or to the encouragement of crimes, and the injury of others. Perhaps she meant to hint, that the people expressed their dissatisfaction with Absalom's banishment so openly, that they made her afraid of an insurrection: but she purposely so confounded the feigned cause of her son with that of Absalom, that part of her address is obscure. Whilst, however, she ventured to censure David for not gratifying himself; she took care repeatedly to give him flattering commendations for his wisdom and goodness, which in such a cause abundantly compensated for the ambiguity of her discourse, and the weakness of her arguments: and, to do her justice, her ingenuity in pleading so bad a cause was admirable.—Scott.

ABSALOM RECALLED.—Joab, having received his orders, 1. Returns thanks to the king for doing him the honour to employ him in an affair so universally grateful, ver. 22. Joab took it as a kindness to himself, and (some think) as an indication that he would never call him to an account for the murder he had been guilty of. But if he meant so, he was mistaken, as we shall find, 1 Kings ii. 5, 6. 2. Delays not to execute David's orders; he brought Absalom to Jerusalem, ver. 23. I see not how David can be justified in suspending the execution of the ancient law, Gen. ix. 6, "Whoso sheds man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed," in which a righteous magistrate ought not to "acknowledge even his brethren, or know his own children." God's laws were never designed to be like cobwebs, which catch the little flies, but suffer the great ones to break through. God justly made Absalom a scourge to him, whom his foolish pity thus spared. But, though he allowed him to return to his own house, he forbade him the court, and would not see him himself, ver. 24. He put him under interdict.

ABSALOM'S BEAUTY.—He was a very handsome man; there was not his equal in all Israel for beauty, ver. 25. A poor commendation for a man that had nothing else in him valuable. Handsome are they that handsome do. Many a polluted deformed soul dwells in a fair and comely body; witness Absalom's, that was polluted with blood, and deformed with unnatural disaffection to his father and prince. In his body there was no blemish, but in his mind nothing but wounds and bruises. Perhaps this was one reason why his father was so fond of him, and protected him from justice. Those have reason to fear affliction in their children, who are better pleased with their beauty than with their virtue. He had a very fine head of hair. Whether it was the length, or colour, or extraordinary softness of it, something there was which made it very valuable, and very much an ornament to him, ver. 26. When he did poll it at certain times, for ostentation he had it weighed, that it might be seen how much it excelled other men's, and it weighed two hundred shekels, which some reckon to be three pounds and two ounces of our weight; and with the oil and powder, especially if it were powdered (as Josephus says the fashion then was) with gold dust, Bishop Patrick thinks it is not at all incredible that it should weigh so much. This fine hair proved his halter, chap. xviii. 9.—Henry.

CHAP. XV. ABSALOM'S TREASON.—Ver. 1—6. The last clause in these verses aptly marks the way in which Absalom ingratiated himself with the people. He did not gain their hearts by eminent services, or by a wise and virtuous conduct. But he affected to look great, as heir to the crown, and yet to be very condescending, and affable to his inferiors: he pretended a great regard to their interests, and threw out artful insinuations against David's administration: he flattered every one who had a cause to be tried, with the assurance that he had right on his side; that, if it went against him, he might be led to accuse David and the magistrates of injustice. Though Absalom knew not how to obey, and deserved to die for his atrocious crime; yet he expressed a vehement desire to be judge over all the land; and suggested that suits should not then be so

2 And Absalom [b]rose up early, and stood beside the way of the gate:[1] and it was so, that when any man that had a controversy [*]came to the king for judgment, then Absalom called unto him, and said, Of what city art thou? And he said, Thy servant is of one of the tribes of Israel.

3 And Absalom said unto him, See, [c]thy matters are good and right; but [†]there is no man deputed of the king to hear thee.

4 Absalom said moreover, [d]Oh that I were made judge in the land, that every man which hath any suit or cause might come unto me, and [c]I would do him justice!

5 And it was so, that when any man came nigh to him to do him obeisance, he put forth his hand, and [f]took him, and [g]kissed him.

6 And on this manner did Absalom to all Israel that came to the king for judgment: so Absalom [h]stole the hearts of the men of Israel.

7 ¶ And it came to pass after [i]forty years, that Absalom said unto the king, I pray thee, [k]let me go and [l]pay my vow, which I have vowed unto the LORD, in Hebron.[2]

8 For [m]thy servant vowed a vow while I abode at [n]Geshur in Syria, saying, If the LORD shall bring me again indeed to Jerusalem, then [o]I will serve the LORD.

9 And the king said unto him, Go in peace. So he arose, and went to Hebron.

10 ¶ But Absalom sent [p]spies throughout all the tribes of Israel, saying, As soon as ye hear the sound of the trumpet, then ye shall say, Absalom [q]reigneth in [r]Hebron.

11 And with Absalom went two hundred men out of Jerusalem that were [s]called; and they went in [t]their simplicity, and they knew not any thing.

12 And Absalom sent for [u]Ahithophel the Gilonite, [x]David's counsellor, from his city, even from [y]Giloh, [z]while he offered sacrifices. And the conspiracy was strong; for [a]the people increased continually with Absalom.

13 ¶ And there came a messenger to David, saying, [b]The hearts of the men of Israel are after Absalom.

14 And David said unto all his servants that were with him at Jerusalem, [c]Arise, and let us flee; for we shall not else escape from Absalom: make speed to depart, lest he overtake us suddenly, and [‡]bring evil upon us, [d]and smite the city with the edge of the sword.

15 And the king's servants said unto the king, [e]Behold, thy servants are ready to do whatsoever my lord the king shall [§]appoint.

16 And the king went forth, and all his household [‖]after him. And the king left [f]ten women, which were concubines, to keep the house.

17 And the king [g]went forth, and all the people after him, and tarried in a place that was far off.

18 And all his servants passed on beside him; and all the [h]Cherethites, and all the Pelethites, and all the [i]Gittites, six hundred men which came after him from Gath, passed on before the king.

19 ¶ Then said the king to [j]Ittai the Gittite, Wherefore goest thou also with us? return to thy place, and abide with the king: for thou art a stranger, and also an exile.

20 Whereas thou camest but yesterday, should I this day make thee [*]go up and down with us? [k]seeing I go whither I may, return thou, and take back thy brethren: [l]mercy and truth be with thee.

21 And Ittai answered the king, and said, [m]As the LORD liveth, and as my lord the king liveth, [n]surely in what place my lord the king shall be, whether in death or life, even there also will thy servant be.

22 And David said to Ittai, Go and pass over. And Ittai the Gittite passed over, and all his men, and all the little ones[3] that were with him.

23 And all the country wept with a loud voice, and all the people passed over: the king also himself passed over the brook [o]Kidron, and all the people passed over, toward the way of the [p]wilderness.

24 ¶ And lo [q]Zadok also, and all the Levites were with him, [r]bearing the ark of the covenant of God: and they set down the ark of God; and Abiathar went up, until all the people had done passing out of the city.

25 And the king said unto Zadok, [s]Carry back the ark of God into the city: if I shall find favour in the eyes of the LORD, [t]he will bring me again, and shew me both it, and his [u]habitation:

26 But if he thus say, I [v]have no delight in thee; behold, here am I, [x]let him do to me as seemeth good unto him.

27 The king said also unto Zadok the priest, Art not thou [y]a seer? [z]return into the city in peace, and your two sons with you, Ahimaaz thy son, and Jonathan the son of Abiathar.

28 See, [a]I will tarry in the plain of the wilderness, until there come word from you to certify me.

29 Zadok therefore and Abiathar carried the ark of God again to Jerusalem: and they tarried there.

30 And David went up by [b]the ascent of mount Olivet, [†]and wept as he went up, and had [c]his head covered, and he went [d]barefoot: [4] and all the people that was with tedious, expensive, and partially decided as they were. This he confirmed by rising early and by apparent application, though it was to other people's business, and not his own duty: and by such sinister arts, united with his personal attractions and address, he imposed upon multitudes all over the land, to prefer so worthless a character to the wise, righteous, and pious David!—Others of the king's sons were employed in public business, but Absalom seems not to have had any place. This might offend him; and his artifices tended to alienate the people from his brethren, as well as from his father. —The chariots and horsemen of Absalom, being a deviation from the Divine law, should not have been allowed: and indeed David might easily have foreseen the consequences of Absalom's ostentation, and should at once have restrained it.—Scott.

HIS POLICY AND ITS SUCCESS.—The project he laid, was to get himself proclaimed king throughout all the tribes of Israel, upon a signal given, ver. 10. Spies were sent abroad, to be ready in every country to receive the notice with satisfaction and acclamations of joy, and to make the people believe that the news was both very true and very good, and that they were all concerned to take up arms for their new king. Upon the sudden spreading of this proclamation, "Absalom reigns in Hebron," some would conclude that David was dead, others that he had resigned; and thus they that were in the secret would draw in many to appear for Absalom, and come in to his assistance, who, if they had rightly understood the matter, would have abhorred the thought of it, but, being drawn in, would adhere to him. See what artifices ambitious men use for the compassing of their ends; and, in matters of state as well as in matters of religion, let us not be forward to believe every spirit, but try the spirits. The person he especially courted and relied upon in this affair, was Ahithophel, a political, thinking man, and one that had a clear head, and a great compass of thought, that had been David's counsellor, his guide, and his acquaintance, Ps. lv. 13; his "familiar friend, in whom he trusted, which did eat of his bread," Ps. xli. 9. But, upon some disgust of David's against him, or his against David, he was banished, or retired from public business, and lived privately in the country. How should a man of such good principles as David, and such corrupt principles as Ahithophel, long agree? A fitter tool Absalom could not find in all the kingdom, than one that was so great a statesman, and yet was disaffected to the present ministry. While Absalom was offering his sacrifices, in performance of his pretended vow, he sent for this man. So much was his heart on the projects of his ambition, that he could not stay to make an end of his devotion; which showed what his eye was upon, in all, and that it was but for a pretence that he made long offerings. The party that joined with him proved, at last, very considerable. The people increased continually with Absalom, which made the conspiracy strong and formidable.

DAVID'S FLIGHT FROM JERUSALEM.—His servants agreed to the measures he took, faithfully adhered to him, ver. 15, and assured him of their inviolable allegiance. Whereupon, 1. He went out of Jerusalem himself on foot, while his son Absalom had chariots and horses. It is not always the best man, nor the best cause, that makes the best figure. See here, not only the servant, but the traitor, on horseback, while the prince, the rightful prince, "walks as a servant upon the earth," Eccl. x. 7. Thus he chose to do, to abase himself so much the more under God's hand, and in condescension to his friends and followers, with whom he would walk, in token that he would live and die with them. 2. He took his household with him, his wives and children, that he might protect them in this day of danger, and that they might be a comfort to him in this day of grief. Masters of families, in their greatest frights, must not neglect their households. "Ten women," that "were concubines," he "left" behind, "to keep the house," thinking that the weakness of their sex would secure them from murder, and their age and relation to him would secure them from rape; but God overruled this for the fulfilling of his word. 3. He took his life-guard with him, or band of pensioners; the Cherethites and Pelethites, who were under the command of Benaiah; and the Gittites, who were under the command of Ittai, ver. 18. These Gittites seem to have been by birth Philistines of Gath, who came, a regiment of them, 600 in all, to enter themselves in David's service, having known him at Gath, and being greatly in love with him for his virtue and piety, and having embraced the Jews' religion. David made them of his garde du corps—his body guard, and they adhered to him in his distress.

HIS DEEP DISTRESS.—Ver. 30. 1. David himself, as a deep mourner, covered his head and face for shame and blushing, went barefoot, as a prisoner or a slave, and for mortification, and went weeping. Did it become a man of his reputation for courage and greatness of spirit, thus to cry like a child, only for fear of an enemy at a distance, against whom he might easily have made head, and perhaps with one bold stroke have routed him? Yes, it did not ill become him, considering how much there was in this trouble. (1.) Of the unkindness of his son. He could not but weep, to think that one who came out of his bowels, and had so often lain in his arms, would thus lift up the heel against him. God himself is said to be grieved with the rebellions of his own children, Ps. xcv. 10, and even "broken with their whorish heart," Ezek. vi. 9. (2.) There was much of the displeasure of his God in it; this infused the wormwood and gall into the "affliction and misery," Lam. iii. 19. His sin was "ever before him," Ps. li. 3, but never so plain, nor ever appearing so black, as now. He never wept thus when Saul hunted him, but a wounded conscience makes trouble lie heavy, Ps. xxxviii. 4. 2. When David wept, all his company wept likewise, being much affected with his grief, and willing to share him covered every man his head, and they went up, [e]weeping as they went up.

31 ¶ And one told David, saying, [f]Ahithophel is among the conspirators with Absalom. And David said, [g]O LORD, I pray thee, [h]turn the counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness.[5]

32 And it came to pass, that when David was come to [i]the top of the mount, where [j]he worshipped God, behold, [k]Hushai the [l]Archite came to meet him with his [m]coat rent, and earth upon his head:

33 Unto whom David said, If thou passest on with me, [n]then thou shalt be a burden unto me:

34 But if thou [o]return to the city, and say unto Absalom,[6] I will be thy servant, O king; [p]as I have been thy father's servant hitherto, so will I now also be thy servant: [q]then mayest thou for me defeat the counsel of Ahithophel.

35 And hast thou not there with thee Zadok and Abiathar the priests? therefore it shall be, that what thing soever thou shalt hear out of the king's house, [r]thou shalt tell it to Zadok and Abiathar the priests.

36 Behold, they have there with them [s]their two sons, Ahimaaz Zadok's son, and Jonathan Abiathar's son; and by them ye shall send unto me every thing that ye can hear.

37 So Hushai David's [t]friend came into the city, and [u]Absalom came into Jerusalem.

Ziba, by false suggestions, obtaineth his master's inheritance, 1. Shimei curseth David, 5. David abstaineth and restraineth others from revenge, 9. Ahithophel's counsel, 20.

AND when David was a [a]little past the top of the hill, behold, [b]Ziba the servant of Mephibosheth met him, [c]with a couple of asses saddled, and upon them two hundred loaves of bread, and an hundred bunches of raisins, and an hundred of [d]summer fruits, and [e]a bottle of wine.

2 And the king said unto Ziba, [f]What meanest thou by these? And Ziba said, [g]The asses be for the king's household to ride on; and the bread and summer fruit [h]for the young men to eat; and the wine, [i]that such as be faint in the wilderness may drink.

3 And the king said, And [j]where is thy master's son? And Ziba said unto the king, Behold, he abideth at Jerusalem: for he said, [k]To-day shall the house of Israel restore me the kingdom of my father.[1]

4 Then said the king to Ziba, [l]Behold, thine are all that pertained unto Mephibosheth. And Ziba said, *I humbly beseech thee that I may find grace in thy sight, my lord, O king.

5 ¶ And when king David came to [m]Bahurim, behold, thence came out a man of the family of the house of Saul, [n]whose name was Shimei, the son of Gera: [†]he came forth, and [o]cursed still as he came.

6 And he cast stones at David,[2] and at all the servants of king David: and all the people, and all the mighty men, were on his right hand and on his left.

7 And thus said Shimei when he cursed, Come out, come out, thou [‡]bloody man, and thou [p]man of Belial:

8 The LORD hath [q]returned upon thee all [r]the blood of the house of Saul, in whose stead thou hast reigned; and the LORD hath delivered the kingdom into the hand of Absalom thy son: and, [§]behold, thou art taken in thy mischief, because thou art a bloody man.

9 ¶ Then said [s]Abishai the son of Zeruiah unto the king, Why should this [t]dead dog [u]curse my lord the king? [x]let me go over, I pray thee, and take off his head.

10 And the king said, [y]What have I to do with you, ye sons of Zeruiah? so let him curse, because [z]the LORD hath said unto him, Curse David. [a]Who shall then say, Wherefore hast thou done so?

11 And David said to Abishai, and to all his servants, [b]Behold, my son, which [c]came forth of my bowels, [d]seeketh my life: how much more now may this Benjamite do it? Let him alone, and let him curse; [e]for the LORD hath bidden him.

12 It may be that [f]the LORD will look on mine [‖]affliction, and that the LORD will [g]requite me good for his cursing this day.

13 And as David and his men went by the way, Shimei went along on the hill's side over against him, and [h]cursed as he went, and threw stones at him, and *cast dust.[3]

14 And the king, and all the people that were with him, came weary, and refreshed themselves [i]there.

15 ¶ And [j]Absalom, and all the people the men of Israel, came to Jerusalem, and Ahithophel with him.

16 And it came to pass, when Hushai the Archite, David's friend, was come unto Absalom, that Hushai said unto Absalom, [†]God save the king, God save the king.

17 And Absalom said to Hushai, [k]Is this thy kindness to thy friend? [l]why wentest thou not with thy friend?

18 And Hushai said unto Absalom, Nay; but [m]whom the LORD, and this people, and all the men of Israel, choose, his will I be, and with him will I abide.

19 And again, whom should I serve? [n]Should I not serve in the presence of his

On this occasion, however, David seems to have been too credulous, and rashly to have condemned Mephibosheth, before he was heard in his defence, not imagining that Ziba would come to him with a notorious falsehood. — PATRICK.

in it. It is our duty to "weep with those that weep," especially our superiors, and those that are better than we; for, "if this be done in the green tree, what shall be done in the dry?" We must weep with those that weep for sin. When Hezekiah humbled himself for his sin, all Jerusalem joined with him, 2 Chron. xxxii. 26. To prevent suffering with sinners, let us sorrow with them.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Ver. 1—12. The ostentation of emulating or exceeding superiors in external pomp, is an evidence of a narrow mind, a weak judgment, and a depraved heart. It is, however, the common folly and ruin of indulged children, and frequently prepares the way for the most atrocious crimes. The very first appearance, therefore, of this affectation should be repressed by parents with decision, and even with severity, if they would prevent the ruin of their families.—They who least understand the duties, and could least endure the burdens of authority, are commonly most desirous of it. But when ambition prompts, the most self-indulgent assume the appearance of diligence; and the most haughty, that of affability and condescension: and while men aspire to the pinnacle of earthly grandeur, they, for the time, pay the most abject court to the meanest of the mob! Such fawning sons of ambition are peculiar to no age or nation: but let every wise and honest man shun them as a pestilence.—Scott.

CHAP. XVI. ZIBA'S TREACHERY.—Ver. 1—4. Ziba took advantage of existing circumstances, artfully to form a plan for obtaining a grant from David of Mephibosheth's estate. By his seasonable, and apparently generous, present, and in his insinuating behaviour, he prepossessed David's mind in his favour, and then by false accusation he prejudiced him against Mephibosheth. It was indeed improbable that Mephibosheth should prove so ungrateful, or form expectations of obtaining the kingdom; but what villany could excite wonder, when Absalom was in arms against his own too indulgent father? And Ziba might hope that some event would secure him from detection, or that David would be ashamed to retract his grant, when he had once made it. It is evident, however, that David acted precipitately, did great injustice to Mephibosheth, and even forgot his covenant with Jonathan, in passing sentence without hearing Mephibosheth's defence.

SHIMEI'S CURSING.—Ver. 5—14. Bahurim was a city of Benjamin; and Shimei was a relation of Saul; so that the translation of the kingdom to David marred all his prospects of preferment. He disregarded the express appointment of God, and his heart was full of implacable enmity to David, as an usurper of the throne. Contrary to the fullest evidence, he accused him of murdering Saul's family, and interpreted his affliction into a proof of his guilt: and he took this opportunity to vent all kinds of imprecations and reproaches, and to express all the rage of impotent contempt and malice. But if David had been a bloody man, and disposed to slay the family of Saul, Shimei would soon have suffered the just punishment of his audacity; for David was so well guarded, that Shimei could only show his malice at a distance: and David's prohibition alone prevented Abishai from putting him to death. This Shimei merited: but David was now under the Divine rebuke for his sins. Though free from the guilt charged upon him, he was consciously guilty of murdering Uriah: he therefore submitted to the justice of God, in this injurious treatment from Shimei; and he could not wonder that his enemies were stirred up against him, when his own son sought his life. The sin both of Shimei and of Absalom was from themselves and Satan: but David's affliction was from the Lord; and they were but instruments, which he employed, beside their purpose, of correcting David for good. The curse causeless could only injure him who used it: and David hoped that his humble submission to such base usage from man would prepare the way for the return of peace and comfort from a merciful God; and therefore he would not permit Shimei to be molested.—Scott.

THE COUNSEL OF AHITHOPHEL.—Ver. 21. Ahithophel did counsel Absalom to do wickedly, and so did as effectually betray him as he did who was designedly false to him. For they that advise men to sin, certainly advise them to their hurt; and that government which is founded in sin, is founded in the sand. It seems Ahithophel was noted as a deep politician; his counsel was as if a man had inquired at the oracle of God, ver. 23. Such reputation was he in for subtilty and sagacity in public affairs, such reaches had he beyond other privy-counsellors, such reasons would he give for his advice, and such success generally his projects had, that all people, good and bad, both David and Absalom had a profound regard to his sentiments, too much by far, when they regarded him "as an oracle of God;" shall the prudence of any mortal compare with Him who is only wise? Let us observe from this account of Ahithophel's fame for policy, 1. That many excel in worldly wisdom, who are utterly destitute of heavenly grace, because those who set up for oracles themselves are apt to despise the oracles of God. "God has chosen the foolish things of the world:" and the greatest statesmen are seldom the greatest saints. 2. That frequently the great politicians act most foolishly for themselves. Ahithophel is cried up for an oracle, and yet very unwisely takes part with Absalom, who was not only an usurper, but a rash youth, never likely to come to good; whose fall, and the fall of all that adhered to him, any one, with the tenth part of the policy that Ahithophel pretended to, might foresee. Well, after all, honesty is the best policy, and will be found so in the long run. Observe, The wicked counsel Ahithophel gave to Absalom: finding that David had left his concubines to keep the son? As I have served in thy father's presence, so will I be in thy presence.

20 ¶ Then said Absalom to Ahithophel, [o]Give counsel among you what we shall do.

21 And Ahithophel said unto Absalom, [p]Go in [q]unto thy father's concubines, which he hath left to keep the house; and all Israel shall hear that thou art [r]abhorred of [s]thy father: [t]then shall [u]the hands of all that are with thee be strong.

22 So they spread Absalom a tent upon [x]the top of the house; and Absalom went in unto his father's concubines [y]in the sight of all Israel.

23 And the counsel of Ahithophel, which he counselled in those days, was [z]as if a man had enquired at the [‡]oracle of God;[4] so was [a]all the counsel of Ahithophel [b]both with David and with Absalom.

MOREOVER Ahithophel said unto Absalom, Let me now choose out twelve thousand men, and [a]I will arise and pursue after David [b]this night:

2 And I will come upon him while he is [c]weary and weak-handed, and will make him afraid: and all the people that are with him shall flee; and [d]I will smite the king only:

5 Then said Absalom, Call now [h]Hushai the Archite also, and let us hear likewise what [†]he saith.

6 And when Hushai was come to Absalom, Absalom spake unto him, saying, Ahithophel hath spoken after this manner: shall we do after his [‡]saying? if not; speak thou.

7 And Hushai said unto Absalom, The counsel that Ahithophel hath [§]given is [i]not good at this time.

8 For, said Hushai, thou knowest thy father and his men, that they be [j]mighty men, and they be [l]chafed in their minds, [k]as a bear robbed of her whelps in the field: and [l]thy father is a man of war, and will not lodge with the people.

10 And he also that is valiant, whose [o]heart is as the heart of a lion, shall [p]utterly melt: for all Israel knoweth that thy father is a mighty man, and they which be with him are valiant men.

11 Therefore I counsel that [q]all Israel be generally gathered unto thee, from Dan even to Beer-sheba, [r]as the sand that is by the sea for multitude; and that [†]thou go to battle [s]in thine own person.

12 So shall we come upon him [t]in some place where he shall be found, and [u]we will light upon him as the dew falleth on the ground: and of him and of all the men that are with him there shall not be left so much as one.

13 Moreover, if he be gotten into a city, then shall all Israel bring ropes to that city,[3] and we will draw it into the river, until there be not [x]one small stone found there.

14 And Absalom and all the men of Israel said, The counsel of Hushai the Archite is better than the counsel of Ahithophel. For [y]the LORD had [‡]appointed [z]to defeat the [a]good counsel of Ahithophel, to the intent that the LORD might bring evil upon Absalom.

15 ¶ Then said Hushai-unto [b]Zadok and to Abiathar the priests, Thus and thus did Ahithophel counsel Absalom and the elders of Israel; and thus and thus have I counselled.

16 Now therefore send quickly, and tell David, saying, [c]Lodge not this night in the plains of the wilderness, [d]but speedily pass over;[4] lest the king [e]be swallowed up, and all the people that are with him.

17 Now [f]Jonathan and Ahimaaz stayed by [g]En-rogel;[5] for they might not be seen to come into the city: and a wench went and told them; and they went and told king David.

18 Nevertheless a lad saw them, and told Absalom: but they went both of them away quickly, and came to a man's house in [h]Bahurim, which had a well in his court; whither they went down.

19 And the woman took and [i]spread a covering over the well's mouth, and spread ground corn thereon; and the thing was not known.

20 And when Absalom's servants came to the woman to the house, they said, Where is Ahimaaz and Jonathan? And the woman said unto them, [j]They be gone over the brook of water. And [k]when they had sought and could not find them, they returned to Jerusalem.

21 And it came to pass, after they were departed, that they came up out of the well, and went and told king David, and said unto David, [l]Arise, and pass quickly over the house, he advises him to "lie with them," ver. 21, a very wicked thing; the divine law had made it a capital crime, Lev. xx. 11. The apostle speaks of it as a piece of villany "not so much as named among the Gentiles," 1 Cor. v. 1. Reuben lost his birthright for it. But Ahithophel advised to it as a political thing, because it would give assurance to all Israel, 1. That he was in good earnest in his pretensions; no doubt, he resolved to make himself master of all that belonged to his predecessor, when he began with his concubines. 2. That he was resolved never to make peace with his father upon any terms; for, by this, he would render himself so odious to his father, that he would never be reconciled to him, which, perhaps, the people were jealous of, and that they must be sacrificed to the reconciliation. Having drawn the sword, he did, by this provocation, throw away the scabbard, which would strengthen the hands of his party, and keep them tight to him. This was his cursed policy, which bespoke him rather "an oracle of the Devil, than of God."—Henry.

CHAP. XVII. AHITHOPHEL'S PROPOSAL.—Ahithophel advises that David be pursued immediately, this very night, with a flying army, which he himself undertakes the command of, that the king only be smitten, and his forces dispersed, and then the people that were now for him would fall in with Absalom of course, and there would not be such a long war as had been between the house of Saul and David, ver. 1—3. "The man whom thou seekest is as if all returned." By this it appears that Absalom had declared his design to be upon David's life, and Ahithophel concurs with him in it; "Smite the shepherd, and the sheep will be scattered," and be an easy prey to the wolf. Thus he contrives to include the war in a little compass, by fighting neither with small nor great, but the king of Israel only, and to conclude it in a little time, by falling upon him immediately. Nothing could have been more fatal to David, than the taking of these measures. It was too true, that he was weary and weak-handed; that a little thing would make him afraid, else he had not fled from his house upon the first alarm of Absalom's rebellion; it was probable enough that, upon a fierce attack, especially in the night, the small force he had would be put into confusion and disorder, and it would be an easy thing to "smite the king only," and then the business was done, the whole nation would be reduced, of course, and "all the people," says he, "shall be in peace." See how a general ruin is called by usurpers "a general peace;" but thus the Devil's palace is in peace, while he, as a strong man armed, keeps it. Compare with this the plot of Caiaphas (that second Ahithophel) against the Son of David, to crush his interest by destroying him; Let that "one man die for the people," John xi. 50. "Kill the heir, and the inheritance shall be ours," Matt. xxi. 38. But the counsel of them both was turned into foolishness. Yet the children of light may, in their generation, learn wisdom from the children of this world. What our hand finds to do, let us do quickly, and with all our might. It is prudence to be vigorous and expeditious, and not to lose time, particularly in our spiritual warfare; if Satan flee from us, let us follow our blow.—Henry.

HUSHAI'S COUNTER-MEASURE.—Ver. 7—14. It is evident that Hushai aimed to gain time for David to remove to a greater distance, and to increase and encourage his army: and if he had put Absalom off from executing Ahithophel's counsel only for one night, it might have proved of essential service, especially as he would be able to give David intelligence of his danger. In pursuing this object, he opposed Ahithophel's proposal with consummate address: and with some specious arguments, taken from David's character for valour and military skill; from the courage and indignation of his followers; and from the probability that David would, by some stratagem of war, in which he was well versed, surprise and overcome his assailants, if they were not very numerous, and so discourage the whole party; he argued that Ahithophel's counsel was not good at that time. But the measures which he proposed in lieu of it, were addressed to the vain glory, the ambition, and perhaps the revenge of Absalom and of his followers. To raise a vast army, which Absalom, being the universal favourite, might easily accomplish; to command it himself, that the honour might be all his own; to carry matters with a high hand, to make sure work, and to destroy David and all his party: this was a more pompous scheme, and more suited to a man of Absalom's capacity and disposition, and to an unreflecting multitude, than the sagacious counsel of Ahithophel. Hushai doubtless framed his speech, not to meet the approbation of the wise, but to please the humour of the many: and it pleased God so to infatuate Absalom and all his party, that it met with general approbation.—Ahithophel's former counsel was followed, for God intended to correct David; but his latter was not, for he did not mean to destroy him, but Absalom. Thus God answered David's prayer, and turned the good, that is, the politic, counsel of Ahithophel into foolishness.—Scott.

AHITHOPHEL'S CHAGRIN AND SUICIDE.—Ver. 23. He died by his own hands, felo de se—a suicide: he hanged himself for vexation that his counsel was not followed; for thereby, 1. He thought himself slighted, and an intolerable slur cast upon his reputation for wisdom. His judgment always used to sway at the council-board, but now another's opinion is thought wiser and better than his; his proud heart cannot bear the affront, it rises and swells, and the more he thinks of it, the more violent his resentments grow, till they bring him, at last, to this desperate resolve, not to live to see another preferred before him. All men think him a wise man, but he thinks himself the only wise water: for [m]thus hath Ahithophel counselled against you.

22 Then David arose, and all the people that were with him, [n]and they passed over Jordan: by the morning light [o]there lacked not one of them that was not gone over Jordan.

23 ¶ And when Ahithophel [p]saw that his counsel was not [§]followed, he saddled his ass, and arose, and gat him home to his house, to [q]his city, and [‖]put his household in order, [r]and hanged himself,[6] and died, and was buried in the sepulchre of his father.

24 Then David came to [s]Mahanaim.[7] And Absalom passed over Jordan, he and all the men of Israel with him.

25 ¶ And Absalom made [t]Amasa captain of the host instead of Joab: which Amasa was a man's son, whose name was [u]Ithra, an Israelite,[8] that went in to [*]Abigail the daughter of [†]Nahash, sister to Zeruiah, Joab's mother.

26 So Israel and Absalom pitched in the [v]land of Gilead.

27 ¶ And it came to pass, when David was come to Mahanaim, that Shobi [x]the son of Nahash of Rabbah of the children of Ammon, and [y]Machir the son of Ammiel of Lo-debar, and [z]Barzillai the Gileadite of Rogelim,

28 Brought [a]beds, and [‡]basins, and earthen vessels, and wheat, and barley, and flour, and parched corn, and beans, and lentiles, and parched pulse,

29 And honey, and butter, and sheep, and [b]cheese of kine, [c]for David, and for the people that were with him, [d]to eat: for they said, [e]The people is hungry, and weary, and thirsty, [f]in the wilderness.

David, viewing the armies, giveth them charge of Absalom, 1. Absalom is slain by Joab, 9. David lamenteth for him, 33.

AND David [*]numbered the people that were with him, and set [b]captains of thousands and captains of hundreds over them.

2 And David sent forth [c]a third part of the people under [d]the hand of Joab, and a third part under the hand of Abishai the son of Zeruiah, Joab's brother, and a third part under the hand of [e]Ittai the Gittite. And the king said unto the people, [f]I will surely go forth with you myself also.

3 But the people answered, [g]Thou shalt not go forth: for, [h]if we flee away they will not [*]care for us; neither if half of us die, will they care for us: but now thou art [†]worth ten thousand of us: therefore now it is better that thou [‡]succour us out of the city.

4 And the king said unto them, What seemeth you best I will do. And the king stood [s]by the gate-side, and all the people came out [h]by hundreds and by thousands.

5 And the king commanded Joab and Abishai and Ittai, saying, [i]Deal gently for my sake with the young man, even with Absalom. And [k]all the people heard when the king gave all the captains charge concerning Absalom.

6 ¶ So the people went out into the field against Israel:[1] and the battle was in the [l]wood of Ephraim;

7 Where [m]the people of Israel were slain before the servants of David; and there was there [n]a great slaughter that day of [o]twenty thousand men.

8 For the battle was there scattered over the face of all the country: and [p]the wood [§]devoured[2] more people that day than the sword devoured.

9 ¶ And Absalom met the servants of David. And Absalom rode upon a mule, and the mule went under the thick boughs of a great oak, and [q]his head caught hold of the oak, and he was [r]taken up between the heaven and the earth; and the mule that was under him went away.

10 And a certain man saw it, and told Joab, and said, Behold, I saw Absalom hanged in an oak.

11 And Joab said unto the man that told him, And, behold, thou sawest him, and why didst thou not smite him there to the ground? and I would have given thee ten shekels of silver, and a girdle.

12 And the man said unto Joab, Though I should [‖]receive a thousand shekels of silver in mine hand, yet would I not put forth mine hand against the king's son: for [s]in our hearing the king charged thee and Abishai and Ittai, saying, [*]Beware that none touch the young man Absalom.

13 Otherwise I should have [t]wrought falsehood against mine own life:[3] for there is no matter hid from the king, and thou thyself wouldest have set thyself against me.

14 Then said Joab, I may not tarry thus [†]with thee. And he took three darts in his hand, and [v]thrust them through the heart of Absalom, while he was yet alive in the [‡]midst of the oak.

15 And ten young men that bare Joab's armour compassed about and smote Absalom, and slew him.

16 And Joab blew the trumpet, and the people returned from pursuing after Israel: for Joab held back the people.

17 And they took Absalom, and cast him into a great pit in the wood,[4] and laid a very man; and therefore, to be avenged upon mankind for not thinking so too, he will die, that wisdom may die with him. The world is not worthy of such an oracle as he is, and therefore, he will make them know the want of him. See what real enemies they are to themselves, that think too well of themselves, and what mischiefs they run upon, that are impatient of contempt. That will break a proud man's heart that will not break an humble man's sleep. 2. He thought himself endangered, and his life exposed. He concluded that, because his counsel was not followed, Absalom's cause would certainly miscarry, and then, whoever would find David's mercy, he concluded that he who was the greatest criminal, and had particularly advised him to lie with his father's concubines, must be sacrificed to his justice; to prevent therefore the shame and terror of a public and solemn execution, he does justice upon himself, and after all his reputation for wisdom, by this, his last act, puts a far greater disgrace upon himself than Absalom's privy-council had put upon him, and answers his name, Ahithophel, which signifies the brother of a fool. Nothing indicates so much folly as self-murder. Observe how deliberately he did it, and of malice prepense against himself; not in a heat, but he went home to his city, to his house, to do it; and, which is strange, took time to consider of it, and yet did it. And, to prove himself compos mentis—in his senses, when he did it, he first put his household in order, made his will as a man of sane memory and understanding, settled his estate, balanced his accounts.—Henry.

CHAP. XVIII. PATERNAL AFFECTION.—Ver. 5. When the army was drawn out rank and file, Josephus says, David encouraged them, and prayed for them, but withal bade them all take heed of doing Absalom any hurt. How does he render good for evil! Absalom would have David only smitten, David would have Absalom only spared. What foils are these to each other! Never was unnatural hatred to a father more strong than in Absalom; nor was ever natural affection to a child more strong than in David; each did his utmost, and showed what he could do; how bad it is possible for a child to be to the best of fathers, and how good it is possible for a father to be to the worst of children; as if it were designed to be a resemblance of man's wickedness toward God, and God's mercy toward man, of which it is hard to say which is more amazing. "Deal gently," says David, "by all means, with the young man, even with Absalom, for my sake; he is a young man, rash and heady, and his age must excuse him; he is mine, whom I love; if you love me, be not severe with him." This charge supposes David's strong expectation of success, having a good cause, and a good God; he doubts not but Absalom would lie at their mercy, and therefore bids them deal gently with him, spare his life, and reserve him for his judgment. Bishop Hall thus descants on this: "What means this ill-placed love? this unjust mercy? Deal gently with a traitor? Of all traitors, with a son? Of all sons, with an Absalom, that graceless darling of so good a father? And all this, for thy sake, whose crown, whose blood, he hunts after? For whose sake must he be pursued, if forborne for thine? Must the cause of the quarrel be the motive of mercy? Even in the holiest parents nature may be guilty of an injurious tenderness, of a bloody indulgence. But was not this done in type of that unmeasurable mercy of the true King and Redeemer of Israel, who prayed for his persecutors, for his murderers; 'Father, forgive them. Deal gently with them for my sake.'" When God sends an affliction to correct his children, it is with this charge, "Deal gently with them for my sake;" for he knows our frame.

ABSALOM'S DEATH.—Observe concerning this, 1. That his "mule went away" from "under him," as if glad to get clear of such a burthen, and resign it to the ignominious tree. Thus the whole creation groans under the burthen of man's corruption, but shall shortly be delivered from its load, Rom. viii. 21, 22. 2. That he hung "between heaven and earth," as unworthy of either, as abandoned of both; earth would not keep him, heaven would not take him, hell therefore opens her mouth to receive him. 3. That this was a very surprising, unusual thing; it was fit that it should be so, his crime being so monstrous: if, in his flight, his mule had thrown him, and left him half dead upon the ground, till the servants of David had come up and despatched him, the same thing had been done as effectually: but that had been too common a fate for so uncommon a criminal; God will here, as in the case of those other rebels, Dathan and Abiram, "create a new thing," that it may be understood how much "this man has provoked the Lord," Num. xvi. 29, 30. Absalom is here hung up, in terrorem—to frighten children from disobedience "to their parents;" see Prov. xxx. 17. He is caught alive by one of the servants of David, who went straight and told Joab in what posture he found that arch-rebel, ver. 10. Thus was he set up for a spectacle, as well as a mark, that the righteous might see him, and "laugh at him," Ps. lii. 6, while he has this further vexation in his breast, that of all the friends he had courted and confided in, and thought he had sure in his interest, though he hung long enough to have been relieved, yet he had none at hand to disentangle him. Joab chides the man for not despatching him, ver. 11, telling him, if he had given that bold stroke, he would have rewarded him with ten half crowns, and a girdle, that is, a captain's commission, which, perhaps, was signified by the delivery of a belt or girdle; see Isa. xxii. 21. But the man, though zealous enough against Absalom, justified himself in not doing it: "Despatch him!" says he, "not for all the world; it would have cost me my head: and thou thyself wast witness to the king's charge concerning him, ver. 12, and, for all thy talk, wouldst have been my persecutor if I had done great heap of stones upon him: and all Israel fled every one to his tent.

18 ¶ Now Absalom in his lifetime had taken and [z]reared up for himself a pillar,[5] which is in [a]the king's dale: for he said, [b]I have no son to keep my name in remembrance: and [c]he called the pillar after his own name: and it is called unto this day, [d]Absalom's place.[6]

19 ¶ Then said [e]Ahimaaz the son of Zadok, Let me now run, and bear the king tidings, how that the LORD hath [g]avenged him of his enemies.

20 And Joab said unto him, Thou shalt not [h]bear tidings this day,[7] but thou shalt bear tidings another day: but this day thou shalt bear no tidings, [f]because the king's son is dead.

21 Then said Joab to Cushi, Go tell the king what thou hast seen. And Cushi bowed himself unto Joab, and ran.

22 Then said Ahimaaz the son of Zadok yet again to Joab, But [g]howsoever, let me, I pray thee, also run after Cushi. And Joab said, Wherefore wilt thou run, my son, seeing that thou hast no tidings *ready?

23 But howsoever, said he, let me run. And he said unto him, Run. Then Ahimaaz ran by the way of the plain, and overran Cushi.

24 And David sat [h]between the two gates;[8] and [i]the watchman went up to the roof over the gate unto the wall, and lifted up his eyes, and looked, and behold a man running alone.

25 And the watchman cried, and told the king. And the king said, If he be alone, there is tidings in his mouth. And he came apace, and drew near.

26 And the watchman saw another man running: and the watchman called unto the porter, and said, Behold another man running alone. And the king said, He also bringeth tidings.

27 And the watchman said, [†]Methinketh the running of the foremost is like the running of Ahimaaz the son of Zadok. And the king said, [k]He is a good man, and cometh with good tidings.

28 And Ahimaaz called, and said unto the king, [‡]All is well.[9] And he [l]fell down to the earth upon his face before the king, and said, [m]Blessed be the LORD thy God, which hath [§]delivered up the men that lifted up their hand against my lord the king.

29 And the king said, [n]Is the young man Absalom safe? And Ahimaaz answered, When Joab sent the king's servant, and me thy servant, [o]I saw a great tumult, but I knew not what it was.

30 And the king said unto him, Turn aside, and stand here. And he turned aside, and stood still.

32 And the king said unto Cushi, Is the young man Absalom safe? And Cushi answered, [q]The enemies of my lord the king, and all that rise against thee to do thee hurt, be as that young man is.[10]

33 And the king was much moved, and went up to the chamber over the gate, and wept: and as he went, thus he said, [r]O my son Absalom![11] my son, my son Absalom! [s]Would God I had died for thee, O Absalom, my son, my son!

CHAP. XIX.

Joab causeth the king to cease his mourning, 1. The Israelites bring the king back, 9. David sendeth to the priests to incite the men of Judah, 11. Shimei is pardoned, 16.

AND [a]it was told Joab, Behold, the king weepeth and mourneth for Absalom.

2 And the *victory that day was [b]turned into mourning unto all the people: for the people heard say that day how the king was grieved for his son.

3 And the people gat them by stealth that day [c]into the city, as people being ashamed [d]steal away when they flee in battle.

4 But the king [e]covered his face, and the king cried with a loud voice, [f]O my son Absalom! O Absalom, my son, my son!

5 And Joab came into the house to the king, and said, Thou hast shamed[1] this day the faces of all thy servants, which this day have [g]saved thy life, and the lives of thy sons and of thy daughters, and the lives of thy wives, and the lives of thy concubines;

6 [†]In that thou lovest thine enemies, and hatest thy friends. For thou hast declared this day, that [‡]thou regardest neither princes nor servants: for this day I perceive, that if Absalom had lived, and all we had died this day, [h]then it had pleased thee well.

7 Now therefore arise, go forth, and speak [§]comfortably unto thy servants: for I swear by the LORD, if thou go not forth, [t]there will not tarry one with thee this night: and that will be worse unto thee than [j]all the evil that befell thee from thy youth until now.

8 Then the king arose, and [k]sat in the gate. And they told unto all the people, saying, Behold, the king doth sit in the gate. And all the [l]people came before the king: [m]for Israel had fled every man to his tent.

9 ¶ And all the people were at [m]strife[2] throughout all the tribes of Israel, saying, The king saved us out of the hand of our enemies, and he delivered us out of the hand it," ver. 13. Those that love the treason, hate the traitor. He is (as I may say) embowelled and quartered, as traitors are, so pitifully mangled is he as he hangs there, and receives his death in such a manner, as to see all its terrors, and feel all its pain. (1.) Joab throws three darts into his body, which put him, no doubt, to exquisite torment, while he is yet "alive in the midst of the oak," ver. 14. I know not whether Joab can be justified in this direct disobedience to the command of his sovereign; was this to "deal gently with the young man?" Would David have suffered him to do it, if he had been upon the spot? Yet this may be said for him, that while he broke the order of a too indulgent father, he did real service both to his king and country, and would have endangered the welfare of both, if he had not done it. Salus populi suprema lex—The safety of the people is the supreme law. (2.) Joab's young men, ten of them, smite him, before he is despatched, ver. 15. They surrounded him, made a ring about him in triumph, and then "smote him, and slew him." So "let all thine enemies perish, O Lord."

HIS PRIDE.—To aggravate the ignominy of Absalom's burial, the historian takes notice of a pillar he had erected in the valley of Kidron, near Jerusalem, to be a monument for himself, and keep his name in remembrance, ver. 18, at the foot of which, it is probable, he designed to be buried. What foolish insignificant projects do proud men fill their heads with! And what care do many people take about the disposal of their bodies, when they are dead, that have no care at all what shall become of their precious souls! Absalom had three sons, chap. xiv. 27, but, it seems, now he had none; God had taken them away by death; and justly is a rebellious son written childless; to make up the want, he erects this pillar for a memorial; yet, in this also, Providence crosses him, and a rude heap of stones shall be his monument, instead of this marble pillar. Thus, "they that exalt themselves shall be abased." His care was, to have his name kept in remembrance, and it is so, to his everlasting dishonour. He could not be content in the obscurity of the rest of David's sons, of whom nothing is recorded but their names, but would be famous, and is therefore justly made for ever infamous. The pillar shall bear his name, but not to his credit; it was designed for Absalom's glory, but proved Absalom's folly.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The peculiar exercises of religion ought to precede, but not to exclude, the use of every prudent means of securing success in lawful undertakings: and they who would engage others in arduous and perilous attempts, must be willing to take a full share of the hardship and danger. But in some cases the life of an individual is of such importance to the public welfare, that thousands are authorized to require it of him, as a duty, to take the utmost care of himself. It is well when such affection and fidelity subsist betwixt princes and their subjects; and when they are mutually willing to venture, or to suffer, for each other's benefit. Thus Jesus loved his people, and laid down his life for them: and thus they consider his cause as dearer to them than every personal interest, and are prepared to lay down their lives for his sake. —Scott.

CHAP. XIX. DAVID'S SORROW REPROVED.—Ver. 1—8. David's conduct on this occasion was exceedingly impolitic, and tended to weaken the attachment and damp the zeal of his adherents; who would interpret his excessive grief, so passionately expressed, into an indifference about their interests, and dissatisfaction with their services. For instead of being led to celebrate their important success with joyful exultations, and meeting the animating hearty commendations of their prince, whom they had bravely and faithfully served, they were sent away grieved and ashamed. Joab had therefore good reason to interpose, and would have been justifiable in a very plain remonstrance with David on the impropriety of his conduct: but the asperity, the reproaches, and the threat of a general defection, which his language plainly implied, must be ascribed to his pride and insolence; for he gloried in disobeying and being rude to his prince. David, however, being conscious that Joab had truth and reason on his side, smothered his resentment, and very prudently obviated the disgust of the people.

DAVID'S INDULGENT POLICY.—Ver. 9—15. David would not appear to reign by force of arms: and therefore he waited till he was publicly invited to resume the reins of government. From the time that he began to reign in Hebron over the tribe of Judah only, the distinction between Judah and Israel began to be observed. The men of Israel were first disposed to return to their allegiance, and they spoke honourably of David's former services, but either fear, or shame, or want of unanimity, deterred them from publicly inviting him to return: and they seem also to have disputed to whom the blame of the late rebellion belonged; each endeavouring to excuse himself.—When, therefore, the report of these things reached the king, he probably thought it would be dishonourable to his own tribe, if they were the last in this service; or perhaps they were so deeply involved in Absalom's rebellion, that they feared David's resentment, if reinstated in his authority. He therefore employed Zadok and Abiathar, to assure the principal persons of his affection, and to excite them to appear in this business; by which means they took the lead in such a manner as induced the men of Israel to conclude that they meant to engross the credit of recalling David, and exclusively to secure his favour. But it would have been better, if they had consulted with their brethren, and thus acted in concert, as this would have prevented many bad consequences.—David also was very uneasy of the Philistines; and now [o]he is fled out of the land for Absalom.

10 And Absalom, [p]whom we anointed over us, [q]is dead in battle. Now therefore why [r]speak ye not a word of bringing the king back?

11 ¶ And king David [s]sent to Zadok and to Abiathar the priests, saying, [t]Speak unto the elders of Judah, saying, [u]Why are ye the last to bring the king back to his house? seeing the speech of all Israel is come to the king, even to his house.

12 Ye are my brethren, ye are [v]my bones and my flesh: wherefore then are ye the last to bring back the king?

13 And say ye to [x]Amasa,[3] Art thou not of my bone, and of my flesh? [y]God do so to me, and more also, if thou be not captain of the host before me continually in the [z]room of Joab.

14 And he bowed the heart of all the men of Judah, [a]even as the heart of one man; so that they sent this word unto the king, Return thou, and all thy servants.

15 So the king returned, and came to Jordan. And Judah came to [b]Gilgal, to go to meet the king, to conduct the king over Jordan.

16 ¶ And [c]Shimei the son of Gera, a Benjamite, which was of Bahurim, [d]hasted and came down with the men of Judah to meet king David.

17 And there were a thousand men of Benjamin with him, and [e]Ziba the servant of the house of Saul, and his fifteen sons and his twenty servants with him; and they went over Jordan before the king.

18 And there went over a ferry boat[4] to carry over the king's household, and to do [f]what he thought good. And Shimei the son of Gera [g]fell down before the king, as he was come over Jordan;

19 And [h]said unto the king, [i]Let not my lord impute iniquity unto me, neither do thou [k]remember that which thy servant [l]did perversely the day that my lord the king went out of Jerusalem, that the king should [m]take it to his heart.

20 For thy servant doth know that I have sinned: therefore, behold, [n]I am come the first this day of all the house of [o]Joseph[5] to go down to meet my lord the king.

21 But Abishai the son of Zeruiah answered and said, [p]Shall not Shimei be put to death for this, because he [q]cursed the LORD's anointed?

22 And David said, [r]What have I to do with you, ye sons of Zeruiah, that ye should this day be adversaries unto me? [s]Shall there any man be put to death this day in Israel? for do not I know that I am this day king over Israel?

23 Therefore the king said unto Shimei, [t]Thou shalt not die. And the king [u]sware unto him.

24 ¶ And [v]Mephibosheth[6] the son of Saul came down to meet the king, and had neither [x]dressed his feet, nor trimmed his beard, nor washed his clothes, from the day the king departed until the day he came again in peace.

25 And it came to pass, when he was come to Jerusalem to meet the king, that the king said unto him, [y]Wherefore wentest not thou with me, Mephibosheth?

26 And he answered, My lord, O king, my servant deceived me: for thy servant said, [z]I will saddle me an ass, that I may ride thereon, and go to the king; because [a]thy servant is lame.

27 And he hath [b]slandered thy servant unto my lord the king; but my lord the king is [c]as an angel of God: do therefore what is good in thine eyes.

28 For all of my father's house [d]were but dead [f]men before my lord the king: yet [e]didst thou set thy servant among them that did eat at thine own table. What right therefore have I yet [f]to cry any more unto the king?

29 And the king said unto him, [g]Why speakest thou any more of thy matters? I have said, [h]Thou and Ziba divide the land.[7]

30 And Mephibosheth said unto the king, [i]Yea, let him take all, forasmuch as my lord the king is come again in peace unto his own house.

31 ¶ And [j]Barzillai the Gileadite came down from Rogelim, and went over Jordan with the king, to conduct him over Jordan.

32 Now Barzillai was a very aged man, even [k]fourscore years old: and he had [l]provided the king of sustenance while he lay at Mahanaim; [m]for he was a very great man.

33 And the king said unto Barzillai, [n]Come thou over with me, and I will feed thee with me[8] in Jerusalem.

34 And Barzillai said unto the king, [‡]How long have I to live, that I should go up with the king unto Jerusalem?

35 I am this day fourscore years old: and [o]can I discern between good and evil? can thy servant [p]taste what I eat or what I drink? [q]can I hear any more the voice of singing men and singing women? wherefore then should thy servant be yet a [r]burden unto my lord the king?

36 Thy servant will go a little way over Jordan with the king: and why should the king recompence it me with such a reward?

37 Let thy servant, I pray thee, turn back again, [s]that [t]I may die in mine own city, and be buried [t]by the grave of my father and of under Joab's haughtiness, and was exceedingly displeased with him for slaying Absalom, and for his subsequent rudeness; and he wished to lay him aside. He supposed likewise, that, if Amasa were assured of pardon and preferment, he would draw over all that party into his interests. But Amasa, having headed so daring a rebellion, was not a proper person to supplant Joab, whose influence with the army, and with David's best friends, was too great to be thus shaken; and he was sure not to submit quietly to such a disgrace. David therefore does not seem to have acted with prudence on this emergency.—Scott.

SHIMEI'S PENITENCE.—Ver. 16. Shimei, to recommend himself to the king, 1. Came with good company, with the men of Judah, as one in their interest. 2. He brought a regiment of the men of Benjamin with him, a thousand, of which, perhaps, he was chiliarch, or commander-in-chief, offering his own and their service to the king; or, perhaps, they were volunteers, whom by his interest he had got together to meet the king, which was the more obliging, because of all the tribes of Israel, there were none, except these and Judah, that appeared to pay him this respect. 3. What he did, he hastened to do; he lost no time; "Agree with thine adversary quickly, while thou art in the way." Here is, (1.) The criminal's submission, ver. 19, 20. "He fell down before the king," as a penitent, as a supplicant; and, that he might be thought sincere, he did it publicly before all David's servants, and his friends the men of Judah, yea, and before his own thousand. The offence was public, therefore the submission ought to be so. He owns his crime, "Thy servant doth know that I have sinned;" he aggravates it, "I did perversely;" he begs the king's pardon, "Let not the king impute iniquity to thy servant," that is, deal with me as I deserve: he intimates, that it was below the king's great and generous mind to "take it to his heart;" and pleads his early return to his allegiance, that he was "the first of all the house of Joseph," (that is, of Israel, who in the beginning of David's reign had distinguished themselves from Judah, by their adherence to Ish-bosheth, chap. ii. 10,) that came "to meet the king." He came first, that, by his example of duty, the rest might be disposed, and, by his experience of the king's clemency, the rest might be encouraged to follow.—Henry.

MEPHIBOSHETH'S SELF-VINDICATION.—Ver. 24—30. Mephibosheth did not come to David till his return to Jerusalem, probably because he could not procure an ass to ride [illegible] from the time of the king's departure, he had utterly neglected the care of his person, [illegible] many tokens of excessive sorrow. To David's inquiry, Why he had not [illegible] he answered by the plain narration of facts, united with [illegible] [illegible] He owed all his [illegible] to David's favour, and [illegible] made to Ziba [illegible]

BARZILLAI.—1. Barzillai, to show that he was not weary of David, though he was so great a charge to him, attended him to Jordan, and went over with him, ver. 31. Let subjects learn hence, to render "tribute to whom tribute is due," and "honour to whom honour," Rom. xiii. 7. 2. The kind invitation David gave him to court, ver. 33. "Come thou over with me." 3. Barzillai's reply to this invitation, wherein, (1.) He admires the king's generosity in making him this offer, lessening his service, and magnifying the king's return for it. "Why should the king recompense it with such a reward?" ver. 36. Will the master thank that servant who only does what was his duty to do? He thought he had done himself honour enough, in doing the king any service. Thus when the saints shall be called to inherit the kingdom, in consideration of what they have done for Christ in this world, they will be amazed at the disproportion between the service and the recompense, Matt. xxv. 37. "Lord, when saw we thee hungry, and fed thee?" (2.) He declines accepting the invitation, begs his majesty's pardon for refusing so generous an offer: he should think himself very happy in being near the king, but, [1.] He is old, and unfit to remove at all, especially to court: old, and unfit for the business of the court; "Why 'should I go up with the king to Jerusalem?' I can do him no service there, in the council, the camp, the treasury, or the courts of justice; for 'how long have I to live?' ver. 34. Shall I think of going into business, now that I am going out of the world?" Old, and unfit for the diversions of the court, which will be ill bestowed, and even thrown away, upon one that can relish them so little, ver. 35. As it was in Moses's time, so it was in Barzillai's, and it is not worse now, that "if men be so strong that they come to fourscore years, their strength then is labour and sorrow," Ps. xc. 10. Those years then, and are still, years of which men say, they "have no pleasure in them," Eccl. xii. 1. Dainties are insipid when desire fails; and songs to the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

39 And all the people went over Jordan. And when the king was come over, the king [v] kissed Barzillai, and [x] blessed him; and [y] he returned unto his own place.

40 Then the king went on to Gilgal, and [‖] Chimham went on with him: and all [z] the people of Judah conducted the king, and also half the people of Israel.

41 ¶ And, behold, all the men of Israel came to the king, and said unto the king, [a] Why have our brethren the men of Judah [b] stolen thee away, and have brought the king, and his household, and all David's men with him, over Jordan?

42 And all the men of Judah answered the men of Israel, [c] Because the king is near of kin to us: wherefore then be ye angry for this matter? have we eaten at all of the king's cost? or hath he given us any gift?

43 And the men of Israel answered the men of Judah, and said, [d] We have [e] ten parts in the king,[11] and we have also more right in David than ye: why then did ye [*] despise us, that [f] our advice should not be first had in bringing back our king? And [g] the words of the men of Judah were fiercer than the words of the men of Israel.

2 So [e] every man of Israel went up from after David, and followed Sheba the son of Bichri: but [f] the men of Judah clave unto their king, [g] from Jordan even to Jerusalem.

3 ¶ And David came to his house at Jerusalem: and the king took[1] the [h] ten women his concubines, whom he had left to keep the house, and put them in [*] ward, and fed them, but went not in unto them. So they were [†] shut up unto the day of their death, [‡] living in widowhood.

Amasa murdered by Joab,

4 ¶ Then said the king to [1] Amasa, [§] Assemble me the men of Judah within three days, and be thou here present.

5 So Amasa went to assemble the men of Judah: but he [k] tarried longer than the set time which he had appointed him.

6 And David said to [l] Abishai, Now shall Sheba the son of Bichri [m] do us more harm than did Absalom: take thou [n] thy lord's servants, and pursue after him, lest he get him fenced cities, and [‖] escape us.

7 And there went out after him [o] Joab's men, and the Cherethites, and the Pelethites, and all the mighty men: and they went out of Jerusalem, to pursue after Sheba the son of Bichri.

8 When they were at the great stone[2] which is [p] in Gibeon, [q] Amasa went before them. And Joab's garment that he had put on was girded unto him, and upon it a girdle with a sword fastened upon his loins in the sheath thereof; and as he went forth it fell out.

9 And Joab said to Amasa, [r] Art thou in health, my brother? And Joab took Amasa by the beard[3] with the right hand [s] to kiss him.

10 But Amasa took no heed to the sword that was [t] in Joab's hand: so [u] he smote him therewith in the fifth rib, [x] and shed out his bowels to the ground, and [*] struck him not again; and he died. So Joab and Abishai his brother pursued after Sheba the son of Bichri.

11 And one of Joab's men stood by him, and said, [y] He that favoureth Joab, and he that is [z] for David, let him go after Joab.

12 And [a] Amasa wallowed in blood[4] in the midst of the highway. And when the man saw that all the people stood still, he removed Amasa out of the highway into the field, and cast a cloth upon him, when he saw that every one that came by him stood still.

13 When he was removed out of the highway, all the people went on after Joab, to pursue after Sheba the son of Bichri.

14 ¶ And he went through all the tribes of Israel unto [b] Abel,[5] and to Beth-maachah, and all the [c] Berites: and they were gathered together, and went also after him.

15 And they came and besieged him in Abel of Beth-maachah, and they [d] cast up a bank against the city, and it [†] stood in the trench: and all the people that were with Joab [‡] battered the wall, to throw it down.

16 ¶ Then cried [e] a wise woman[6] out of the city, Hear, hear; say, I pray you, unto Joab, Come near hither, that I may speak with thee.

17 And when he was come near unto her, the woman said, Art thou Joab? And he answered, I am he. Then she said unto to his own house than to another's. [2.] He is dying, and must begin to think of his long journey, his removal out of the world, ver. 37. It is good for us all, but it especially becomes old people, to think and speak much of dying. "Talk of going to court!" says Barzillai; "let me go home and 'die in my own city,' the place of my father's sepulchre; let me die 'by the grave of my father,' that my bones may be quietly carried to the place of their rest. The grave is ready for me, let me go and get ready for it, go and die in my nest."—Henry.

Practical Observations.—The excessive indulgence of any passion, (grief by no means excepted,) not only offends God, but betrays men into great imprudences in their temporal concerns.—They who have faithfully served us expect that we should appear pleased with them, and thankful for their services: and many will do more for a smile, and a kind word from their superiors, than for a more substantial recompense; and be much grieved and disheartened if they think themselves frowned on.—Upon important emergencies, plain truths may properly be spoken to the greatest and best of men, and they may be closely reasoned and expostulated with; but indecent roughness, and an assuming demeanour in an inferior, will render the most prudent, seasonable, and honest counsel, unacceptable, and perhaps ineffectual. A wise man, however, will endeavour to overlook the impropriety, and benefit by the sound reason, of well-intended remonstrances; and timely concessions will commonly prevent the ill effects of mistaken measures.—Scott.

CHAP. XX. Popular Caprice.—This Sheba proclaimed, ver. 1, who, probably, was a man of note, and had been active in Absalom's rebellion; the disgusted Israelites took the hint, and "went up from after David to follow Sheba," ver. 2, that is, the generality of them did so, only the men of Judah adhered to him. Learn hence, 1. That it is as impolitic for princes to be partial in their attentions to their subjects, as it is for parents to be so to their children; both should carry it with an even hand. 2. Those know not what they do that make light of the affections of their inferiors, by not countenancing and accepting them. Their hatred may be feared whose love is despised. 3. "The beginning of strife is as the letting forth of water," it is "therefore" wisdom to "leave it off before it be meddled with," Prov. xvii. 14. How great a matter doth a little of this fire kindle! 4. The perverting of words is the subverting of peace; and much mischief is made by forcing invidious constructions upon what is said and written, drawing consequences that were never intended. The men of Judah said, "The king is near of kin to us," by which, say the men of Israel, you mean, "We have no part in him;" whereas they meant no such thing. 5. People are very apt to run into extremes. "We have ten parts in David," said they; and almost in the next breath, "We have no part in him." To-day "Hosanna;" to-morrow "Crucify."—Henry.

Assassination of Amasa by his Rival Joab.—Ver. 8—10. Amasa, at length arriving with the troops which he had collected, took upon him the command of the army; and Joab seemed very cheerfully to submit; following the army as a private person, and professing zeal for the cause of David, whilst he was meditating revenge and murder! He had contrived that his sword should fall from its scabbard, as if by chance, when he approached Amasa, that without suspicion he might have it drawn in his hand, when he saluted him: and thus, pretending brotherly love, (for he was a near relation,) and in the very expression of endeared friendship, he basely murdered him at one blow. Amasa could not but know Joab's daring and revengeful character: and his vexation, at being superseded by the commander of that very rebellion which he had crushed: yet he did not suspect his intention, or attempt to avoid the fatal blow! perhaps not apprehending danger from the sword, because Joab held it in his left hand. But it was the Lord's righteous will, that Amasa should thus suffer the punishment due to his former treason. —Joab, confiding in the favour of the army, by his conduct set both the king and public justice at defiance, and declared his resolution to keep his place in contempt of all opposition. Having, therefore, given Amasa a mortal wound, he left him in the agonies of death, resumed the command of the troops, and marched against the common enemy, without concern or delay.

Blockade of Sheba in Abel.—Ver. 14, 15. Sheba endeavoured to raise forces, through the several tribes of Israel: but it is probable, that the elders who at first had followed him, upon recollection, and from dread of another civil war, had generally withdrawn from him; and therefore he had little success. So that, with only a few followers, chiefly from Beeroth, a city of Benjamin, he at length shut himself up in Abel-beth-maacah, in the tribe of Naphtali, as some of the citizens seem at first to have been favourable to his cause: but when Joab had so far pushed the siege as to fill up the trench, and to fix his engines close to the wall to batter it, it may be supposed that they began to dread the consequences. Ver. 16—19. Joab seems to have taken it for granted, that the citizens in general were firmly attached to Sheba; and so did not propose terms of peace, or require them to deliver him up; and they appear to have concluded, that there was no safety but in resistance. But the fatal effects of this misunderstanding were prevented by the timely interposition of a woman of noted wisdom and prudence. In her argument with Joab, she seems to have referred to the law which required, that before siege was laid even to a foreign city, peace should be offered if the citizens would submit; and much more to a city which had hitherto been "peaceful and faithful,—a mother in Israel," as him, [f]Hear the words of thine handmaid. And he answered, I do hear.

18 Then he spake, saying, [g]They were wont [r]to speak in old time, saying, They shall surely ask counsel at Abel: and so they ended the matter.

19 I am one of them that are [s]peaceable and faithful in Israel: thou seekest to destroy a city and [h]a mother in Israel: why wilt thou [i]swallow up [k]the inheritance of the LORD?

20 And Joab answered and said, [l]Far be it, far be it from me, [m]that I should swallow up or destroy.

21 The matter is not so: but [n]a man of mount Ephraim, Sheba the son of Bichri [t]by name, hath [o]lifted up his hand against the king, even against David: deliver him only, and I will depart from the city. And the woman said unto Joab, Behold, [p]his head shall be thrown to thee over the wall.

22 Then the woman went unto all the people [u]in her wisdom. And they cut off the head of Sheba the son of Bichri, and cast it out to Joab. And [v]he blew a trumpet, and they [*]retired from the city, every man to his tent. [w]And Joab returned to Jerusalem unto the king.

23 ¶ Now [x]Joab was over all the host of Israel: [y]and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada was over the Cherethites and over the Pelethites:

24 And [z]Adoram was over the tribute: and Jehoshaphat the son of Ahilud [a]was [†]recorder:

The three years' famine for the Gibeonites cease, by hanging seven of Saul's sons, 1. Rizpah's kindness unto the dead, 10. David burieth the bones of Saul and Jonathan, 12.

THEN there was [a]a famine in the days of David three years, year after year; and David [*]enquired [b]of the LORD.[1] And the LORD answered, [c]It is for [d]Saul, and for his bloody house, because he slew the Gibeonites.

2 And the king called the Gibeonites, and said unto them; (now [e]the Gibeonites were not of the children of Israel, but of the remnant of the Amorites; and the children of Israel had sworn unto them: and Saul sought to slay them, [f]in his zeal to the children of Israel and Judah.)

3 Wherefore David said unto the Gibeonites, What shall I do for you? and [g]wherewith shall I make the atonement, that ye may [h]bless the inheritance of the LORD?

4 And the Gibeonites said unto him, [†]We will have [i]no silver nor gold of Saul, nor of his house; neither for us shalt thou kill any man in Israel. And he said, What ye shall say, that will I do for you.

5 And they answered the king, [k]The man that consumed us, and that [‡]devised against us that we should be destroyed from remaining in any of the coasts of Israel,

6 Let seven men of his sons be delivered unto us, and we will [l]hang them up unto the LORD [m]in Gibeah[2] of Saul, [§]whom the LORD did choose. And the king said, I will give them.

7 But the king spared [n]Mephibosheth, the son of Jonathan, the son of Saul, [o]because of the LORD's oath that was between them, between David and Jonathan the son of Saul.

8 But the king took the two sons of [p]Rizpah the daughter of Aiah, whom she bare unto Saul, Armoni and Mephibosheth; and the five sons of [t]Michal the daughter of Saul, whom she [*]brought up[3] for Adriel the son of Barzillai the Meholathite:

9 And he delivered them into the hands of the Gibeonites, and they hanged them in the hill[4] [q]before the LORD: and they fell all seven together, and were put to death in the days of harvest, in the first days, [r]in the beginning of barley harvest.

10 ¶ And [s]Rizpah the daughter of Aiah [t]took sackcloth, and spread it for her upon the rock, [u]from the beginning of harvest [x]until water dropped upon them out of heaven, and suffered neither [y]the birds of the air to rest on them by day, nor the beasts of the field by night.

11 And it was [z]told David what Rizpah the daughter of Aiah, the concubine of Saul, had done.

12 ¶ And David went and took [*]the bones of Saul and the bones of Jonathan his son from the men of Jabesh-gilead, which had stolen them from the street of [b]Beth-shan, where the Philistines had hanged them, when the Philistines had slain Saul [c]in Gilboa.

13 And he brought up from thence the bones of Saul and the bones of Jonathan his son; and they gathered the bones of them that were hanged.

14 And the bones of Saul and Jonathan his son [d]buried they in the country of Benjamin in [e]Zelah, in the sepulchre of Kish his father:[5] and they performed all that the king commanded. And after that, [f]God was entreated for the land.

15 ¶ Moreover [g]the Philistines had yet war again with Israel; and David went down, protecting the adjacent villages. And she tacitly intimated that Joab, by neglecting this previous measure, was about to destroy the city, to the public injury of the nation, and so to "swallow up the inheritance of the LORD." This seems the proper interpretation of her expostulation: and it accords with the marginal reading; though she expressed herself rather obscurely, perhaps for fear of giving offence. 'As if she had said, When the people saw thee lay siege to the city, they said, Surely they will ask us if we will have peace, and then we shall soon come to an agreement, and have an end.' —[Bp. Patrick.] Some, adhering to the translation in the text, suppose that this city had long been noted as the residence of wise men, who had settled differences by prudent and equitable accommodation; so that it was become proverbial, "that the way to terminate matters in litigation, was to ask counsel at Abel:" and therefore that city ought not rashly to be destroyed. Ver. 20—22. Joab, though guilty of private revenge, was attentive to the public interest, and very willing to settle the dispute: if the citizens therefore would deliver up the traitor, he would not injure them. Thus Sheba's head purchased the safety of the city, and terminated the rebellion: and Joab without fear or shame, (apparently glorying as much in revenging himself, as in serving the public,) returned to David as though nothing had happened, and he was now become too powerful to be removed, or punished, without endangering another rebellion.—Scott.

CHAP. XXI. NATIONAL GUILT AND ITS EXPIATION.—Ver. 1—3. It is not certain whether this famine occurred in the order of time in which it is related, or earlier in the reign of David.—It does not seem to have been very grievous, and the scarcity of the first and second year occasioned no great alarm: but when it continued the third year also, David understood that it was a national judgment, and inquired of God for what particular sin he thus contended with them; perhaps thinking of his own crimes in the matter of Uriah.—The history of Saul gives no account of the transaction which was declared to be the cause of this calamity: but it seems that Saul, in order to increase the possessions of Israel, attempted to extirpate the Gibeonites, who were of the ancient inhabitants of Canaan; though they had submitted to Israel, and had quietly served them for ages; and were protected by the public faith, and a solemn oath ratifying a covenant of peace with them. Yet he did not attempt to extirpate the Amalekites, Philistines, and other hostile nations, whom God commanded him to destroy! These were able and determined to resist, and could not be subdued without apparent danger and difficulty; while the inoffensive Gibeonites might be oppressed with ease, and apparent safety. Perhaps he disliked them the more, for being peculiarly devoted to the service of the priests and the sanctuary; and attempted to destroy them when he slew the priests. It seems that Saul's relations also were disposed to cruelty, and concurred in this bloodshed; and that many Israelites had willingly assisted in the persecution.—The violation of the oath of God, the treachery of Israel towards the Gibeonites, and the murder of them, formed an enormous load of national guilt, which had never been expiated by the punishment of the guilty: and it pleased God in this manner, and so long after, to proceed against the nation for it; to show them his abhorrence of such crimes; to teach rulers to keep at a distance from similar offences themselves, and to punish them in others; and to intimate that the chief punishment of sin is after the death of the offender. And God informed David of the cause of the visitation; that he might take proper measures for expiating the national guilt. Ver. 4—7. As God accepted of the expiation here demanded, we must suppose that both the inquiry of David and the answer of the Gibeonites were directed by some open or secret intimation from him. They did not demand their own liberty, or any accession of wealth, or the death of any other Israelite; but that, in the character of the avengers of the blood of their brethren, they might be permitted to put to death seven of Saul's descendants; whom they would "hang up unto the LORD," as a sacrifice to his justice, and an example to others not to injure or oppress them. They were willing to undertake the trouble, and to bear the odium, of the execution; and would do it in Saul's own city, for a warning to those who had witnessed or assisted in the oppression.—As David consented to this measure in obedience to God, and for the public welfare, and not out of private resentment, he did not violate his oath to Saul: but as he could spare one at least of Saul's descendants, his covenant, and his oath of sacred friendship with Jonathan, required the preservation of his son in preference to all the rest.

VISITATION OF PARENTAL SIN UPON CHILDREN.—Ver. 9—14. As these persons were hung up by the express appointment of God, for an anathema, an accursed thing, a national atonement to divine justice; they were left on the tree or gibbet, till some tokens of the Lord's reconciliation were afforded by seasonable rains. They were not considered to be within the meaning of the law, against the bodies of malefactors being left on a tree all night; for that statute meant that they who were put to death for breaking human laws, should not be treated as "accursed of God." Indeed he may command that, in a particular case, which he prohibits in general; provided it be not intrinsically unjust. He ordered the children to be put to death for the parents' crimes, though magistrates in general were forbidden to do it: and in like manner he might require this treatment of these dead bodies, though, in some respects, contrary to the general rule.—Rizpah improperly fed and indulged her grief by an useless attention to the dead bodies; yet her case was truly pitiable. David doubtless sympathised with and his servants with him, and fought against the Philistines: [b]and David waxed faint.[6]

16 And Ishbi-benob, which was [i]of the sons of [†]the giant, the weight of [‡]whose spear weighed three hundred shekels of brass in weight, he being girded with a new sword, [k]thought to have slain David.

17 But [l]Abishai the son of Zeruiah [m]succoured him, and smote the Philistine, and killed him. Then the men of David sware unto him, saying, [n]Thou shalt go no more out with us to battle, that thou [o]quench not the [§]light of Israel.

18 And it came to pass after this, that there was again a battle with the Philistines at Gob:[7] then [p]Sibbechai the Hushathite slew [‖]Saph, which was of the sons of [*]the giant.

19 And there was again a battle in Gob with the Philistines, where [q]Elhanan the son of [†]Jaare-oregim, a Beth-lehemite, slew the brother of [r]Goliath the Gittite, the staff of whose spear was like a weaver's beam.

20 And there was [s]yet a battle in Gath, where was a man of great stature, that had on every hand six fingers, and on every foot six toes, four and twenty in number; and he also was born to [‡]the giant.

21 And when he [§]defied Israel, [t]Jonathan the son of [‖]Shimeah the brother of David slew him.

22 These four were born to the giant in Gath, and fell by the hand of David, and by the hand of his servants.

CHAP. XXII.

A psalm of thanksgiving for God's powerful deliverance and manifold blessings.

AND [a]David spake unto the LORD [b]the words of this song [c]in the day that the LORD had delivered him out of the hand of all his enemies, and [d]out of the hand of Saul:

2 And he said, [e]The LORD is my rock, and my fortress, and my deliverer:

3 The God of my rock; [f]in him will I trust: he is my [g]shield, and [h]the horn of my salvation, [i]my high tower, and [k]my refuge, [l]my saviour; [m]thou savest me from violence.

4 I [n]will call on the LORD, who is [o]worthy to be praised: [p]so shall I be saved from mine enemies.

5 When the [*]waves of death compassed me, [q]the floods of [†]ungodly men made me afraid;

6 [r]The [‡]sorrows of hell[1] compassed me about; the [s]snares of death prevented me:

7 In [t]my distress I called upon the LORD, and cried to my God: and he [u]did hear my voice [v]out of his temple, and [x]my cry did enter into his ears.

8 Then [y]the earth shook and trembled; [z]the foundations[2] of heaven moved and shook, because he was wroth.

9 There [a]went up a smoke [§]out of his nostrils, and fire out of his mouth devoured: [b]coals were kindled by it.

10 He [c]bowed the heavens also, and came down; and [d]darkness was under his feet.

11 And he rode upon [e]a cherub, and did fly: and he was seen [f]upon the wings of the wind.

12 And he made darkness [g]pavilions round about him, [‖]dark waters, and thick clouds of the skies.

13 Through the brightness before him were [h]coals of fire kindled.

14 The LORD [i]thundered from heaven, and the most High uttered his voice.

15 And he sent out [j]arrows, and scattered them; lightning, and discomfited them.

16 And [k]the channels of the sea appeared, the foundations of the world were discovered, at the [l]rebuking of the LORD, at the blast of the breath of his [*]nostrils.

17 He [m]sent from above, he took me; [n]he drew me out of [†]many waters;

18 He [o]delivered me from my strong enemy; and from them that hated me: for they were too strong for me.

19 They [p]prevented me in the day of my calamity: but [q]the LORD was my stay.

20 He [r]brought me forth also into a large place:[3] he delivered me, because he [s]delighted in me.

21 The LORD [t]rewarded me according to my righteousness: according to the [u]cleanness of my hands hath he recompensed me.

22 For [x]I have kept [y]the ways of the LORD, and [z]have not wickedly departed from my God.

23 For [a]all his [b]judgments were before me: and as for his statutes, [c]I did not depart from them.

24 I was also [d]upright [‡]before him, and have [e]kept myself from mine iniquity.

25 Therefore the LORD hath [f]recompensed me according to my righteousness; according to my cleanness [§]in his eye-sight.

26 With [g]the merciful thou wilt shew thyself merciful, and with the upright man thou wilt shew thyself upright.

27 With [h]the pure thou wilt shew thyself pure; and with [i]the froward thou wilt [‖]shew thyself unsavoury.

28 And [k]the afflicted people thou wilt save: [l]but thine eyes are upon the haughty, that thou mayest bring them down.

29 For thou art my [*]lamp, O LORD: and the LORD will [m]lighten my darkness.

30 For by thee I have [†]run through a the bereaved and aged parent; and gladly embraced the opportunity as soon as it was proper, of relieving her from her melancholy charge, by decently interring them, together with the bones of Saul and his other sons: and by this he avowed that he had not acted out of disrespect to Saul or his family.—The first rain was a token of reconciliation: but after the expiation was finished, the scarcity was removed in answer to prayer: and doubtless the Gibeonites joined in seeking "this blessing for the inheritance of the LORD."—Scott.

SEPULCHRE OF SAUL'S HOUSEHOLD.—Ver. 12. David bethought himself of removing the bodies of Saul and Jonathan from the place where the men of Jabesh-Gilead had decently, but privately and obscurely, interred them, "under a tree," 1 Sam. xxxi. 12, 13. Though the shield of Saul was vilely cast away, as if he had not been anointed with oil, yet let not royal dust be lost in the graves of the common people. Humanity obliges us to respect human bodies, especially of the great and good, in consideration both of what they have been, and of what they ought to be. With them he buried the bodies "of them that were hanged:" for when God's anger was turned away, they were no longer to be looked upon as a curse, ver. 13, 14. When "water dropped upon them out of heaven," ver. 10, that is, when God sent rain to water the earth, (which, perhaps, was not many days after they were hung up,) then they were taken down, for then it appeared "that God was entreated for the land." When justice is done on earth, vengeance from heaven ceases. Through Christ who was hanged on a tree, and so made a curse for us, to expiate our guilt, (though he was himself guiltless,) God is pacified, and is entreated for us: and it is said, Acts xiii. 29, that "when they had fulfilled all that was written of him," in token of that and of God's acceptance of it, "they took him down and laid him in a sepulchre."—Henry.

CHAP. XXII. DAVID'S SONG.—Ver. 1. Observe here, 1. That it has often been the lot of God's people to have many enemies, and to be in imminent danger of falling into their hands. David was a man after God's heart, but not after men's heart; many were those that hated him, and sought his ruin; Saul is particularly named, either, (1.) As distinguished from his enemies of the heathen nations; Saul hated David, but David did not hate Saul, and therefore would not reckon him among his enemies; or, rather, (2.) As the chief of his enemies, that was more malicious and powerful than any of them. Let not those whom God loves marvel if the world hate them. 2. They that trust God in the way of duty shall find him a present help to them in their greatest dangers. David did so, God delivered him out of the hand of Saul, he takes special notice of that; remarkable preservations should be mentioned in our praises with a particular emphasis. He delivered him also "out of the hand of all his enemies," one after another; sometimes in one way, sometimes in another; and David, from his own experience, has assured us, "that though many are the troubles of the righteous, yet the Lord delivers them out of them all," Ps. xxxiv. 19. We shall never be delivered from all our enemies till we get to heaven; and to that heavenly kingdom God will preserve all his, 2 Tim. iv. 18. 3. Those that have received many signal mercies from God ought to give him the glory of them. Every new mercy in our hand should put a new song into our mouth, even praises to our God. Where there is a grateful heart, out of the abundance of that the mouth will speak; David spake, not to himself, only for his own pleasure, or to those about him, only for their instruction, but "to the Lord," for his honour, "the words of this song." Then we sing with grace, when we sing to the Lord. In distress he "cried with his voice," Ps. cxlii. 1, therefore with his voice he gave thanks: that is the sweetest music. 4. We ought to be speedy in our thankful returns to God: "in the day that God delivered him, he sang this song." While the mercy is fresh, and we are most affected with it, let the thank-offering be brought, to be kindled with the fire of that affection.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Ver. 1—20. When we have received mercies from God, we should, without delay, render him our tribute of praise and gratitude: every recent favour should be acknowledged with thankful remembrance of former deliverances; and signal interpositions of the Lord in our behalf ought to be publicly celebrated, with the best endowments which we possess.—They who know the Lord in his glorious perfections, and the various relations in which he stands to his rational creatures, and especially as "a God of salvation;" and who thus learn to fear, trust, love, and serve him, choosing him as their portion, and waiting for his mercy unto eternal life, through Jesus Christ, and according to the covenant which he mediated, may expect from him every conceivable blessing. Nay, words can never express, nor the creation itself afford, objects sufficient to represent all that the Lord is and will be unto them, through time and to eternity. The more they expect and ask from him, in humble faith, the larger blessings shall they receive; while past experiences will encourage and dictate further supplications. But though this felicity belongs to all true believers, yet frequently both the events of providence, and their inward experience seem to indicate the contrary. They are assailed by powerful enemies, and exposed to manifold troubles and dangers, from without; they are disquieted by distressing fears and terrors of conscience, from within; whilst Satan pours in his horrible suggestions, to aggravate their distress, and to urge them to despair. Thus they feel, as it were, the very pains of hell, and are so bound in the snares of death, that they are ready to give up their lives and souls for lost. But in their extreme distress they cry unto the Lord with the greatest earnestness, and he 49 And that bringeth me forth from mine enemies: [z]thou also hast lifted me up on high above them that rose up against me: thou hast delivered me from [a]the violent man.

50 Therefore I will give thanks unto thee, O LORD, [b]among the heathen,[6] and [c]I will sing praises unto thy name.

51 He is [d]the tower of salvation for his king: and sheweth mercy to [e]his anointed, unto David, and to his [f]seed for evermore.

David professeth his faith in God's promises, 1. A catalogue of his mighty men, 8.

NOW these be [a]the last words[1] of David: David the son of Jesse said, and the man who was [b]raised up on high, [c]the anointed of the God of Jacob, and the [d]sweet psalmist of Israel, said,

2 The [e]Spirit of the LORD spake by me, and his word was in my tongue.

3 The [f]God of Israel said, [g]the Rock of Israel spake to me, [*]He that ruleth over men [h]must be just, [i]ruling in the fear of God.

4 And he shall be [k]as the light of [l]the morning, when the sun riseth, even a morning without clouds; as [m]the tender grass springing out of the earth by clear shining after rain.

5 Although [n]my house be not so with God; yet [o]he hath made with me an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things, [p]and sure: for this is [q]all my salvation, and all my [r]desire, although he make it not to [s]grow.

6 But [t]the sons of Belial shall be all of them as [u]thorns thrust away, because they cannot be taken with hands:

7 But the man that shall touch them must be [†]fenced with iron and the staff of a spear; and [x]they shall be utterly burned with fire in the same place.

8 ¶ These be the names of the mighty men whom David had: [‡]The Tachmonite that sat in the seat, chief among the captains; the same was Adino the Eznite: he lift up his spear against eight hundred, [§]whom he slew at one time.

9 And after him was [y]Eleazar the son of Dodo the Ahohite, one of the three mighty men with David, when they [z]defied the Philistines that were there gathered together to battle, and [a]the men of Israel were gone away:

10 He arose, and smote the Philistines until his hand was weary, and his hand clave unto the sword: and [b]the LORD wrought a great victory that day; and [c]the people returned after him only to spoil.

11 And after him was [d]Shammah the son of Agee [e]the Hararite. And the Philistines were gathered together [f]into a troop, where was a piece of ground full of lentiles: and the people fled from the Philistines.

12 But he stood in the midst of the ground, and defended it, and slew the Philistines: and [g]the LORD wrought a great victory.

13 And [*]three of the thirty chief went down,[2] and came to David in the harvest time, supports them, and appears for their relief: so that all their sorrows and fears shall terminate in the display of the glory of God's perfections, and in the evidence of his special love to them; all shall exercise and increase their grace, prepare the way for future comforts, and become the subject of triumphant praise and thanksgiving; and however painful their feelings are at present, the retrospect shall hereafter be delightful.—Ver. 21—33. Under reproaches and persecutions, the testimony of our conscience to our integrity and sincerity in our religious profession, will prove a singular support: and it perfectly consists with the deepest humility and the most simple dependence upon the Saviour. Nor can we without it expect the witness of the comforting Spirit of God. We should therefore "exercise ourselves to have a conscience void of offence towards God and man:" and, earnestly seeking supporting and sanctifying grace, we should steadily persevere in the path of duty, rejecting every temptation to seek relief by forsaking it.—We must keep all God's statutes and judgments before our eyes, without one exception, that we may regulate our conduct and conversation by them; and we must watch and pray especially against those sins which, by constitution, custom, or circumstances, may be called "our own iniquity." Ver. 34—51. All our talents and abilities are from God, and all our improvement of them: whatever services we have performed, or however consistent our walk hath been, the will and the power have been from him: "He is our strength, who maketh our way perfect." Ability and success in our spiritual warfare, liberty from sin and Satan, enlargement of heart in God's service, and preservation in the slippery paths of this ensnaring world, are causes for thankfulness, and not for glorying in ourselves. His gentle rebukes and corrections tend to real advancement, as much as our comforts and prosperity. Armed with the shield of salvation, and "the sword of the Spirit," the Christian soldier, being "strong in the LORD," will pursue his victories, till he hath trodden upon the necks of all his enemies, and received the conqueror's crown. For "the LORD liveth," as the God of strength and salvation, and will never leave us nor forsake us, till he hath brought us forth from all our enemies, and lifted us up on high, above all that rose up against us. In the prospect of that complete salvation, let us joyfully praise him on the field of battle, surrounded with our enemies, and in the midst of our conflicts: and ere long we shall adore him, and sing praises to his name in more exalted strains, surrounded with millions of the redeemed, and innumerable multitudes of holy angels, who will triumph in our victories, and rejoice in our felicity. —But we may here likewise discern the Redeemer's sufferings, and the glory which was to follow: for our sins he was encompassed with the waves of death, the floods of ungodly men, and the very sorrows of hell, in the garden and on the cross. In his distress he called upon the Lord, and was heard, and raised from the dead, and exalted to the throne of glory: whilst his death was attended by the most stupendous displays of the Divine indignation against those who perpetrated that most atrocious crime. In him the Father delighted: his righteousness was perfect, yea, divine: he was justified from the blasphemies of his enemies by his resurrection and ascension. All power in heaven and earth are in his hands: all enemies shall be put under his feet, and he will destroy all who hate him.—Scott.

CHAP. XXIII. DAVID'S WILL AND TESTAMENT.—Ver. 1. We have here the last will and testament of king David, or a codicil annexed to it, after he had settled the crown upon Solomon, and his treasures upon the temple which was to be built. The last words of great and good men are thought worthy to be, in an especial manner, remarked and remembered; David would have those taken notice of, and added, either to his psalms, (as they are here to that in the foregoing chapter,) or to the chronicles of his reign. These words especially, ver. 5, though recorded before, we may suppose, he often repeated for his own consolation, even to his last breath, and therefore they are called his "last words." When we find death approaching, we should endeavour both to honour God, and to edify those about us, with our last words. Let those that have had long experience of God's goodness, and the pleasantness of wisdom, when they come to finish their course, leave a record of that experience, and bear their testimony to the truth of the promise. We have upon record the last words of Jacob and Moses, and here of David, designed, as those, for a legacy to them that were left behind. We are here told, I. Whose last will and testament this is. This is related, either, as is usual, by the testator himself, or rather by the historian, ver. 1. He is described, 1. By the meanness of his original: he was "the son of Jesse." It is good for those who are advanced to be corner stones and top stones, to be reminded, and often to remind themselves, of "the rock out of which they were hewn." 2. The height of his elevation: he "was raised up on high," as one favoured of God, and designed for something great; raised up as a prince, to sit higher than his neighbours, and as a prophet, to see further; for, (1.) He was "the anointed of the God of Jacob," and so was serviceable to the people of God in their civil interests, the protection of their country, and the administration of justice among them. (2.) He was "the sweet psalmist of Israel," and so was serviceable to them in their religious exercises: he penned the psalms, set the tunes, appointed both the singers and the instruments of music, by which the devotions of good people were much excited and enlarged. Note, Singing of psalms is a sweet ordinance, very agreeable to those that delight in praising God. It is reckoned among the honours to which David was raised up, that he was a psalmist; in that, he was as truly great as in his being "the anointed of unto [s]the cave of Adullam: and the troop of the Philistines pitched in [h]the valley of Rephaim.

14 And David was then in [i]an hold, and the [k]garrison of the Philistines was then in Beth-lehem.

15 And David [l]longed, and said, Oh that one would give me drink of the water of the well of Beth-lehem,[3] which is by the gate!

16 And [m]the three mighty men brake through the hosts of the Philistines, and drew water out of the well of Beth-lehem, that was by the gate, and took it, and brought it to David: nevertheless he would not drink thereof, but [n]poured it out unto the LORD.

17 And he said, [o]Be it far from me, O LORD, that I should do this: is not this [p]the blood of the men that went in [q]jeopardy of their lives? therefore he would not drink it. These things did these three mighty men.

18 And [r]Abishai, the brother of Joab, the son of Zeruiah, was chief among three. And he lifted up his spear against three hundred, [t]and slew them, and had the name among three.

19 Was he not most honourable of three? therefore he was their captain: howbeit [s]he attained not unto the first three.

20 And [t]Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, the son of a valiant man, of [u]Kabzeel, ‡who had done many acts, he slew two [$]lionlike men of Moab: he went down also and [x]slew a lion in the midst of a pit in time of snow:

21 And he slew an Egyptian, [l]a goodly man: and the Egyptian had a spear in his hand; but he went down to him with a staff, and plucked the spear out of the Egyptian's hand, and [y]slew him with his own spear.

22 These things did Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and had the name among three mighty men.

23 He was *more honourable than the thirty, but he attained not to the first three. And David set him over his [†]guard.

AND [a]again the anger of the LORD was kindled against Israel, and *he [b]moved David against them to say, [c]Go, number Israel and Judah.

2 For the king said to [d]Joab the captain of the host, which was with him, [†]Go now through all the tribes of Israel, [e]from Dan even to Beer-sheba, and number ye the people, [f]that I may know the number of the people.[1]

3 And Joab said unto the king, [g]Now the LORD thy God add unto the people, how many soever they be, an hundredfold, and that the eyes of my lord the king may see it: but why doth my lord the king delight in this thing?

4 Notwithstanding [h]the king's word prevailed against Joab, and against the captains of the host. And Joab and the captains of the host [i]went out from the presence of the king, to number the people of Israel.

the God of Jacob." Note, It is true preferment to be serviceable to the church in acts of devotion, and instrumental to promote the blessed work of prayer and praise. Observe, Was David a prince? He was so for Jacob. Was he a psalmist? He was so for Israel. Note, The dispensation of the Spirit is given to every man to profit withal, and, therefore, "as every man has received the gift, so let him minister the same."—Henry.

THE EVERLASTING COVENANT.—Ver. 5. David seems here to have turned his reflections on himself and his family; (though this verse is supposed to be peculiarly difficult, and is variously interpreted;) and he could not but regret, that "his house was not so with God," as the preceding statement implied. By his own misconduct, his family was much less religious and prosperous, than it might have been expected; and both he and Israel had suffered many things in consequence. Several grievous and scandalous events had occurred: matters were not yet as he could wish; and he seems to have had his fears concerning his descendants who should succeed him in the kingdom. Perhaps, by prophetical monition, he foresaw that they would neither be happy themselves, nor blessings to Israel, nor instruments of God's glory, in that measure which he desired. He however comforted himself, that "the LORD had made with him an everlasting covenant." God had indeed covenanted to David that his family should succeed him in the kingdom, yet this was not "all his salvation and all his desire;" and could give him comparatively but little consolation in his dying moments, except as it referred to the promised seed, who was to descend from him. By "the everlasting covenant," therefore, David no doubt principally intended the covenant of mercy and peace, which the Lord had made with him, as one who believed in the promised Saviour, and had yielded up himself to be his redeemed servant, and had been made partaker of his sanctifying grace as the seal and pledge of it. This covenant was "from everlasting" in the purposes of God, and shall be "to everlasting" in the blessed effects of it. From age to age sinners are admitted to share its benefits, which believers shall for ever enjoy; and God, the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, shall for ever be glorified through it, in their salvation. It is made with the surety, in behalf of those for whom he engaged; all the blessings of it were purchased with his atoning blood, and are freely bestowed upon all who believe in his name; and it secures to them pardon, righteousness, grace, and "eternal life, as the gift of God through Jesus Christ." It is "ordered in all things and sure:" for in the person, undertaking, and mediation of the Saviour, effectual provision is made for the manifestation of the holiness, the satisfaction of the justice and the honour of the law of God, and the discovery of the evil and desert of sin. While his mercy abounds in the forgiveness and salvation of the chief of sinners; there is an infinite fulness of grace, and of all blessings, treasured up in Christ, for the supply of those who seek for this salvation; a way opened to the mercy-seat of God, in which they may come in humble confidence; ordinances appointed, through which these blessings are communicated; invitations to draw near, and "exceedingly great and precious promises" to plead with God. All those things, which in one respect are commanded, in another are promised; and while we pray for the performance of the promise, we are enabled to obey the command, to repent, to forsake sin, to turn unto God, and to walk in newness of life.—Scott.

CHAP. XXIV. DAVID'S SIN IN NUMBERING THE PEOPLE.—Ver. 1—9. David's thought and purpose of numbering the people, sprang from his remaining depravity, excited by Satan's suggestions: and as this "was of the LORD," (in the same manner that it was of him that the Canaanites should be hardened, and that Ahab should be deceived,) he withdrew every internal or external restraint, and left him to follow his own counsels. Thus, by a manner of expression common in Scripture, the Lord is said to have "moved David against Israel:" for certainly this is the most natural construction of the words: but other passages prove, that the sinful disposition and resolution could not be from God, though he both permitted them, and overruled them to accomplish his own wise and righteous purposes: and this example throws light upon the doctrine of God's providential government of the world, and suggests many practical instructions.—But what constituted David's sin in numbering the people? Some expositors think it was a contempt of the promise that they should be innumerable; and that they ought not to have been numbered, without express command, as in the days of Moses: and others suppose that David neglected to collect the half-shekel, a piece for the use of the sanctuary, which should have attended the numbering of them. It, however, seems evident, that pride both induced David to this measure, and rendered it so very displeasing to the Lord. Elated with the prosperity and extent of his dominions, he wished to know, and that others might know, the number of his subjects who were capable of bearing arms. This originated from an ambitious curiosity, and an ostentatious vanity; and probably it was accompanied with a secret complacency in his own good conduct, under whose government Israel had attained this prosperity, and with an improper dependence on the number and valour of his forces. As he was far advanced in life, he probably indulged the idea of having it said, how populous and flourishing a kingdom he had left to his posterity. It is likewise evident, that the chastisement was especially levelled against his pride and ambition. These evils had before been secretly indulged: but the Lord would have restrained them, had he not seen it best to permit them to break forth, both for the people's punishment, and David's deeper humiliation, as a 9 And Joab gave up the sum of the number of the people unto the king: and there were in Israel eight hundred thousand valiant men that drew the sword; and the men of Judah were five hundred thousand men.

10 ¶ And [r]David's heart smote him[3] after that he had numbered the people. And David said unto the LORD, [s]I have sinned greatly in that I have done: and now, I beseech thee, O LORD, [t]take away the iniquity of thy servant; for I have done very [u]foolishly.

11 For when David was up in the morning, the word of the LORD came unto the prophet [x]Gad, David's [y]seer, saying, 12 Go, and say unto David, Thus saith the LORD, [z]I offer thee three things; choose thee one of them, [a]that I may do it unto thee.

13 So Gad came to David, and told him, and said unto him, Shall [b]seven years of famine come unto thee in thy land? or wilt thou [c]flee three months before thine enemies, while they pursue thee? or that there be [d]three days' pestilence in thy land? now advise, and see what answer I shall return to him that sent me.

14 And David said unto Gad, [e]I am in a great strait: let us fall now into the hand of the LORD, (for his mercies are [f]great), and [g]let me not fall into the hand of man.

15 ¶ So [h]the LORD sent a pestilence upon Israel from the morning even to the time appointed:[4] and there died of the people [i]from Dan even to Beer-sheba [k]seventy thousand men.

16 And when [l]the angel stretched out his hand upon Jerusalem to destroy it, the LORD [m]repented him of the evil, and said to the angel that destroyed the people, [n]It is enough; stay now thine hand. And the angel of the LORD was by the thrashing-place of [o]Araunah [p]the Jebusite.

THE FIRST BOOK OF THE KINGS,

COMMONLY CALLED

THE THIRD BOOK OF THE KINGS.

THE two following books contain, as their name imports, the history of Judah and Israel, under the government of kings, from the close of David's reign to the Babylonish captivity, during about four hundred and twenty-seven years. They seem originally to have formed but one book, and to have been called Vah-yach David, from the first words; but they were afterwards divided into two, and called "The First and Second Books of the Kings," and in some versions, "The Third and Fourth Books of the Kings." It is evident that they contain an abstract of the history compiled from much more copious records, which seem to have been collected and preserved by contemporary prophets (xi. 41; xix. 29; xv. 31; xxii. 39, 45; 2 Chr. ix. 29; xii. 15; xiii. 22; xx, 34; xxvi. 22): and, indeed, a considerable part of the transactions of their own times is recorded in connexion with the prophecies of Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel. It is, however, uncertain by whom this compilation was made; but if Ezra, as it is generally and probably supposed, compiled the books of Chronicles, it is not likely that (according to the opinion of some learned men), he compiled these also, as they form a distinct history of the same times. If, therefore, they were arranged in the present manner principally by one sacred writer, they who ascribe them to Jeremiah seem to have adopted the more probable opinion. Indeed, the second book of the Kings, and his prophecy, end with the narrative of the same events; though, perhaps, both were added after his death by another hand; and it is not unlikely that some other trivial altera- physician permits some disorders to come forward to a crisis, that the cure may be radical; which is more salutary than merely for a time to suspend their effects. —Scott.

THE PESTILENCE.—A pestilence was sent, ver. 15, from Dan to Beer-Sheba, from one end of the kingdom to the other, which shows it to come immediately from God's hand, and not from any natural causes: David had his choice; he suffers by miracle, and not by ordinary means. For the continuance of it, it lasted from morning (this very morning on which it was put to David's choice) to the time appointed, that is, to the third day, so Mr. Poole; or only to the evening of the first day, the time appointed for the evening sacrifice, so Bishop Patrick and others, who reckon that the pestilence lasted but nine hours, and that, in compassion to David, God shortened the time he had first mentioned. The execution the pestilence did was very severe, "there died seventy thousand men," that were all well, and sick, and dead, in a few hours. What a great cry, we may suppose, was there now throughout all the land of Israel, as there was in Egypt when the first-born were slain: but that was at midnight, this in the day-time, Ps. xci. 6. See the power of the angels, when God gives them commission, either to save or destroy: Joab is nine months in passing with his pen, the angel but nine hours in passing with his sword, through all the coasts and corners of the land of Israel. See how easily God can bring down the proudest sinners, and how much we owe daily to the divine patience. David's adultery is punished for the present, only with the death of one infant, his pride with the death of all those thousands; so much does God hate pride. The number slain amounts almost to half a decimation; seventy thousand was about one in twenty: now, we may suppose, David's flesh "trembled for fear of God, and he was afraid of his judgments," Ps. cxix. 10.—Henry.

THE DESTROYING ANGEL.—Ver. 17. Probably the angel had before been invisible: but at length "David lifted up his eyes, and saw the angel of the LORD stand between the earth and the heaven, having a drawn sword in his hand, stretched over Jerusalem; then David and the elders of Israel, who were clothed in sackcloth, fell on their faces." The "drawn sword" was an emblem of the divine justice about to be executed upon the city. David had before humbled himself in the sight of God, and, no doubt, had earnestly interceded for the people; but this sight affected him more than ever: and, while he and the elders prostrated themselves upon the ground, he poured out his soul before God in fervent prayer for his subjects, and especially for Jerusalem. He pleaded, that "he had commanded the people to be numbered," that "he had sinned, and done evil indeed:" and entreated that, as the whole blame belonged to him, so the indignation might cease in the punishment of him and his family; 1 Chron. xxi. 14—17. His guilt indeed occasioned the judgment: but the people were far from that innocency which David supposed; for their wickedness was in reality the cause of the calamity. His intercession, however, prevailed: and it was doubtless in answer to his prayer, that the Lord said to the destroying angel, "It is enough: stay now thine hand." —Scott.

THE ALTAR OF GRATITUDE.—Araunah, when he understood David's business, ver. 21, generously offered him, not only the ground to build his altar on, but "oxen for sacrifices," and other things that might be of use to him in the service, ver. 22, and all this gratis, and a good prayer unto the bargain; "The Lord thy God accept thee!" This he did, 1. Because he had a generous spirit with a good estate. "He gave as a king," ver. 23; though an ordinary subject, he had the spirit of a prince. In the Hebrew it is, "He gave, even the king to the king," whence it is supposed that Araunah had been king of the Jebusites in that place; or was descended from their royal family, though now a tributary to David. 2. Because he greatly honoured David, though his conqueror, upon the score of his personal merits, and never thought he could do too much to oblige him. 3. Because he had an affection for Israel, and earnestly desired that "the plague might be stayed;" and the honour of its being stayed at "his threshing-floor" he would account a valuable consideration for all he now tendered to David. David resolves to pay the full value of it, and does so, ver. 24. Here were two generous souls well met. Araunah is very willing to give: but David is determined to buy, and, for a good reason, he will not offer that to God which cost him nothing. He would not take advantage of the pious Jebusite's generosity; he thanks him, no doubt, for his kind offer, but pays him now "fifty shekels of silver," for the floor and the oxen, for the present service, and afterward 600 shekels of gold for the ground adjoining, to build the temple on. Note, Those know not what religion is, all whose care it is to make it cheap and easy to themselves, and who are best pleased with that which costs them least pains or money. What have we our substance for, but to honour God with it: and how can it be better bestowed? The building of the altar, and the offering of the proper sacrifices upon it, ver. 25. Burnt-offerings, to the glory of God's justice in the execution that had been done; and peace-offerings, to the glory of his mercy in the seasonable staying of the process. Hereupon, God showed (it is supposed by fire from heaven consuming the sacrifices) that "he was entreated for the land," and that it was in mercy that the plague was removed, and in token of God's being reconciled both to prince and people. Christ is our Altar, our Sacrifice; in him alone we may expect to find favour with God, to escape his wrath, and the sword, the flaming sword, of that cherubim which "keeps the way of the tree of life."—Henry.

tions were made in the days of Ezra, to render the narrative more perspicuous to the Jews after the captivity. They have, however, been constantly received, both by Jews and Christians, as a part of the sacred canon, the holy Scriptures; and the events recorded are frequently referred to in the New Testament (Matt. i. 7-12; vi. 29; xii. 42; Luke iv. 25-27; Acts ii. 29, vii. 47-50; Jam. v. 17, 18). It is observable also, that our Lord and his apostle James not only speak of them as authentic records, and a part of the sacred oracles as received by the Jews, but especially attest some of the most wonderful miracles recorded in them, and thus affix a direct sanction to them, as given by inspiration of God. They also contain many prophecies, especially that of Josiah, who was foretold by name three hundred years before his birth (Note, 1 Kings xiii. 2); but none of these predictions, in their most evident literal meaning, refer to events later than the Babylonish captivity. After the death of David, the sacred historian records the principal transactions of Solomon's long and peaceable reign, which, however, was covered with a dark cloud towards the close; and under his successor, the nation was divided into the two distinct kingdoms of Judah and Israel. The descendants of Solomon reigned over that of Judah till the captivity, for about three hundred and eighty-seven years. So that from the accession of David, during a course of four hundred and sixty-seven years, the throne was filled by his descendants, in lineal descent, except as the sons of Josiah succeeded one another. During this long term of years there was not a single revolution or civil war, and but one short interruption by Athaliah's usurpation. Perhaps it would be difficult to find, in universal history, anything equal to this permanent internal order and tranquillity. Let the reader recollect how many revolutions, civil wars, murders of reigning kings by rivals and successors, and changes in the succession, are found in the English history during the same number of years. Above half the kings of Judah supported true religion, and many of them were eminently pious men; and it is remarkable that their reigns were much longer than those of the wicked princes (xi. 42; xv. 10; xxii. 42; 2 Kings, xv. 2, 33; xviii. 2; xxii. 1); so that they comprise much above three hundred years of this period, and the greatest part of this time was evidently passed either in profound peace or in remarkable prosperity. Let this state of things be compared with the history of Greece or Rome, and the situation of Judah must be allowed to have been vastly more desirable than that of these celebrated heathen nations. The kingdom of Israel continued about two hundred and fifty-four years, till the Assyrian captivity. The nineteen kings, of several families, who during this period reigned in succession, were all idolaters, and most of them monsters of iniquity; yet the Lord by his prophets, especially by Elijah and Elisha, preserved a considerable degree of true religion in the land, till the measure of their national wickedness was full; and then they were finally dispersed among the Gentiles, except as a remnant of them was incorporated among the Jews. In these books the history of the two kingdoms is carried on together, and the whole forms an admirable comment on the prophecies delivered to the nation by Moses and Joshua (Notes, Lev. xxiv.; Deut. iv., xxviii., xxix., xxx., xxxi., xxxii.; Josh. xxiii. 15, 16), and a striking illustration of the proverb, "Righteousness exalteth a nation, but sin is the reproach of any people." The first book contains the history of about a hundred and twenty years. Connected with the peace and prosperity of Solomon's reign, and the fame of his wisdom, a full account is given of the temple having been built by him. God had commanded Israel to offer all their sacrifices at one place; Shiloh had for some time been that place; and the ark had been removed to Zion by David, in order that a temple might there be built, which Solomon his son accomplished. Solomon's fall into idolatry seems evidently implied in the book of Ecclesiastes; and the history of Rehoboam's imprudence, the division of his kingdom, Jeroboam's idolatry, and the subsequent events to the end of the book, are assumed as undoubted facts in the writings of all the prophets. So entirely does the whole canon of Scripture coincide; while each part confirms, and receives confirmation from, all the rest.

NOW king David was [a]old[1] [b]and *stricken in years; and they covered him with clothes, but he gat no heat.

2 Wherefore his servants said unto him, †Let there be sought for my lord the king ‡a young virgin; and let her [d]stand before the king, and let her [§]cherish him, and let her [e]lie in thy bosom, that my lord the king may [f]get heat.

3 So [g]they sought for a fair damsel throughout all the coasts of Israel, and found [h]Abishag a [i]Shunammite,[2] and brought her to the king.

4 And the damsel was very fair, and cherished the king, and ministered to him: but the king [k]knew her not.

5 ¶ Then [l]Adonijah the son of Haggith [m]exalted himself, saying, [n]I will [l]be king: and [o]he prepared him chariots and horsemen, and fifty men to run before him.

6 And his father [p]had not displeased him[3] *at any time in saying, Why hast thou done so? and he also was a [q]very goodly man; and his mother [r]bare him after Absalom.

7 And †he [s]conferred with [t]Joab the son of Zeruiah, and with [u]Abiathar the priest: and they ‡following Adonijah helped him.

8 But [v]Zadok the priest, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and [x]Nathan the prophet, and [y]Shimei, and Rei, and [z]the mighty men which belonged to David, were not with Adonijah.

9 And Adonijah [a]slew sheep and oxen and fat cattle by the stone of Zoheleth, which is by [§]En-rogel,[4] and [b]called all his brethren the king's sons, and all the men of Judah the king's servants:

10 But [c]Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah, and the mighty men, and Solomon his brother, he called not.

11 ¶ Wherefore [d]Nathan spake[5] unto Bath-sheba the mother of Solomon, saying, Hast thou not heard that *Adonijah the son of Haggith doth reign, and David our lord knoweth it not?

12 Now therefore come, [f]let me, I pray thee, give thee counsel, that thou mayest [g]save thine own life, and [h]the life of thy son Solomon.

13 Go and get thee in unto king David, and say unto him, Didst not thou, my lord, O king, swear unto thine handmaid, saying, [i]Assuredly Solomon thy son shall reign after me, and he shall [j]sit upon my throne? why then doth Adonijah reign?

14 Behold, while thou yet talkest there with the king, [k]I also will come in after thee, and ‖confirm thy words.

15 ¶ And Bath-sheba went in unto the king into the chamber: and the king was [l]very old; and Abishag the Shunammite ministered unto the king.

16 And Bath-sheba [m]bowed, and did obeisance unto the king. [n]And the king said, *What wouldest thou?

17 And she said unto him, [o]My lord, [p]thou swarest by the LORD thy God unto thine handmaid, saying, Assuredly Solomon thy son shall reign after me, and he shall sit upon my throne;

CHAP. I. DAVID'S OLD AGE.—Ver. 1. David, in the foregoing chapter, had, by the great mercy of God, escaped the sword of the destroying angel; but our deliverances from or through diseases and dangers, are but reprieves; if the candle be not blown out, it will burn out of itself. We have David here sinking under the infirmities of old age, and brought by them to the gates of the grave. He that "cometh up out of the pit shall fall into the snare;" and, one way or other, "we must needs die." 1. It would have troubled one to see David so infirm. He was old, and his natural heat so wasted, that no clothes could keep him warm, ver. 1. David had been a valiant active man, and a man of business, and very vehement had the flame always been in his breast; and yet now his blood is chilled and stagnated, he is confined to his bed, and there can get no heat. He was now seventy years old. Many at that age are as lively and fit for business as ever: but David was now chastised for his former sins, especially that in the matter of Uriah, and felt from his former toils, and the hardships he had gone through in his youth, which then he made nothing of, but was now the worse for. "Let not the strong man glory in his strength," which may soon be weakened by sickness, or, at last, will be weakened by old age. Let young people "remember their Creator in the days of their youth," before these evil days come. What our hand finds to do for God, and our souls, and our generation, let us do with all our might, because the night comes, the night of old age, in which no man can work; and, when our strength is gone, it will be a comfort to remember that we used it well. 2. It would have troubled one to see his physicians so weak and unskilful, that they knew no other way of relieving him than by outward applications. No cordials, no spirits, but, (1.) "They covered him with clothes," which, when there is any inward heat, will keep it in, and so increase it; but, where it is not, they have none to communicate, no, not royal clothing. Elihu makes it a difficulty to understand "how our garments are warm upon us," Job xxxvii. 17, but, if God deny his blessing, men "clothe them, and there is none warm," Hag. i. 6. David here was not. (2.) They foolishly prescribed nuptials to one that should rather have been preparing for his funeral, ver. 2—4, but they knew what would gratify their own corruptions, and perhaps were too willing to gratify his, under colour of consulting his health; his prophets should have been consulted as well as his physicians, in an affair of this nature. However, this might be excused, then, when even good men ignorantly allowed themselves to have many wives. We now have not so learned of Christ, but are taught, that one man must have but one wife, Matth. xix. 5. And further, "that it is good for a man not to touch a woman," 1 Cor. vii. 1.—Henry.

ADONIJAH'S TREASON AND HIS COADJUTORS.—Ver. 5, 6. Adonijah could not be ignorant that Solomon had been appointed by God himself to succeed David in the kingdom, and his whole conduct shows that he considered him alone as his rival. After the death of Absalom, Adonijah was David's eldest son: and no doubt he considered the kingdom as his birthright, and confided in the support of the people to seize upon it; without any regard to his father, or to the revealed will of God. It is remarkable how frequently the first-born were set aside by his express appointment. In the ordinary course of things, it is expedient that the primogeniture should have the precedency; and the judicial law of Moses, (as well as the civil laws of most nations,) was formed accordingly. But the examples of Jacob, Judah, the sons of Joseph, David, Solomon, and others, prove that this is not grounded on moral obligation, is not divine, or unalterable, or to be put in competition with the welfare of whole nations, and the liberty and rights of all the rest of mankind; according to the sentiments of some authors, who most absurdly ground their doctrine upon the word of God, though it is evidently contradictory to it! Absalom had been displeased with his father, though unjustly, because of the disgrace under which he laid him for the murder of Amnon: but David had never given Adonijah the least cause of displeasure; except that, in obedience to God, he intended Solomon to be his successor. It is probable that Adonijah was of an imperious disposition; and David very imprudently indulged him, and never restrained or reproved him in any matter. This was David's fault: for he ought to have exerted his authority, and kept him in subjection; but at the same time it aggravated Adonijah's contempt and ingratitude. He seems to have greatly resembled his elder brother Absalom: like him, he was too much indulged and beloved on account of his exterior accomplishments: and he succeeded to his ambitious projects, though he concealed and deferred them, till his father was, as he supposed, finally incapacitated for business. Ver. 7. It seems wonderful that Joab and Abiathar, who were persons of years, experience, and capacity; who had long attended on David, and were highly preferred under him; and who doubtless understood his intentions concerning Solomon, should at last concur in Adonijah's conspiracy. But perhaps Joab, though attached to David, was not favourable to Solomon, and preferred Adonijah as more congenial with his own disposition. Being destitute of piety, he disregarded the Divine appointment, and deemed it more politic to place the eldest son upon the throne; and no wrong to David, who, he might think, injured Adonijah in preferring his younger brother. Perhaps he was still afraid of being called to account for his murders; and hoped to secure himself, to continue his preferment, and to increase his influence, by helping Adonijah to the kingdom; and it may be supposed, that he secretly resented David's conduct in attempting to lay him aside, and to put Amasa in his place. the sons of the king, and Abiathar the priest, and Joab the captain of the host: but Solomon thy servant hath he not called.

20 And thou, my lord, O king, [t]the eyes of all Israel are upon thee, that [u]thou shouldest tell them who shall sit on the throne of my lord the king after him.

21 Otherwise it shall come to pass, when my lord the king shall [v]sleep with his fathers, that I and my son Solomon shall be counted [†]offenders.[6]

22 ¶ And, lo, [x]while she yet talked with the king, Nathan the prophet also came in.

23 And they told the king, saying, Behold, Nathan the prophet. And when he was come in before the king, [y]he bowed himself before the king with his face to the ground.

24 And Nathan said, My lord, O king, [z]hast thou said, Adonijah shall [a]reign after me, and he shall sit upon my throne?

25 For he is gone down this day, and hath [b]slain oxen and fat cattle and sheep in abundance, and hath called all the king's sons, and the captains of the host, and Abiathar the priest; and, behold, they eat and drink before him, and say, [‡]God save king Adonijah.

26 But me, even [c]me thy servant,[7] and Zadok the priest, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and thy servant Solomon, hath he not called.

27 Is this thing done by my lord the king, [d]and thou hast not shewed it unto thy servant, who should sit on the throne of my lord the king after him?

28 ¶ Then king David answered and said, Call me Bath-sheba. And she came [§]into the king's presence, and stood before the king.

29 And the king sware, and said, [e]As the LORD liveth, that [f]hath redeemed my soul of all distress,

30 Even [g]as I sware unto thee by the LORD God of Israel, saying, Assuredly Solomon thy son shall reign after me, and he shall sit upon my throne in my stead; even so will I certainly do this day.

31 Then Bath-sheba bowed with her face to the earth, and [h]did reverence to the king, and said, [i]Let my lord king David live for ever.

32 ¶ And king David said, Call me [k]Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada. And they came before the king.

33 The king also said unto them, Take with you the servants of your lord, and cause Solomon my son [l]to ride [l]upon mine own [m]mule, and bring him down to [n]Gihon:

34 And let [o]Zadok the priest and Nathan the prophet anoint him there king over Israel: and [p]blow ye with the trumpet, and say, [q]God save king Solomon.

35 Then ye shall come up after him, that he may come and [r]sit upon my throne; for he shall be king in my stead: and [s]I have appointed him to be ruler over Israel and over Judah.

36 And Benaiah the son of Jehoiada answered the king, and said, [t]Amen:[8] [u]the LORD God of my lord the king say so too.

37 As [x]the LORD hath been with my lord the king, even so be he with Solomon, [y]and make his throne greater than the throne of my lord king David.

38 ¶ So [z]Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and [a]the Cherethites, and the Pelethites, went down, and caused Solomon to ride upon [b]king David's mule, and brought him to Gihon.

39 And Zadok the priest took [c]an horn of oil [d]out of the tabernacle, and [e]anointed Solomon. And they blew the trumpet; and [f]all the people said, God save king Solomon.

40 And all the people came up after him, and the people piped with [*]pipes, and [g]rejoiced with great joy, so that the earth rent with the sound of them.

41 ¶ And Adonijah and all the guests that were with him heard it [h]as they had made an end of eating. And when Joab heard the sound of the trumpet, he said, [i]Wherefore is this noise of [k]the city being in an uproar?

42 And while he yet spake, behold, [l]Jonathan the son of Abiathar the priest came: and Adonijah said unto him, Come in; for thou art [m]a valiant man,[9] and bringest good tidings.

43 And Jonathan answered and said to Adonijah, [n]Verily our lord king David hath made Solomon king.

44 And the king hath sent with him Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and the Cherethites, and the Pelethites, and they have caused him to ride upon the king's mule:

45 And Zadok the priest and Nathan the prophet have anointed him king in Gihon: and they are come up from thence rejoicing, so that [o]the city rang again. [p]This is the noise that ye have heard.

46 And also Solomon [q]sitteth on the throne of the kingdom.

47 And moreover the king's servants came to [r]bless our lord king David, saying, [s]God make the name of Solomon better than thy name, and make his throne greater than thy throne. And the king [t]bowed himself upon the bed.[10]

48 And also thus saith the king, [u]Blessed high priest, seems to have been less regarded by David than Zadok was: and perhaps he suspected that Solomon would set his family aside, in favour of the line of Eleazar to which Zadok belonged; but by attaching himself to Adonijah, he hastened that event, and showed that David had good reasons for preferring Zadok, who probably was a man of more serious religion. Ver. 8—10. Adonijah knew that it would be in vain and dangerous to tamper with Zadok, Nathan, and Benaiah, who were firmly attached to the cause of Solomon, as well as that of David. It is highly improbable that Shimei, the Benjamite, would be much regarded by either party. Solomon afterwards preferred a person of this name, chap. iv. 18; and probably he was a man of considerable consequence. We know nothing further of Rei, but no doubt he was a person of rank and great influence. The mighty men were the chieftains before enumerated. It is most likely that Adonijah made a solemn sacrifice, as well as a magnificent feast, on the occasion; and thus he concealed his designs till ripe for execution.—En-rogel was in the vicinity of Jerusalem.—Scott.

PROCLAMATION OF SOLOMON.—The persons David entrusted with this great affair were, Zadok, Nathan, and Benaiah, men of power and interest, whom David had always reposed a confidence in, and found faithful to him, and whom Adonijah had passed by in his invitation, ver. 10. David orders them forthwith, with all possible solemnity, to proclaim Solomon; they must take with them "the servants of their Lord," the life-guards, and all the servants of the household; they must set Solomon on the mule the king used to ride, for he kept not such stables of horses as his son afterward did; he appoints them whither to go, ver. 33, and ver. 34, 35, what to do. 1. Zadok and Nathan, the two ecclesiastical persons, must, in God's name, anoint him king: for though he was not the first of his family, as Saul and David were, yet he was a younger son, was made king by divine appointment, and his title was contested, which made it necessary that hereby it should be settled. This unction was typical of the designation and qualification of the Messiah, or Christ, the anointed one, on whom the Spirit, that oil of gladness, was poured without measure, Heb. i. 9, Ps. lxxxix. 20. And all real Christians, being "heirs of the kingdom," Jam. ii. 5, do from him "receive the anointing," 1 John ii. 27. 2. The great officers, civil and military, are ordered to give public notice of this, and to express the public joy upon this occasion, by sound of trumpet, by which the law of Moses directed the gracing of large solemnities; to this must be added the acclamations of the people, "Let king Solomon live, let him prosper, let his kingdom be established and perpetuated, and let him long continue in the enjoyment of it;" so it had been promised concerning him, Ps. lxxii. 15. "He shall live." 3. They must then bring him in state to the city of David, and he must sit upon the throne of his father, as his substitute now, or viceroy, to despatch public business during his weakness, and be his successor after his death; "he shall be king in my stead." It would be a great satisfaction to David himself, and to all parties concerned, to have this done immediately, that, upon the demise of the king, there might be no dispute, or agitation in the public affairs. David was far from grudging his successor the honour of appearing such in his life-time, and yet perhaps was so taken up with his devotions on his sick bed, that, if he had not been put in mind of it by others, this great good work, which was so necessary to the public repose, had been left undone.

DEFEAT OF ADONIJAH'S SCHEME.—Solomon's proclamation effectually crushed Adonijah's attempt; it spoiled their sport, dispersed their company, and obliged every man to shift for his own safety. "The triumphing of the wicked is short." They were building a castle in the air, which, having no foundation, would soon fall, and crush them; they were afraid of being taken in the fact, while they were together hatching their treason, and therefore each one made the best of his way. Adonijah himself was in great terror; he was now as much depressed as he had been elevated, ver. 42, 50; he had despised Solomon, as not worthy to be his guest, ver. 10, but now he dreads him as his judge; he "feared because of Solomon." Thus they who oppose Christ and his kingdom will shortly be made to tremble before him, and call, in vain, to rocks and mountains to shelter them from his wrath. He "took hold on the horns of the altar," which was always looked upon as a sanctuary, or place of refuge, Exod. xxi. 14, intimating thereby, that he durst not stand a trial, but threw himself upon the mercy of his prince, in suing for which, he relied upon no other plea than the mercy of God, which was manifested in the institution and acceptance of the sacrifices that were offered on that altar, and the remission of sin thereupon. Perhaps Adonijah had formerly slighted the service of the altar, yet now he courts the protection of it. Many who, in the day of their security, neglect the great salvation, under the arrests of the terrors of the Lord, would gladly be beholden to Christ and his merit, and, when it is too late, "will catch hold of the horns of that altar." By those who brought Solomon tidings where he was, Adonijah sent a request for his life, ver. 51. "Let king Solomon swear to me that he will not slay his servant." He owns Solomon for his prince, and himself his servant, dares not justify himself, but "makes supplication to his judge." It was a great change with him; he that, in the morning, was grasping at a crown, is, before night, begging for his life. Then Adonijah reigns, now Adonijah trembles, and cannot think himself safe unless Solomon promise, with an oath, not to put him to death. Solomon discharged him, upon his good behaviour, ver. 52, 53. He considers he is his brother; it was the first offence, perhaps being so soon made sensible of his error, and then not persisting in his rebellion,

7 But shew kindness unto the sons of [z]Barzillai the Gileadite,[3] and let them be of those that [a]eat at thy table: for so they came to me [b]when I fled because of Absalom thy brother.

8 And, behold, thou hast with thee [c]Shimei[4] the son of Gera, a Benjamite of Bahurim, which cursed me with a [‡]grievous curse in the day when I went to Mahanaim: but [d]he came down to meet me at Jordan, and I sware to him by the LORD, saying, I will not put thee to death with the sword.

9 Now therefore [e]hold him not guiltless: for thou art [f]a wise man, and knowest what thou oughtest to do unto him; but [g]his hoar head bring thou down to the grave [h]with blood.

10 ¶ So [i]David slept with his fathers, and was buried in [j]the city of David.

11 And the days that David [k]reigned over Israel were forty years: seven years reigned he in Hebron, and thirty and three years reigned he in Jerusalem.

12 ¶ Then [l]sat Solomon upon the throne of David his father;[5] and [m]his kingdom was established greatly.

13 ¶ And [n]Adonijah the son of Haggith came to Bath-sheba the mother of Solomon. And she said, [o]Comest thou peaceably? And he said, Peaceably.

14 He said moreover, [p]I have somewhat to say unto thee. And she said, Say on.

15 And he said, [q]Thou knowest that the kingdom was mine, and that all Israel set their faces on me, that I should reign: howbeit the kingdom is turned about, and is become my brother's; for [r]it was his from the LORD.

16 And now I ask one petition of thee, [i]deny me not. And she said unto him, Say on.

17 And he said, Speak, I pray thee, unto Solomon the king, (for he will not say thee nay,) that he give me [s]Abishag the Shunammite to wife.

18 And Bath-sheba said, [t]Well; I will speak for thee unto the king.

19 Bath-sheba therefore went unto king Solomon, to speak unto him for Adonijah. And the king [u]rose up to meet her, and bowed himself unto her, and sat down on his throne, and caused a seat to be set for the king's mother;[6] and [x]she sat on his right hand.

20 Then she said, [y]I desire one small petition of thee; I pray thee, say me not nay. And the king said unto her, [z]Ask on, my mother: for I will not say thee nay.

21 And she said, [a]Let Abishag the Shunammite be given to Adonijah thy brother to wife.

22 And king Solomon answered and said he might prove, not only a peaceable, but a serviceable subject, and therefore, if he will conduct himself well for the future, what is past shall be pardoned: but, if he be found disaffected, turbulent, and aspiring, this offence shall be remembered against him, he shall be called up upon his former conviction, (as our law speaks,) and execution shall be awarded against him. Thus the Son of David receives those to mercy that have been rebellious—Henry.

CHAP. II. DAVID'S DYING CHARGES.—Ver. 5, 6. These dying counsels of David ought not to be imputed to personal resentment; but to a regard to justice, and a wise and pious concern for the security of Solomon's throne, which was the cause of God and of Israel.—Joab had long deserved to die; and David's timidity had left bloodguiltiness upon his family and kingdom. His late conspiracy proved him to be a factious and dangerous person: and, though his influence seems to have been weakened by it, yet his party was still so strong, that it was not probable Solomon would reign in peace whilst he lived.—He had not so much as attempted to conceal the base murders which he had committed; but he avowed and vindicated them without shame or fear of punishment; and it was evident that he did not now repent, but would readily repeat them, to carry his purpose, and secure his preferment. His murders were crimes against David, as committed upon two men who were connected with David: and yet they were so conducted, as to bring him into suspicion as if privy to them. David, therefore, reminded his successor to expiate the guilt of these murders, by Joab's blood, "that he, and his kingdom and family, might be guiltless." It is observable that David did not blame Joab for killing Absalom: being doubtless conscious that he deserved to die, and that his own desire to spare him was a weakness and a sin. Ver. 8, 9. Shimei also deserved to die, though for an offence of a different kind from Joab's. Probably he retained his old enmity to the family of David, and his partiality to the house of Saul. Solomon was not bound by the oath that David had sworn, not to put him to death: his punishment at first would indeed have been a salutary act of justice, yet David would not then consent to it, because unsuitable to his circumstances. But the case was different with Solomon; who might take occasion from some recent offence, to remember the old crimes, and to execute deserved vengeance on an irreconcilable enemy to him and the peace of the kingdom. David therefore counselled him, not to trust Shimei, but to watch him narrowly; and he would be sure to find just cause for punishing him.—Scott.

DAVID'S DEATH.—David's death and burial, ver. 10. He "was buried in the city of David;" not in the burying place of his father, as Saul was, but in his own city, which he was the founder of. There were set the thrones, and there the tombs of the house of David. Now "David, after he had served his own generation, by the will of God, fell asleep, and was laid to his fathers, and saw corruption," Acts xiii. 36, and see Acts ii. 29. His epitaph may be taken from 2 Sam. xxiii. 1, Here lies "David the son of Jesse, the man who was raised up on high, the anointed of the God of Jacob, and the sweet psalmist of Israel;" adding his own words, Ps. xvi. 9, "My flesh also shall rest in hope." Josephus says, that, beside the usual magnificence with which his son Solomon buried him, he put into his sepulchre a vast deal of money: and that, 1300 years after, (so he reckons,) it was opened by Hircanus the high priest, in the time of Antiochus, and 3000 talents taken out for the public service. The years of his reign are here computed, ver. 11, to be forty years; the odd six months which he reigned above seven years in Hebron are not reckoned, but the even sum only.—Henry.

ADONIJAH'S SECOND TREASON AND ITS CONSEQUENCES.—Ver. 15—18. It is evident that Adonijah had by no means given up his pretensions to the throne; and probable, that neither he, nor Joab, nor Abiathar expected safety, unless in success; and that they were in concert forming new designs against Solomon. With this view, they seem to have thought, that if Adonijah married Abishag, it would increase the number of his adherents; both by the accession of her friends and relations, and from the general notions which prevailed concerning the wives and concubines of deceased kings. But they could not get possession of Abishag without Solomon's consent; which they had no hopes of obtaining, but by the interposition of Bath-sheba. In Adonijah's speech to her, he insinuated, that the kingdom was his, by the right of primogeniture: and that he had been in possession of it by the consent of all Israel. This, however, was totally false: for the kingdom had never been his, except in his own groundless opinion, and that of the few who abetted his usurpation: for the people generally favoured Solomon. But he meant to induce Bath-sheba to compassionate his case; and to make a merit with her of peaceably receding from his claim; and that she might not suspect any ill design, he at length conceded that "it was Solomon's from the LORD." But though his language was not well calculated to inspire confidence; and his request was in itself improper, and highly indecorous at least: yet, according to his hopes, Bath-sheba suspected no ill, but considered him as entitled to compassion; and supposed his request to be the result of love, not ambition: and perhaps she thought this an easy way of satisfying Adonijah, and securing Solomon in the kingdom.—She did not look upon Abishag as the wife of David, and therefore did not consider her marriage with Adonijah as unlawful: and she readily consented to become his intercessor with Solomon. Ver. 20. "For I," &c. All such general promises imply the supposition, that the request is unto his mother, And [b]why dost thou ask Abishag the Shunammite for Adonijah? ask for him [c]the kingdom also; for he is mine elder brother; even for him, and for Abiathar the priest, and for Joab the son of Zeruiah.

23 Then king Solomon sware by the LORD, saying, [d]God do so to me, and more also, if Adonijah have not [e]spoken this word against his own life.

24 Now therefore, [f]as the LORD liveth, which hath established me, and [g]set me on the throne of David my father, and who hath [h]made me an house, [i]as he promised, Adonijah shall be [k]put to death this day.

25 And king Solomon sent by the hand of Benaiah the son of Jehoiada; and [l]he fell upon him, that he died.

26 ¶ And unto [m]Abiathar the priest said the king, Get thee to [n]Anathoth, unto thine own fields; for thou art [*]worthy of death:[7] but I will not at this time put thee to death, [o]because thou barest the ark of the Lord GOD before David my father, and [p]because thou hast been afflicted in all wherein my father was afflicted.

27 So Solomon thrust out Abiathar from being priest unto the LORD; [q]that he might fulfil the word of the LORD, which he spake concerning the house of Eli in [r]Shiloh.

28 ¶ Then tidings came to Joab: for [s]Joab had turned after Adonijah, though he turned not after Absalom. And Joab fled unto the tabernacle of the LORD, and [t]caught hold on the horns of the altar.[8]

29 And it was told king Solomon that Joab was fled unto the tabernacle of the LORD; and, behold, he is by the altar. Then Solomon sent Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, saying,[9] [u]Go, fall upon him.

30 And Benaiah came to the tabernacle of the LORD, and said unto him, Thus saith the king, Come forth. And he said, Nay; but I will die here. And Benaiah brought the king word again, saying, Thus said Joab, and thus he answered me.

31 And the king said unto him, [x]Do as he hath said, and fall upon him, and bury him; that thou [y]mayest take away the innocent blood, which Joab shed, from me, and [z]from the house of my father.

32 And the LORD shall [a]return his blood upon his own head, who fell upon [b]two men [c]more righteous and better than he, and slew them with the sword, [d]my father David not knowing thereof, to wit, Abner the son of Ner, captain of the host of Israel, and Amasa the son of [e]Jether, captain of the host of Judah.

33 Their blood shall therefore return [f]upon the head of Joab, and upon the head of his seed for ever: but [g]upon David, and upon his seed, and [h]upon his house, and upon his throne, shall there be peace for ever from the LORD.

34 So [i]Benaiah the son of Jehoiada went up, and fell upon him, and slew him: [j]and he was buried in his own house [k]in the wilderness.[10]

35 ¶ And the king put Benaiah the son of Jehoiada in his room over the host: and [l]Zadok the priest did the king put in the room of Abiathar.

36 ¶ And the king sent and called for [m]Shimei, and said unto him, [n]Build thee an house in Jerusalem, and dwell there, and go not forth thence any whither.

37 For it shall be, that on the day thou goest out, and passest [o]over the brook Kidron, thou shalt know for certain that thou shalt surely die: [p]thy blood shall be upon thine own head.

38 And Shimei said unto the king, [q]The saying is good: as my lord the king hath said, so will thy servant do. And Shimei dwelt in Jerusalem many days.

39 And it came to pass at the end of three years, that two of the servants of Shimei ran away unto [r]Achish son of Maachah king of Gath. And they told Shimei, saying, Behold, thy servants be in Gath.

40 And Shimei [s]arose, and saddled his ass, and went to Gath[11] to Achish to seek his servants: and Shimei went, and brought his servants from Gath.

41 And it was told Solomon[12] that Shimei had gone from Jerusalem to Gath, and was come again.

42 And the king sent and called for Shimei, and said unto him, [t]Did I not make thee to swear by the LORD, and protested unto thee, saying, Know for a certain, on the day thou goest out, and walkest abroad any whither, that thou shalt surely die? and thou saidst unto me, The word that I have heard is good.

43 Why [u]then hast thou not kept the oath of the LORD, and [x]the commandment that I have charged thee with?

44 The king said moreover to Shimei, [y]Thou knowest all the wickedness which thine heart is privy to, that thou didst to David my father: therefore the LORD shall [z]return thy wickedness upon thine own head;

45 And king Solomon shall be [a]blessed, [b]and the throne of David shall be established before the LORD for ever.

46 So the king commanded Benaiah the son of Jehoiada; which went out, and fell upon him, that he died.[13] And [c]the kingdom was established in the hand of Solomon.

lawful, and proper to be granted: for even the assurances of God's word, that whatever we ask of him shall be given, admit of a similar limitation: i.e. if consistent with his glory, and for our real good. Ver. 22. Solomon immediately saw through Adonijah's intentions, and that he was aiming to take the fortress by sap, (so to speak,) which he had failed of seizing by surprise. He perceived him still restless, aspiring, and scheming; and discerned that he considered this as one step to the throne, and that Joab and Abiathar were concerned in the project. To show the inefficacy therefore of every application in his favour; to convince Bath-sheba of the impropriety and impolicy of her request; and to declare the necessity of his death, in order to public peace, and the establishment of his authority, he spoke with great earnestness and decision. Ver. 23—25. Solomon has been censured as too severe and precipitate in this execution; but there is no intimation of this in the Scripture. Adonijah's pardon had been conditional; and he had owned Solomon as king, yet he was plotting against him: he affected to tread in the steps of Absalom: and doubtless he would have created as fatal disturbances to Solomon's government as Absalom had to David's. Nor would sound policy admit of any delay; when persons of so great authority and extensive influence were joined in the conspiracy, and had far more specious reasons for opposing Solomon, than Absalom had for rebelling against David. Ver. 26, 27. Solomon's language and Abiathar's silence clearly prove, that some recent conspiracies had been formed. Abiathar had suffered much with David, and had been faithful and useful to him; so that in remembrance of his services, as well as in respect to his sacred character, Solomon resolved to spare his life: and as he had not committed murder, this clemency might properly be exercised. In deposing Abiathar from the high priesthood, Solomon purposely intended to fulfil the word of God to Eli. And in confining him to his own estate in the country, he only put him under a disgrace which he justly merited.—Scott.

EXECUTION OF JOAB.—1. He must die, and die by the sword of public justice. "By man must his blood be shed," and it lies upon his own head, ver. 32, as theirs does whom he had murdered, ver. 33. Woe to the head that lies under the guilt of blood! Vengeance for murder was long in coming upon Joab; but, when it did come, it remained the longer, being here entailed "upon the head of his seed for ever," ver. 33, who, instead of deriving honour, as otherwise they might have done, from his heroic actions, derived guilt, and shame, and a curse, from his villanous actions. The seed of such evil doers shall never be renowned. 2. He must die at the altar, rather than escape. Joab resolved not to stir from the altar, ver. 30, hoping thereby either to secure himself, or else to render Solomon odious to the people, as a profaner of the holy place, if he should put him to death there. Benaiah made a scruple of either killing him there, or dragging him thence; but Solomon knew the law, that the altar of God should give no protection to wilful murderers, Exod. xxi. 14, "Thou shalt take him from mine altar that he may die," may die a sacrifice. In case of such sins as the blood of beasts would atone for, the altar was a refuge, but not in Joab's case; he therefore orders him to be executed there, if he would not be got thence, to show that he feared not the censure of the people in doing his duty, but would rectify their mistake, and let them know, that the administration of justice is better than sacrifice, and that the holiness of any place should never countenance the wickedness of any person. They who, by a lively faith, take hold on Christ and his righteousness, with a resolution, if they perish, to perish there, shall find in him a more powerful protection than Joab found at the horns of the altar. Benaiah slew him, ver. 34, with the solemnity, no doubt of a public execution. The law being thus satisfied, he was "buried in his own house in the wilderness," privately, like a criminal, not pompously, like a soldier; yet no indignity is done to his dead body: it is not for man to lay the iniquity upon the bones, whatever God does.—Henry.

SHIMEI.—Ver. 36—46. No doubt, Solomon suspected that Shimei's influence would be dangerous upon his own estate, and among his numerous dependents: and therefore he proposed to him, as the condition of his indemnity for former crimes, that he should live in Jerusalem under his eye, and by no means remove thence. These terms Shimei readily agreed to, and solemnly sware to observe them; and for three years he lived unmolested, and in affluence. But, growing secure, in contempt of Solomon's authority, and of the oath of God, upon an unnecessary business he took a journey, which according to his own engagement forfeited his life. Thus the Lord left him to be infatuated, that due punishment might be inflicted upon him: in order that every ringleader of opposition to Solomon's kingdom might be crushed, and others be intimidated by their examples; and that his throne might be established in peace, as the type of the Redeemer's kingdom of peace and righteousness.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—It is desirable to be habitually and calmly expecting the approach of death; for that is "the way appointed for all men," to pass from this world to another: a dark and gloomy road indeed it is for the workers of iniquity, to a still more dark and dreadful place; but rendered cheerful to the righteous by the presence of the Lord, and by the hopes of complete felicity. Whilst they are supported by these lively hopes and strong consolations, how becoming is it for them to animate their survivors and successors, to fill up their stations in the church of God and in society after a proper manner!—Scott.

CHAP. III.

Solomon marrieth Pharaoh's daughter, 1. His choice of wisdom, 5. His judgment between the two harlots, 16.

AND Solomon [a]made affinity with Pharaoh king of Egypt, [b]and took Pharaoh's daughter,[1] and brought her into [c]the city of David, until he had made an end of building [d]his own house, and [e]the house of the LORD, and [f]the wall of Jerusalem round about.

2 ¶ Only [g]the people sacrificed in high places, because [h]there was no house built unto the name of the LORD, until those days.

3 And Solomon [i]loved the LORD, [j]walking in the statutes of David his father: [k]only he sacrificed and burnt incense in high places.

4 And the king went to [l]Gibeon to sacrifice there; for that was the great high place. [m]A thousand burnt-offerings did Solomon offer upon that altar.

5 ¶ In Gibeon the LORD appeared to Solomon [n]in a dream by night: and God said, [o]Ask what I shall give thee.

6 And Solomon said, Thou hast shewed unto [p]thy servant David my father [q]great *mercy,[2] [r]according as he walked before thee in truth, and in righteousness, and in uprightness of heart with thee; and thou hast kept for him this great kindness, that [s]thou hast given him a son to sit on his throne, as it is this day.

7 And now, O LORD my God, [t]thou [u]hast made thy servant king instead of David my father: and I am but [v]a little child: I know not how [w]to go out or come in.[3]

8 And thy servant is in the midst of thy people which thou hast chosen, a great people, that [x]cannot be numbered nor counted for multitude.

9 [y]Give therefore thy servant an [z]understanding heart [a]to judge thy people, that I may [b]discern between good and bad: for [c]who is able to judge this thy so great a people?

10 And the speech [d]pleased the LORD, that Solomon had asked this thing.

11 And God said unto him, Because thou hast asked this thing, and [e]hast not asked for thyself ‡long life; neither hast asked riches for thyself, nor hast asked the life of thine enemies, but hast asked for thyself understanding, to [§]discern judgment;

12 Behold, [f]I have done according to thy words: lo, [g]I have given thee a wise and an understanding heart; so that there was none like thee before thee, neither [h]after thee shall any arise like unto thee.

13 And [i]I have also given thee that which thou hast not asked, both [k]riches and honour: so that there [l]shall not be any among the kings like unto thee all thy days.

14 And [i]if thou wilt walk in my ways, to keep my statutes and my commandments, [m]as thy father David did walk, then [n]I will lengthen thy days.

15 And Solomon [o]awoke; and, behold, it was a dream.[4] And he came to Jerusalem, and stood [p]before the ark of the covenant of the LORD, and offered up burnt-offerings, and offered [q]peace-offerings, and made [r]a feast to all his servants.

16 ¶ Then came there [s]two women that were harlots,[5] unto the king, and [t]stood before him.

17 And the one woman said, [u]O my lord, I and this woman dwell in one house; and I was delivered of a child with her in the house.

18 And it came to pass, the third day after that I was delivered, that this woman was delivered also: and we were together; there was no stranger with us in the house, save we two in the house.

19 And this woman's child died in the night; because she overlaid it.

20 And she arose at [x]midnight, and [y]took my son from beside me, while thine handmaid slept, and laid it in her bosom, and laid her dead child in my bosom.

21 And when I rose in the morning to [z]give my child suck, behold, it was dead: but when I had considered it in the morning, behold, it was not my son which I did bear.

22 And the other woman said, [a]Nay; but the living is my son, and the dead is thy son. And this said, No; but the dead is thy son, and the living is my son. Thus they spake before the king.

23 Then said the king, The one saith, This is my son that liveth, and thy son is the dead: and the other saith, Nay; but thy son. is the dead, and my son is the living.

24 And the king said, Bring me a sword. And they brought a sword before the king.

25 And the king said, [b]Divide the living child in two, and give half to the one, and half to the other.

26 Then spake the woman,[6] whose the living child was, unto the king, for [c]her bowels *yearned upon her son, and she said, O my lord, [d]give her the living child, and in no wise slay it. But the other said, Let it be neither mine nor thine, but divide it.

27 Then the king answered, and said, Give her the living child, and in no wise slay it: she is the mother thereof.

28 And all Israel heard of the judgment which the king had judged; and they [e]feared the king: for they saw that [f]the wisdom of God was †in him, to do judgment.

[1] In no part of Scripture is Solomon blamed for this alliance with the royal house of Egypt; but yet we know that the Egyptians were idolaters. Did Solomon then stipulate, that the Egyptian princess should renounce the worship of her own gods, and conform to the Jewish law? This is fairly presumable, and what the law required. Some consider Solomon as typical of Messiah, and this marriage as shadowing the union of Jew and Gentile in the Christian church. —BOOTHE.

CHAP. III. SOLOMON'S DREAM.—Ver. 5—14. In ordinary dreams almost every thing is incoherent and irrational, though they often savour of a man's waking thoughts, pursuits, and character: but Solomon's dreams was of another kind. While his corporeal senses were locked up in sleep, the powers of his soul were supernaturally invigorated; and he was enabled to receive the divine vision, and to make a suitable choice in the case referred to him. His pleas were cogent, and his determination wise. His father had ruled over Israel in truth and righteousness, and had been greatly favoured and prospered; he was the first of the rulers of Israel, who had been succeeded by his son; Solomon had been preferred before his elder brethren by God's own appointment; all these circumstances concurred to raise men's expectations, or to excite their enmity and envy: and thus to increase the importance and arduousness of his station. The people were very numerous, they were the chosen of God, and among them he must both judge in equity, and promote true religion. Yet he was very young, and inexperienced as a child. His single petition therefore was, that the Lord would give his servant an understanding heart; that is, that he would enlarge and strengthen his intellectual powers, give him a ready discernment in spiritual things, and a corresponding disposition: and furnish him with the peculiar talents and capacities for government; that he might administer justice and judgment with impartial rectitude and deep penetration, for the benefit of the people and the honour of God. Doubtless these sentiments were habitually in Solomon's mind, previously to this dream; and his consciousness of his own insufficiency had led him to depend upon the Lord to qualify him for the discharge of the duties of his important station. Absalom and Adonijah do not seem to have been troubled with anxiety on this account, though far inferior to Solomon in capacity for ruling: but they sought the "honour and power of the kingdom;" he desired "to discharge the duty of a king." —The disposition and judgment which dictated this petition, in preference to all those alluring distinctions which carnal minds pursue, and which especially attract young persons in superior stations, was well pleasing to the Lord: and he assured Solomon, that "'he had given' him a wise and understanding heart," and that he should receive a vast accession of wisdom: so that he should excel all the kings of Israel who had preceded or should succeed him, in all kinds of knowledge and discernment, and also in riches and honour, which he had not asked. brands out of the burning. They are most likely to have the comfort of children that do their duty to them. Satan pretends to the heart of man, but by this it appears that he is only a pretender, that he would be content to divide with God, whereas the rightful Sovereign of the heart will have all or none.—Henry.

CHAP. IV. SOLOMON'S COURT.—Ver. 1. We may guess at the vast number of his attendants, and the great resort that was to him, by the provision that was made daily for his table. Of bread, so many measures of flour and meal, as, it is computed, would richly serve 3000 men; Carellus computes above 48,000 men; and the provision of flesh, ver. 23, is rather more, in proportion. What vast quantities were here of beef, mutton, and venison, and the choicest of all "fatted things," as some read that which we translate "fatted fowl!" Ahasuerus, once in his reign, made a "great feast," to "show the riches of his kingdom," Esth. i. 3, 4. But it was much more the honour of Solomon, that he kept a constant table, and a very noble one; not of dainties, or deceitful meats, (he himself witnessed against them, Prov. xxiii. 3,) but substantial food, for the entertainment of those who came to hear his wisdom. Thus Christ fed those whom he taught, five thousand at a time, more than ever Solomon's table would entertain at once: all believers have in him a continual feast. Herein, he far outdoes Solomon, that he feeds all his subjects, not with the bread that perishes, but "with that which endures to eternal life." It added much, both to the strength and glory of Solomon's kingdom, that he had such abundance of horses, 40,000 for chariots, and 12,000 for his troops. A thousand horse, perhaps, in every tribe, for the preserving of the public peace, ver. 26. God had commanded that their kings should not multiply horses, Deut. xvii. 16, nor, according to the account here given, considering the extent and wealth of Solomon's kingdom, did he multiply horses in proportion to his neighbours; for we find even the Philistines bringing into the field 30,000 chariots, 1 Sam. xiii. 6, and the Syrians at least 40,000 horse, 2 Sam. x. 18. The same officers that provided for his house, provided also for his table, ver. 27, 28. Every one knew his place, and work, and time; and so this great court was kept without confusion.—Henry.

HIS WISDOM AND AUTHORSHIP.—Ver. 30—34. God gave Solomon not only heavenly wisdom, and singular talents for government, but extraordinary capacities for the attainment of all kinds of knowledge: so that he excelled the wise men of Egypt, and of Babylon, Arabia, or other countries still more to the east, in astronomy, and other sciences, for which they were renowned. In the knowledge of divinity he surpassed Ethan and Heman, who seem to have been men renowned for extraordinary piety and wisdom at that time; and all others who were celebrated in Israel on the same account. He excelled also in morality, and economics; for he spake three thousand proverbs, of which such as were most suited for general utility, have come down to us in the book of Proverbs. He likewise excelled in poetry, and wrote one thousand and five songs: but only one of these is preserved in Scripture. It may, however, be supposed, that many of the others were upon moral and religious subjects; as well as remarkable for the beauties of poetry. He was, moreover, deeply versed in all the branches of natural philosophy, and discoursed in an admirable manner upon the nature, properties, and uses of the several species of plants and animals. So that in every thing he possessed such an undisputed superiority over all men in that age, that his reputation for wisdom brought numbers from different kings and nations all around, to learn every kind of useful knowledge from him; and perhaps he possessed more accurate and extensive knowledge, on a vast variety of subjects, than any mere man besides, in any age or nation of the world, ever did.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The different ranks of men in society should be distinguished by a suitable attendance and provision: but "when riches increase, they are increased that eat them," and the owners have much additional incumbrance, and but little accession of solid advantage. It is also extremely difficult to possess abundance, without covetousness, luxury, or ostentation; without abusing, wasting, or burying, the goods of our common Lord, to whom every one must give an account of his stewardship: yet prudent management and frugality are excellent appendages to liberality, and serve to support the expenses of it.—Wise and righteous princes are most valuable blessings to whole kingdoms, and should be sought in prayer from that God who hath all hearts in his hands: yet all outward prosperity is precarious and transient: and too often it proves unfavourable to religion, and increases pride, sloth, and sensual indulgence; thus rendering divine judgments necessary.—Wealth without wisdom, and knowledge without humility and grace, are generally destructive to the possessor, and to those with whom he is connected: yet both are the gifts of God, good in themselves, and only evil as perverted by man's depravity. And heavenly wisdom teaches men to give God the glory in the use of these inferior blessings, and so renders them ornamental to the Christian profession, and conducive to promote designs of extensive usefulness.—A reputation for wisdom and piety is no further desirable than as it consists with humility, and affords a man an opportunity of communicating more extensively that useful knowledge which the Lord hath imparted. Every information which is needful to our glorifying God, and obtaining his salvation, is preserved to us in the sacred Scriptures: and the light of heaven will more certainly and speedily instruct us in all useful knowledge, than all the regretted records of antiquity could do if we had them. Let us then rejoice that

AND [a]Hiram[1] king of Tyre [b]sent his servants unto Solomon; for he had heard that they had anointed him king in the room of his father; [c]for Hiram was ever a lover of David.

2 And [d]Solomon sent to Hiram, saying,

3 Thou knowest how that David my father [e]could not build an house unto the name of the LORD his God, [f]for the wars which were about him on every side, until the LORD [g]put them under the soles of his feet.

4 But now the LORD my God [h]hath given me rest on every side, so that there is neither adversary nor evil occurrent.

5 And, [i]behold, I *purpose to build an house unto the name of the LORD my God, [k]as the LORD spake unto David my father, saying, Thy son, whom I will set upon thy throne in thy room, he shall build an house unto my name.

6 Now therefore command thou that they hew me [l]cedar trees[2] out of Lebanon; and my servants shall be with thy servants: and unto thee [m]will I give hire for thy servants, according to all that thou shalt [†]appoint: for thou knowest [n]that there is not among us any that can skill to hew timber like unto the [o]Sidonians.

7 ¶ And it came to pass, when Hiram heard the words of Solomon, that he rejoiced greatly, and said, [p]Blessed be the LORD this day, [q]which hath given unto David [r]a wise son over this great people.

8 And Hiram sent to Solomon, saying, I have [‡]considered the things which thou sentest to me for: and I will do all thy desire concerning timber of cedar, and concerning [s]timber of fir.

9 My servants shall bring them down from [t]Lebanon unto the sea: and [u]I will convey them by sea in floats[3] unto the place that thou shalt [§]appoint me, and will cause them to be discharged there, and thou shalt receive them: and thou shalt accomplish my desire, in [x]giving food for my household.

10 ¶ So Hiram gave Solomon cedar trees and fir trees according to all his desire.

11 And Solomon gave Hiram twenty thousand [‖]measures of wheat for food to his household, and twenty measures of pure oil:[4] thus gave Solomon to Hiram year by year.

12 And the LORD gave Solomon wisdom, [y]as he promised him: and there was peace between Hiram and Solomon; and [z]they two made a league together.

13 ¶ And king Solomon raised a *levy out of all Israel; and [a]the levy was thirty thousand men.

14 And he sent them to Lebanon, ten thousand [b]a month by courses: a month they were in Lebanon, and two months at home: and [c]Adoniram was over the levy.

15 And Solomon had [d]threescore and ten thousand that bare burdens, and fourscore thousand hewers[5] in the mountains;

16 Beside the chief of Solomon's officers which were over the work, [e]three thousand and three hundred, which ruled over the people that wrought in the work.

17 And the king commanded, and they brought great stones, [f]costly stones, and hewed stones, to lay the foundation of the house.

18 And Solomon's builders and Hiram's builders did hew them, and [†]the stone squarers: so they prepared timber and stones to build the house.

The building of Solomon's temple, 1. God's promise unto it, 11. The time of building it, 37.

AND [a]it came to pass in the four hundred and eightieth year after the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt, in the fourth year of Solomon's reign over Israel, [b]in the month Zif, which is the second month, that he *began to [c]build the house of the LORD.

2 And the house which king Solomon built for the LORD, the length thereof was [d]threescore cubits,[1] and the breadth thereof twenty cubits, and the height thereof thirty cubits.

3 And the [e]porch before the temple of the house, twenty cubits was the length thereof, according to the breadth of the house; and ten cubits was the breadth thereof before the house.

4 ¶ And for the house he made [†]windows of narrow lights.

5 ¶ And [‡]against the wall of the house he [f]built [§]chambers round about, against the walls of the house round about, both of the temple and of the [g]oracle: and he made [‖]chambers round about:

6 The nethermost chamber was five cubits broad, and the middle was six cubits broad, and the third was seven cubits broad: for without in the wall of the house he made *narrowed rests round about, that the beams should not be fastened in the walls of the house.

7 And the house, when it was in building, was [h]built of stone made ready before it was brought thither: so that there was [i]neither hammer nor axe nor any tool of iron heard in the house[2] while it was in building.

8 The door for the middle chamber was in the right [†]side of the house: and they [j]went up with winding stairs into the middle chamber, and out of the middle into the third.

the Lord reigneth on a mercy-seat, and that his name is Emmanuel. His kingdom was faintly shadowed forth in that of Solomon, but is of a nobler and more heavenly nature. The blessings of it consist not in meat and drink, but in righteousness, peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost.—Scott.

CHAP. V. HIRAM AND SOLOMON'S CORRESPONDENCE.—Ver. 1. We have here an account of the correspondence between Solomon and Hiram. Tyre was a famous trading city, that lay close upon the sea, in the border of Israel; its inhabitants, (as should seem,) none of the devoted nations, nor ever at enmity with Israel; and therefore David never offered to destroy them, but lived in friendship with them. It is said here of Hiram their king, that he was "ever a lover of David;" and we have reason to think he was a worshipper of the true God, and had himself renounced, though he could not reform, the idolatry of his city. David's character will win the affections of those that are without. Here is, 1. Hiram's embassy of compliment to Solomon, ver. 1. He sent, as is usual among princes, to condole with him on the death of David, and to renew his alliances with him upon his succession to the government. It is good keeping up friendship and communion with the families in which religion is uppermost. 2. Solomon's embassy of business to Hiram, sent, it is likely, by messengers of his own. In wealth, honour, and power, Hiram was very much inferior to Solomon, yet Solomon has occasion to be beholden to him, and begs his favour. Let us never look with disdain on those below us, because we know not how soon we may need them.

LABOUR FOR THE TEMPLE.—"God gave Solomon wisdom," ver. 12, that was more and better than any thing Hiram did or could give him; but this made Hiram love him, and enabled Solomon to improve his kindness, so that they were both willing to ripen their mutual love into a mutual league, that it might be lasting; it is wisdom to strengthen our friendship with those we find to be honest and fair, lest new friends prove not so firm and kind as old ones. The labourers whom Solomon employed in preparing materials for the temple were numerous. 1. Some were Israelites, who were employed in the more easy and honourable parts of the work, felling trees, and helping to square them, in conjunction with Hiram's servants; for this he appointed 30,000, but employed only 10,000 at a time, so that, for one month's work, they had two months' vacation, both for rest, and to watch of their own affairs at home, ver. 13, 14. It was temple-service, yet [illegible] care that they shall not be over-worked; great men ought to consider [illegible] must rest as well as they. 2. Others were captives of other nations, [illegible] how many, ver. 15, and we read not that these had [illegible] for they were doomed to [illegible]. 3. There were some employed as directors and overseers, ver. 16; 3,300 that ruled over the people, and they were as necessary and useful in their place as the labourers in theirs; here were many hands and many eyes employed, for preparation was now to be made, not only for the temple, but for all the rest of Solomon's buildings, both at Jerusalem and here in the forest of Lebanon, and in other places of his dominion, of which see chap. ix. 17—19. He speaks of the vastness of his undertakings, Eccl. ii. 4. "I made me great works," which required this vast number of workmen.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The love of God causes men to love one another, and renders them superior to selfish jealousies and envyings: and it teaches them to rejoice in each other's prosperity, and to be glad to receive or afford mutual assistance.—The most necessary and successful wars, not only produce much temporal evil, but obstruct or retard the execution of many useful designs for promoting godliness: we may then well pray, "Send peace in our time, O Lord:" and when he "gives rest on every side, so that there is no adversary nor evil occurrent," no time should be lost, but every one should be intent to devise, and execute, such useful undertakings as were before prevented.—Scott.

CHAP. VI. THE TEMPLE.—Here, 1. The temple is called "The house of the Lord," ver. 1, because it was, (1.) Directed and modelled by him. Infinite Wisdom was the Architect, and gave David the plan or pattern by the Spirit, not by word of mouth only, but for the greater certainty and exactness, in writing, 1 Chron. xxviii. 11, 12, 19, as he had given Moses in the mount a draught of the tabernacle. (2.) Dedicated and devoted to him and to his honour, to be employed in his service; so his, as never any other house was; for he manifested his glory in it, (so as never in any other,) in a way agreeable to that dispensation; for when there were carnal ordinances, there was a "worldly sanctuary," Heb. ix. 1, 10. This gave it its "beauty of holiness," that it was "the house of the Lord," which far transcended all its other beauties. 2. The time when it began to be built is exactly set down. (1.) It was just 480 years after the bringing of the children of Israel out of Egypt; allowing 40 to Moses, 17 to Joshua, 299 to the Judges, 40 to Eli, 40 to Samuel and Saul, 40 to David, and 4 to Solomon, before he began the work, we have the just sum of 480. So long it was, after that holy state was founded, before that holy house was built, which, in less than 480 years, was [illegible] by Nebuchadnezzar; it was thus deferred, because Israel had, by their sins, rendered themselves unworthy of this honour, and because God would show how little [illegible] external pomp and splendour in his service; he was in no haste for a [illegible] tent, which was clean and convenient, though it was neither [illegible] aught that appears, if consecrated, is called "the [illegible]

9 So [k]he built the house, and finished it; and covered the house with [‡]beams and boards of cedar.

10 And then he built chambers against all the house, five cubits high: and they rested on the house with timber of cedar.

11 ¶ And the word of the LORD came to Solomon, saying,

12 Concerning this house which thou art in building, [l]if thou wilt walk in my statutes, and execute my judgments, and keep all my commandments to walk in them; [m]then will I perform my word with thee, which I spake unto David thy father:

13 And [n]I will dwell among the children of Israel, and [o]will not forsake my people Israel.

14 ¶ So [p]Solomon built the house, and finished it.

15 And he built the walls of the house within with boards of cedar, [§]both the floor of the house, and the walls of the ceiling: and he covered them on the inside with wood, and covered the floor of the house with planks of fir.

16 And he built twenty cubits on the sides of the house, both the floor and the walls with boards of cedar: he even [q]built them for it within, even for the oracle, even for the most holy place.

17 And the house, that is,[3] the temple before it, was forty cubits long.

18 And the cedar of the house within was carved with [t]knops and [*]open flowers: all was cedar; there was no stone seen.

19 ¶ And [r]the oracle he prepared in the house within, [s]to set there the ark of the covenant of the LORD.

20 And the oracle in the forepart was twenty cubits in length, and [t]twenty cubits in breadth, and twenty cubits in the height thereof: and he overlaid it with [†]pure gold; and so covered [u]the altar which was of cedar.

21 So Solomon [x]overlaid the house within with pure gold: and he made a partition [y]by the chains of gold before the oracle; and he overlaid it with gold.

22 And the whole house he overlaid with gold, until he had finished all the house: [z]also the whole altar that was by the oracle he overlaid with gold.

23 ¶ And within the oracle he made [a]two cherubims[4] of [‡]olive tree, each ten cubits high.

24 And five cubits was the one wing of the cherub, and five cubits the other wing of the cherub: from the uttermost part of the one wing unto the uttermost part of the other were ten cubits.

25 And the other cherub was ten cubits:

A. M. 3000. B. C. 1004.

both the cherubims were of one measure and one size.

26 The height of the one cherub was ten cubits, and so was it of the other cherub.

27 And he set the cherubims within the inner house: [b]and they [§]stretched forth the wings of the cherubims, so that the wing of the one touched the one wall, and the wing of the other cherub touched the other wall; and their wings touched one another in the midst of the house.

28 And he overlaid the cherubims with gold.

29 And he carved all the walls of the house round about with [c]carved figures of cherubims, and [d]palm trees, and [t]open flowers, within and without.

30 And [e]the floor of the house he overlaid with gold, within and without.

31 ¶ And for the entering of the oracle[5] he made [f]doors of olive tree: the lintel and side posts were [*]a fifth part of the wall.

32 The [†]two doors also were of olive tree; and he carved upon them carvings of cherubims and palm trees and [‡]open flowers, and overlaid them with gold, and spread gold upon the cherubims, and upon the palm trees.

33 So also made he for the door of the temple posts of olive tree, [§]a fourth part of the wall.

34 And the two doors were of [g]fir tree: the [h]two leaves of the one door were folding, and the two leaves of the other door were folding.

35 And he carved thereon cherubims and palm trees and open flowers: and covered them with gold fitted upon the carved work.

36 ¶ And he built [i]the inner court[6] with three rows of hewed stone, and a row of cedar beams.

37 ¶ In [k]the fourth year was the foundation of the house of the LORD laid, in the month Zif:

38 And in the eleventh year, in the month Bul, which is the eighth month, was the house [l]finished throughout all the parts thereof, and [l]according to all the fashion of it. So was he [m]seven years[7] in building it.

and served as well as Solomon's temple; yet, when God gave Solomon great wealth, he put it into his heart thus to employ it, and graciously accepted him, chiefly because it was to be a shadow of good things to come, Heb. ix. 9. (2.) It was in the fourth year of Solomon's reign, the three first years being taken up in settling the affairs of his kingdom, that he might not find any embarrassment from them in this work; it is not time lost which is spent in composing ourselves for the work of God, and disentangling ourselves from every thing which might distract or divert us; during this time he was adding to the preparations which his father had made, 1 Chron. xxii. 14, hewing the stone, squaring the timber, and getting every thing ready, so that he is not to be blamed for slackness in deferring it so long; we are truly serving God, when we are preparing for his service, and furnishing ourselves for it. 3. The materials are brought in, ready for their place, ver. 7, so ready, that there was "neither hammer nor axe heard in the house, while it was in building." In all this building, Solomon prescribes it as a rule of prudence, to "prepare the work in the field," and "afterward build," Prov. xxiv. 27. But here, it seems, the preparation was, more than common, full and exact, to that degree, that, when the several parts came to be put together, there was nothing defective to be added, nothing amiss to be amended; it was to be the temple of the God of peace, and therefore no iron tool must be heard in it; quietness and silence both become and befriend religious exercises; God's work should be done with as much care and as little noise as may be; the temple was thrown down with "axes and hammers;" and they that did it roared "in the midst of the congregation," Ps. lxxiv. 4, 6, but it was built up in silence; clamour and violence often hinder, but never further, the work of God. 4. The dimensions are laid down, ver. 2, 3, according to the rules of proportion. Some observe that the length and breadth were just double to that of the tabernacle. Now that Israel was grown more numerous, the place of their meeting needed to be enlarged, Isa. liv. 1, 2, and now that they were grown richer, they were the better able to enlarge it; where God sows plentifully he expects to reap so. 5. An account of the windows, ver. 4, they were "broad within and narrow without." Such should the eyes of our mind be, reflecting nearer on ourselves than on other people, looking much within, to judge ourselves, but little without, to censure our brethren. The narrowness of the lights intimated the darkness of that dispensation, in comparison with the gospel-day.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Ver. 1—13. Though God does not delight in outward magnificence, but is present with, and accepts the worship of, poor believers who assemble in the meanest place: yet he expects that the wealthy should devote their riches to his service. And whatever is liberally expended, out of zeal for his glory, and according to the rule of his word, shall be graciously accepted; though perhaps man may censure the expense, as needless or useless. Every good work should be done heartily and without procrastination: but it is not needless delay to consult prudent measures, to make requisite preparations, and to remove such obstructions as might afterwards impede our progress, or divert our attention.—Every thing in the church above is conducted in perfect harmony and regularity; every part of that spiritual temple being made ready for its place before it is conveyed thither: and the more the church on earth resembles it the better.—The true church of God is most glorious within; and the true believer is chiefly employed in attending to the state of his heart. —In all religious matters conveniency must be preferred to splendour; but stability must not be sacrificed even to apparent conveniency.—No pompous services will purchase a dispensation from obeying the least of God's commandments. All those things in which men, who allow themselves in sin, confide, will be found as unavailing, as the temple was to the wicked kings and people of Israel; for nothing but unreserved obedience to the precepts and statutes of God's word, can prove the sincerity of our faith and our love to the Saviour. But, though numbers of professors apostatize, and whole nations forfeit their peculiar privileges; yet the Lord will dwell in the midst of his true people, and never forsake them: they will delight in his ordinances and commandments; and be encouraged by being told their duty, as it is a token of the Lord's favour to them.—Scott.

CHAP. VII. ROYAL ARCHITECTURE.—Ver. 1. Never had any man so much of the spirit of building as Solomon had, never man built to better purpose; he began with the temple, built for God first, and then all his other buildings were comfortable: the surest foundations of a lasting prosperity are those which are laid in an early piety, Matt. vi. 33. 1. He built a house for himself, ver. 1, "where he dwelt," ver. 8. His father had built a good house; but it was no reflection upon his father for him to build a better, in proportion to the estate wherewith God had blessed him; much of the comfort of this life is connected with an agreeable house. He was thirteen years building this house, whereas he built the temple in little more than seven years; not that he was more exact, but less eager and intent, in building his own house than in building God's; he was in no haste for his own palace, but impatient till the temple was finished, and fit for use; thus we ought to prefer God's honour before our own ease and satisfaction. 2. He built "the house of the forest of Lebanon," ver. 2, supposed to be a country-seat near Jerusalem, so called from the pleasantness of its situation, and the trees that encompassed it. I rather incline to think that it was a house built in the forest of Lebanon itself, whither hundred cubits, and the breadth thereof fifty cubits, and the height thereof thirty cubits, upon four rows of cedar pillars, with cedar beams upon the pillars.

3 And it was covered with cedar above upon the *beams, that lay on forty-five pillars, fifteen in a row.

4 And there were [c]windows in three rows, and †light was against light in three ranks.

5 And all the ‡doors and posts were square with the windows: and light was against light in three ranks.

6 ¶ And he made a porch[2] of pillars; the length thereof was fifty cubits, and the breadth thereof thirty cubits: and the porch was §before them: and the other pillars and the thick beam were ‖before them.

7 ¶ Then he made [d]a porch [e]for the throne where he might judge, even the porch [f]of judgment: and it was covered with cedar *from one side of the floor to the other.

8 ¶ And his house where he dwelt had [g]another court within the porch, which was of the like work. Solomon made also [h]an house for Pharaoh's daughter, whom he had taken to wife, like unto this porch.

9 ¶ All these were of [i]costly stones, according to the measures of hewed stones, sawed with saws, within and without, even from the foundation unto the coping, and so on the outside toward the great court.

10 And [k]the foundation was of costly stones, even great stones, stones of ten cubits,[3] and stones of eight cubits.

11 And [l]above were costly stones, after the measures of hewed stones, and cedars.

12 And the great court round about was with [m]three rows of hewed stones, and a row of cedar beams, both for the inner court of the house of the LORD, and for [n]the porch of the house.

13 ¶ And king Solomon sent and fetched [o]Hiram out of Tyre.

14 He was †a widow's son of the tribe of [p]Naphtali, and his father was a man of Tyre, a worker in brass: and [q]he was filled with wisdom, and understanding, and cunning to work all works in brass. And he came to king Solomon, and wrought all his work.

15 ¶ For he ‡cast [r]two pillars[4] of brass, of eighteen cubits high a piece: and a line of twelve cubits did compass either of them about.

16 And he made [s]two chapiters of molten brass, to set upon the tops of the pillars: the height of the one chapiter was five cubits, and the height of the other chapiter was five cubits:

17 And nets of checker work, and [t]wreaths of chain work, for the chapiters which were upon the top of the pillars; seven for the one chapiter, and seven for the other chapiter.

18 And he made the pillars, and two rows round about upon the one net work, to cover the chapiters that were upon the top, with pomegranates: and so did he for the other chapiter.

19 And the chapiters that were upon the top of the pillars, were of [u]lily work in the porch, four cubits.[5]

20 And the chapiters upon the two pillars had pomegranates also above, over against the belly which was by the net work: and the [x]pomegranates were two hundred, in rows round about upon the other chapiter.

21 And [y]he set up the pillars in [z]the porch of the temple: and he set up the right pillar, and called the name thereof §Jachin: and he set up the left pillar, and called the name thereof ‖Boaz.

22 And upon the top of the pillars was lily work: so was the work of the pillars finished.

23 ¶ And [a]he made [b]a molten sea,[6] ten cubits from *the one brim to the other: it was round all about, and his height was five cubits: and a line of thirty cubits did compass it round about.

24 And under the brim of it round about there were [c]knops compassing it, ten in a cubit, [d]compassing the sea round about: the knops were cast in two rows when it was cast.

25 It stood upon [e]twelve oxen, three looking toward the north, and three looking toward the west, and three looking toward the south, and three looking toward the east: and the sea was set above upon them, and all their hinder parts were inward.

26 And it was [f]an hand breadth thick, and the brim thereof was wrought like the brim of a cup, [g]with flowers of lilies: it contained [h]two thousand baths.[7]

27 ¶ And he made ten [i]bases of brass: four cubits was the length of one base, and four cubits the breadth thereof, and three cubits the height of it.

28 And the work of the bases was on this manner: they had borders,[8] and the borders were between the ledges:

29 And on the borders that were between the ledges were [j]lions, oxen, and cherubims: and upon the ledges there was a base above: and beneath the lions and oxen were certain additions made of thin work.

30 And every base had four brasen [k]wheels, and plates of brass; and the four corners thereof had undersetters: under the laver were undersetters molten, at the side of every addition.

31 And the mouth of it, within the chapi-

(though far distant from Jerusalem) Solomon (having so many chariots and horses, and those dispersed into chariot cities, which probably were his stages,) might frequently retire with ease. It does not appear that his throne, mentioned ver. 7, was at the house of the forest of Lebanon, and it was not at all improper to put his shields there, as in a magazine. Express notice is taken of his buildings, not only in Jerusalem, but in Lebanon, chap. ix. 19, and we read of the tower of Lebanon, which looks toward Damascus, Cant. vii. 4, which probably was part of this house. A particular account is given of this house: That, being built in Lebanon, a place famed for cedars, the pillars, and beams, and roof, were all cedar, ver. 2, 3, and, being designed for pleasant prospects, there were three tier of windows on each side, "light against light," ver. 4, 5, or, as it may be read, "prospect against prospect." Those whose lot is cast in the country may be well reconciled to a country life by this, that some of the greatest princes have thought those the most pleasant of their days which they have spent in their country retirements. 3. He built piazzas before one of his houses, either that at Jerusalem, or that in Lebanon, which were very famous, a porch of pillars, ver. 6, either for an exchange, or a guard-house, or for those to walk in that attended him about business, till they could have audience, or for state and magnificence. He himself speaks of Wisdom's building her house, and "hewing out her seven pillars," Prov. ix. 1, for the shelter of those that, three verses before, chap. viii. 34, are said to "watch daily at her gates, and to wait at the posts of her door." 4. At his house, where he dwelt in Jerusalem, he built a great hall, or porch of judgment, where was set the throne, or king's bench, for the trial of causes in which he himself was appealed to, (Placita coram ipso rege tenenda—Causes were to be adjusted in the king's presence,) and this was richly wainscotted with cedar from the floor to the roof, ver. 7. He had there also "another court within the porch," nearer his house, of smaller work, for his attendants to walk in, ver. 8. 5. He built a house for his wife, where she kept her court, ver. 8. It is said to be "like the porch," because built of cedar like it, though not in the same form: this, no doubt, was nearer adjoining to his own palace; yet, perhaps, if it had been as near as it ought to have been, Solomon would not have multiplied wives as he did. The wonderful magnificence of all these buildings is taken notice of, ver. 9, &c. All the materials were the best of their kind; the foundation-stones were costly for their size, four or five yards square, or, at least, so many yards long, ver. 10, and the stones of the building costly for the workmanship, hewn and sawn, and in all respects finely wrought, ver. 9, 11. The court of his own house was like that of the temple, ver. 12, (compare chap. vi. 36,) so well did he like the model of God's courts, that he made his own by it.

JACHIN AND BOAZ.—Two brazen pillars which were set up "in the porch of the temple," ver. 21, whether under the cover of the porch, or in the open air, is not certain; it was between the temple and the court of the priests. These pillars were neither to hang gates upon, nor to rest any building upon, but purely for ornament and significancy. 1. What an ornament they were, we may gather from the account here given of the curious work that was about them; chequer-work, chain-work, net-work, lily-work, and pomegranates in rows, and all of bright brass; and framed no doubt, according to the best rules of proportion, to please the eye. 2. Their significancy is intimated in the names given them, ver. 21; "Jachin—He will establish;" and "Boaz—In him is strength." Some think they were intended for memorials of the pillar and cloud of fire, which led Israel through the wilderness: I rather think them designed for memorandums to the priests, and others that came to worship at God's door, (1.) To depend upon God only, and not upon any sufficiency of their own, for strength and establishment in all their religious exercises; when we come to wait upon God, and find our hearts wandering and unfixed, then, by faith, let us fetch in help from heaven: "Jachin—God will fix this roving mind; it is a good thing that the heart be established with grace." We find ourselves weak and unable for holy duties, but this is our encouragement. "Boaz—in him is our strength," who works in us both to will and to do. "I will go in the strength of the Lord God." Spiritual strength and stability are to be had at the door of God's temple, where we must wait for the gifts of grace, in the use of the means of grace. (2.) It was a memorandum to them of the strength and establishment of the temple of God among them. Let them keep close to God and duty, and they should never lose their dignities and privileges, but the grant should be confirmed and perpetuated to them. The gospel church is what God will establish, and what he will strengthen, and what the gates of hell can never prevail against. But with respect to this temple, when it was destroyed, particular notice is taken of the destroying of these pillars, 2 Kings xxv. 13, 17, which had been the tokens of its establishment, and would have been so, if they had not forsaken God.—Henry.

THE GREAT LAVER.—Ver. 23—39. In the tabernacle there had been one laver of brass, at which the priests continually washed themselves and the sacrifices. But now the numbers of the priests and Levites were multiplied, and the sacrifices were proportionably increased. Therefore Solomon prepared this brazen sea; and ten lavers besides, at which the sacrifices were to be washed. These were constantly supplied with water by the Nethinims or the Gibeonites, who were servants to the priests. The brazen sea was a vast reservoir, capable of holding three thousand baths, or about four hundred and fifty hogsheads: though no more than two thousand were generally put 33 And [l]the work of the wheels was like the work of a chariot wheel: their axletrees, and their naves, and their felloes, and their spokes, were all molten.

34 And there were four undersetters to the four corners of one base: and the undersetters were of the very base itself.

35 And in the top[9] of the base was there a round compass of half a cubit high: and on the top of the base, the ledges thereof, and the borders thereof, were of the same.

36 For on the plates of the ledges thereof, and on the borders thereof, he [m]graved cherubims, lions, and palm trees, according to the [‡]proportion of every one, and additions round about.

37 After this manner he made the ten bases: all of them had one casting, one measure, and one size.

38 ¶ Then made he [n]ten lavers of brass: one laver contained forty baths: and every laver was four cubits: and upon every one of the ten bases one laver.

39 And he put five bases on the right [§]side[10] of the house, and five on the left side of the house; and [o]he set the sea on the right side of the house eastward, over against the south.

40 ¶ And [l]Hiram made [p]the lavers, and [q]the shovels, and [r]the basons. [s]So Hiram made an end of doing all the work that he made king Solomon for the house of the LORD:

41 The [t]two pillars, and the two bowls of the chapiters that were on the top of the two pillars; and the [u]two net works, to cover the two bowls of the chapiters which were upon the top of the pillars;

6 And [k]the priests brought in the ark of the covenant of the LORD unto [l]his place, into the oracle of the house, to the most holy place, even [m]under the wings of the cherubims.

7 For the cherubims spread forth their two wings over the place of the ark, and the into it.—The knops are supposed to have been in the form of an ox's head, and some think that the water flowed out at the mouths of them or of some of them.—The oxen on which it was placed might be intended as a protest against the absurd idolatry of worshipping God under an image in that form: though some have supposed them typical of the twelve apostles bearing the gospel of Christ, "the fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness," into all the divisions of the earth.—The ten lavers, though generally placed in two rows in the inner court of the temple, were fixed upon bases, which ran on wheels, that they might be removed as conveniency required.—The description given of these bases is very difficult: many of the original words are but seldom used, if at all, elsewhere: and it would be impossible to give a satisfactory explanation of each particular, without labour and prolixity disproportioned to its importance to us.—The likeness of lions, oxen, &c., we shall hereafter find to be undeniably emblematic of the boldness, patience, diligence, and heavenly-mindedness of the ministers of Christ. Oxen and cherubim are both mentioned, ver. 29, which shows they were not the same figure.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Ver. 13—51. It is well when great ingenuity unites with equal integrity; when entire confidence is proved to have been well placed; and when every one abounds in the work of the Lord, in proportion as his abilities are enlarged. Yet, in all our sevices, and after them, we need washing from the guilt and pollution of sin, which defiles us and all we do. Let us therefore bless God for "the fountain" which he hath "opened for sin and uncleanness;" and which by the preaching of the gospel and written word, may be conveyed to every part of the earth." In him also is strength, and he will establish all who trust in him. They who depend on their own resolutions, wisdom, or works; they who trust in riches, honour, prosperity, or powerful friends; they who worship other gods, or depend on other intercessors; and they who presume upon their notions, creeds, or external forms, can never be established, but will at length sink and perish. But the power of Christ rests upon the humble believer; his arms uphold him; his grace establishes his heart in hope and love: he is his stability in every trial, and his sufficiency for every service: and is both able and willing "to keep him from falling, and to present him faultless before the presence of his glory, with exceeding joy." He indeed is both the temple and the builder; the altar and the sacrifice; the light of our souls, and bread of life; and in every way adequate to the largest and most numerous wants of the millions who have applied and shall apply to him. External images cannot describe, words cannot express, the heart cannot conceive, his preciousness or his love. Let us come to him, and wash away our sins in his blood: let us seek for the purifying grace of his Spirit; let us walk in the light of his instructive word, and observe his kind directions; let us feed upon him daily "in our hearts by faith with thanksgiving," maintain communion with God the Father, through his intercession, and yield up ourselves and all we have to his service. Thus being "strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might," we shall be accepted, useful, and happy; and shall be enabled to do our own work, in our proper places, with fidelity, in a manner consistent with our profession, and to the glory of his name.—Scott.

CHAP. VIII. THE SHECHINAH.—Ver. 10—14. All the priests and Levites attended the removal of the ark, and sang solemn praises upon the occasion, with the sound of trumpets and instruments of music. But when the ark, as the symbol of God's presence, had taken possession of the temple, the cloud filled the whole of it, so that the priests could no longer continue in it. The "thick darkness" represented the comparative obscurity and terror of that dispensation; and the darkness, which in this world rests upon all our inquiries into the things of God, and of eternity. God, indeed, is LIGHT, and with him is no darkness at all; but we sinners cannot approach or endure that light, except as seen in the person of Jesus Christ. Yet this thick darkness, whilst it terrified others, assured Solomon of the Divine favour, and that this temple would be the residence of the ark, and the centre of the worship of Israel, for generations to come. And with these assurances he encouraged the people; he congratulated them on this renewed token of the Lord's former favours to Israel; and he pronounced a solemn and affectionate blessing on them. Similar evidences of the Lord's gracious presence, and of his awful glory, had been vouchsafed, when the tabernacle was erected; and it is not easy to distinguish with accuracy between the cloud, and the glory of God which filled the house. It may, however, be observed, that at the close of Solomon's prayer, the fire burst forth from the cloud, and consumed the sacrifices on the altar.

SOLOMON'S PRAYER.—Ver. 27. Solomon was deeply sensible, and he would have the people seriously consider, that the most magnificent temple was no meet habitation for the infinite God. The ark might abide in it, and the Lord might thence display his gracious presence with his worshippers, which, contrasting his majesty, purity, and justice, with their meanness, guilt, and pollution, was a condescension that could not be sufficiently admired: but "the heaven of heavens," the glorious mansion of angels and archangels, could not contain, or circumscribe, his essential presence. Ver. 28—30. The Lord was essentially not more present in the temple than elsewhere; and the full displays of his glory were made in heaven, his throne and his dwelling-place; yet he had recorded his name in the temple; and it was a peculiar type of the human nature of Christ, in whom the Divine perfections are revealed, as harmonizing in the salvation of 8 And they [n]drew out the staves, that the [†]ends of the staves were seen out in the [‡]holy place before the oracle, and they were not seen without: and there they are [o]unto this day.

9 There was [p]nothing [q]in the ark save the two tables of stone, which Moses [r]put there at Horeb, when the LORD made a [§]covenant with the children of Israel, when they came out of the land of Egypt.

10 ¶ And it came to pass, when the priests were come out of the holy place, that [s]the cloud filled[3] the house of the LORD,

11 So that the priests could not stand to minister because of the cloud: [t]for the glory of the LORD had filled the house of the LORD.

12 ¶ Then spake Solomon, [u]The LORD said that he would dwell in [v]the thick darkness.

13 I have [x]surely built thee an house to dwell in, [y]a settled place for thee to abide in for ever.

14 And the king turned his face about, and [z]blessed all the congregation of Israel: (and [a]all the congregation of Israel stood;)

15 And he said, [b]Blessed be the LORD God of Israel, [c]which spake with his mouth unto David my father, and [d]hath with his hand fulfilled it, saying,

16 Since [e]the day that I brought forth my people Israel out of Egypt, [f]I chose no city out of all the tribes of Israel to build an house, that [g]my name might be therein; but [h]I chose David to be over my people Israel.

17 And [i]it was in the heart of David my father to build an house for the name of the LORD God of Israel.

18 And the LORD said unto David my father, [k]Whereas it was in thine heart to build an house unto my name, thou didst well that it was in thine heart.

19 Nevertheless [l]thou shalt not build the house; but thy son that shall come forth out of thy loins, he shall build the house unto my name.

20 And the LORD [m]hath performed his word that he spake; and I am risen up in the room of David my father, and sit on the throne of Israel, as the LORD promised, and have built an house for the name of the LORD God of Israel.

21 And [n]I have set there a place for the ark, wherein is [o]the covenant of the LORD, which he made with our fathers, when he brought them out of the land of Egypt.

22 ¶ And Solomon [p]stood[4] before the altar of the LORD in the presence of all the congregation of Israel, and [q]spread forth his hands toward heaven:

23 And he said, [r]LORD God of Israel,[5] there is [s]no God like thee, in heaven above, or on earth beneath, [t]who keepest covenant and mercy with thy servants that [u]walk before thee with all their heart:

24 Who hast kept with thy servant David my father that thou promisedst him: [x]thou spakest also with thy mouth, and hast fulfilled it with thine hand, as it is this day.

25 Therefore now, LORD God of Israel, [y]keep with thy servant David my father that thou promisedst him, saying, [1]There shall not fail thee a man in my sight to sit on the throne of Israel; [*]so that [z]thy children take heed to their way, that they walk before me as thou hast walked before me.

26 And now, [a]O God of Israel, [b]let thy word, I pray thee, be verified, which thou spakest unto thy servant David my father.

27 But [c]will God indeed dwell on the earth? behold, [d]the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain thee; how much less this house that I have builded?

28 Yet [e]have thou respect unto the prayer of thy servant, and to his supplication, O LORD my God, to [f]hearken unto the cry and to the prayer, which thy servant prayeth before thee to day:

29 That [g]thine eyes may be open toward[6] this house night and day, even toward the place of which thou hast said, [h]My name shall be there: that thou mayest hearken unto the prayer which thy servant shall make [†]toward this place.

30 And hearken thou to the supplication of thy servant, and of thy people Israel, [i]when they shall pray [‡]toward this place: [k]and hear thou in heaven thy dwelling place: and when thou hearest, [l]forgive.

31 ¶ If any man [m]trespass against his neighbour, and [§]an oath be laid upon him to cause him to swear, and [n]the oath come before thine altar in this house:

32 Then [o]hear thou in heaven, and do, and judge thy servants, [p]condemning the wicked, to bring his way upon his head; and [q]justifying the righteous, to give him according to his righteousness.

33 ¶ When thy people Israel be [r]smitten down before the enemy, [s]because they have sinned against thee, and shall [t]turn again to thee, and confess thy name, and [u]pray, and make supplication unto thee [1]in this house:

34 Then hear thou in heaven, and [x]forgive the sin of thy people Israel, and bring them again unto the land [y]which thou gavest unto their fathers.

35 ¶ When [z]heaven is shut up, and there is no rain, because they have sinned against thee; [a]if they pray toward this place, and believers, in whom "God is reconciling the world to himself," dwelling among men, and accepting the services and answering the prayers of all true believers. The sacrifices continually offered, the incense burnt, and the whole service performed at the temple, were typical of the Redeemer's offices, oblation, and intercession. The temple, therefore, must be continually adverted to in all their prayers. Accordingly, the Israelites, when far distant from Jerusalem, were accustomed to turn their faces towards it, as expressive of their dependence on the services there performed by the priests, and of their communion with the worshippers of JEHOVAH; and when they were near it, they resorted thither to present their supplications. Thus Solomon besought God, that, in answer to the prayer which he that day offered, he would, in all future ages, regard the temple with his peculiar favour, and hear the prayers of all who should present them towards it, wheresoever they were, or whatever were their distresses. Under one word "forgive," he comprised all that he could ask in behalf of his people; for, as all misery springs from sin, forgiveness of sin must prepare the way for the removal of every evil, and the communication of every good; and, without it, no deliverance can eventually prove a blessing. Ver. 31, 32. In case a man should be accused of defrauding or robbing his neighbour, and decisive evidence being wanting to prove whether he were, or were not, guilty, an appeal should be made by oath, at, or towards the altar, before the temple, to the heart-searching God, that he was innocent; or in any other case in which this solemn appeal was made; Solomon prayed that the Lord would interpose, in some evident manner, to discover and punish the guilty, and to clear up the character and recompense the integrity of the innocent. Ver. 33, 34. The Israelites would not be "smitten down," or taken prisoners, by their enemies, except they sinned against God: and, notwithstanding their temple, altar, and sacrifices, they could not expect deliverance, or restoration from captivity or bondage, without repentance and turning to the Lord; without confessing their relations and obligations to him, and their sins against him; and without offering their supplications towards the temple, to him who dwelt upon a mercy-seat between the cherubim. Ver. 35, 36. "That thou," &c., ver. 36. In addition to all the teaching of the written word, and the instructions of the priests, Levites, and prophets, Solomon entreated the Lord himself to teach the people to profit by their advantages and chastisements: for this would make way for forgiveness, and consequently for returning plenty and prosperity. The same words are rendered in Chronicles, "When thou hast taught them the good way in which they should walk." The Divine teaching particularly respects this "good way in which we ought to walk," and not mere notions and speculations. Ver. 38. "The plague," &c. Or, "his own sore, and his own grief," 2 Chron. vi. 29. The former petitions particularly respected public judgments and distresses; but this passage related to private afflictions and trials, and whatever should fill the heart and conscience of any individual with anguish and dismay. This interpretation doubtless includes, though it is not confined to that meaning which is very frequently given to the expression, "the plague of his own heart;" namely, the prevalence of indwelling sin, which, as a plague or pestilential disease, is the grief and sore of every true believer; and, in connexion with the guilt, which in consequence accumulates upon his conscience, brings him day by day to offer his fervent prayers and supplications before the mercy-seat of a forgiving God. Ver. 39. The Lord, "who only knoweth the hearts of the children of men," could exactly distinguish betwixt the hypocrite, and the upright penitent believer; and would deal with each, according to the covenant of mercy made with sinners through the promised Saviour, forgiving and doing all good to the one, and leaving the other under condemnation. Ver. 40. As "there is no man that sinneth not," ver. 46, so no man could worship a holy God, "if there were not forgiveness with him." Unless this was clearly revealed, that reverential fear, which unites with hope, and leads men to repent and seek the Lord, would be extinguished, when sinners became acquainted with their own character and state, and with his perfections and holy laws; and only that slavish fear would remain, which unites with enmity and despair, and drives men further and further from God and his worship. It is very instructive to compare the several parts of this prayer with the preceding prophecies, and the subsequent history, which may in good measure be done by consulting the marginal references. Ver. 41—43. Solomon was persuaded that the heathen nations would hear of the name, perfections, and wonderful works of JEHOVAH; and would come and worship him at this temple, as the God of Israel, who dwelt among his people by the ark of his strength, and was propitious to them through the sacrifices there offered. He therefore interceded for them also, that they might be accepted, and obtain the same blessings with the native Israelites: and he desired and hoped, that all the nations of the earth might know, fear, and worship the God of Israel. Accordingly we are told, that there was a court built, called the court of the Gentiles, which was appropriated to the use of those who came from other nations to worship the God of Israel, but who were not circumcised, and did not observe the ceremonial law. The prejudices of the Jews, in the days of Christ, against the admission of the Gentiles into the church, arose from ignorance of the Scriptures, connected with national prejudices, pharisaical pride, and bigotry; which being early imbibed, were not easily removed even from true believers. Ver. 44. "Thou shalt send," &c. That is, in any just and necessary war; for God did not send the Israelites, when they were actuated by selfishness to engage in oppressive and unrighteous wars; neither could they reasonably expect his assis-

[b]confess thy name, and [c]turn from their sin, when thou afflictest them:

40 That they may [n]fear thee all the days that they live in the land which thou gavest unto our fathers.

44 ¶ If thy people [y]go out to battle against their enemy, [z]whithersoever thou shalt send them,[8] and [a]shall pray unto the LORD [‡]toward [b]the city which thou hast chosen, and toward the house that I have built for thy name:

45 Then hear thou in heaven their prayer and their supplication, and maintain their [§]cause.

46 If they sin against thee, (for [c]there is no man that sinneth not,) and thou be angry with them, and deliver them to the enemy, so that they carry them away captives [d]unto the land of the enemy, far or near;

47 Yet [e]if they shall [||]bethink themselves[9] in the land whither they were carried captives, and repent, and make supplication unto thee in the land of them that carried them captives, [f]saying, We have sinned, and have [g]done perversely, we have committed wickedness;

48 And so [h]return unto thee with all their heart, and with all their soul, in the land of their enemies, which led them away captive, and [i]pray unto thee toward their land, which thou gavest unto their fathers, [k]the city which thou hast chosen, and the house which I have built for thy name:

49 Then [l]hear thou their prayer and their supplication in heaven thy dwelling place, and maintain their *cause,[10]

50 And forgive thy people that have sinned against thee, and all their transgressions wherein they have transgressed against thee, and [m]give them compassion before them who carried them captive, that they may have compassion on them:

51 For they be [n]thy people, and thine inheritance, which thou broughtest forth out of Egypt, from the midst of [o]the furnace of iron:

52 That [p]thine eyes may be open unto the supplication of thy servant,[11] and unto the supplication of thy people Israel, to hearken unto them [q]in all that they call for unto thee.

53 For thou didst [r]separate them from among all the people of the earth, to be [s]thine inheritance, [t]as thou spakest by the hand of Moses thy servant, when thou broughtest our fathers out of Egypt, O LORD God.

54 ¶ And it was so, that [u]when Solomon had made an end of praying all this prayer and supplication unto the LORD, he arose from before the altar of the LORD, from [v]kneeling on his knees [w]with his hands spread up to heaven.

55 And he stood, and [x]blessed all the congregation of Israel with a loud voice, saying,

56 [y]Blessed be the LORD, that [z]hath given rest unto his people Israel, according to all that he promised: [a]there hath not [†]failed one word of all his good promise, which he promised by the hand of Moses his servant.

57 The [b]LORD our God be with us, as he was with our fathers: let him not leave us, nor forsake us:

58 That he may [c]incline our hearts unto him,[12] to walk in all his ways, and to keep [d]his commandments, and his statutes, and his judgments, which he commanded our fathers.

59 And let these my words, wherewith I have made supplication before the LORD, be [e]nigh unto the LORD our God day and night, that he maintain the cause of his servant, and the cause of his people Israel [‡]at all times, [f]as the matter shall require:

60 That [g]all the people of the earth may know that [h]the LORD is God, and that there is none else.

61 Let your heart therefore be [i]perfect with the LORD our God, to walk in his statutes, and to keep his commandments, as at this day.

tance in them. Ver. 46—53. This part of Solomon's intercession was evidently answered, in the restoration of the Jews after the Babylonish captivity. Though the temple and city lay in ruins; yet when they bethought themselves, and repented, and prayed in the land of Chaldea, towards the land of Israel; the Lord heard, forgave, and restored them to their own land. But it will hereafter receive another more remarkable answer, when the Jews shall be gathered from their present dispersion, become a part of the Christian church, and probably be re-instated in their own country. All Solomon's arguments, in this plea for his people, were deduced from the Lord's choice of them, his separation of them from other nations to be his inheritance, and the favours which he had already conferred upon them. It appears from Chronicles, that Solomon concluded with a passage taken from one of the Psalms. Ver. 55—61. "Incline," &c., ver. 58. No blessing can be expected, whilst men continue wilfully disobedient. No human heart is of itself inclined to obey the call to repentance, faith, and newness of life, walking in all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord. The first benefit communicated to sinners, through the intercession of Him whom Solomon typified, is "the inclining of the heart to this obedience." This, therefore, we should beg of God for others, and for ourselves, when we perceive our need of it: for when this is granted, all else will follow. Yet Solomon afterwards exhorted the people to be "perfect with the LORD," &c., ver. 61: and this is the scriptural method: though to many it appears unsystematical and inconsistent: but the exhortation reminds men of their duty; and the prayer or promise shows how they may be enabled to do it.—Scott.

CONCLUSION OF THE SERVICE.—1. This great congregation was now shortly to scatter, and it was not likely that they would ever be all together again in this world; Solomon therefore dismisses them with this blessing, "'The Lord be present with us,' and that will be comfort enough, when we are absent from each other; 'The Lord our God be with us, as he was with our fathers,' ver. 57, 'let him not leave us,' let him be to us to-day, and to ours for ever, what he was to those that went before us." 2. The power of his grace upon them, "'Let him be with us,' and continue with us, not that he may enlarge our coasts, and increase our wealth, but 'that he may incline our hearts to himself, to walk in all his ways, and to keep his commandments,'" ver. 58. Spiritual blessings are the best blessings, which we should covet earnestly to be blessed with; our hearts are naturally averse to our duty, and apt to decline from God, it is his grace that inclines them, grace that must be obtained by prayer. 3. An answer to the prayer he had now made, "'Let these my words be nigh unto the Lord our God day and night,' ver. 59. Let a gracious return be made to every prayer that shall be made here, and that will be a continual answer to this prayer." What Solomon here asks for his prayer, is still granted in the intercession of Christ, which his supplication was a type of; that powerful, prevailing intercession "is before the Lord our God day and night," for our great Advocate attends continually to this very thing, and we may depend upon him to maintain our cause, (against the adversary that accuses us "day" and "night," Rev. xii. 10,) "and the common cause of his people Israel, at all times," upon all occasions, as the matter shall require, so as to speak for us "the word of the day in its day," as the original here reads it, from which we shall receive grace sufficient, suitable, and seasonable, "in every time of need." 4. The glorifying of God in the enlargement of his kingdom among men. Let Israel be thus blessed, thus favoured; not that all people may become tributaries to us, (Solomon sees his kingdom as great as he desires,) but "that all people may know that the Lord is God," and he only, and may come and worship him, ver. 60. With this, Solomon's prayers, like "the prayers of his" father, "David the son of Jesse, are ended," Ps. lxxii. 19, 20. "Let the whole earth be filled with his glory:" we cannot close our prayers with a better summary than this, "Father, glorify thy name." He solemnly charges his people to continue and persevere in their duty to God; having spoken to God for them, he here speaks from God to them, and those only would fare the better for his prayers that were made better by his preaching; his admonition, at parting, is, "'Let your heart be perfect with the Lord our God,' ver. 61, let your obedience be universal without dividing, upright without dissembling, and constant without declining;" this is evangelical perfection. We read before, that Judah and Israel were eating and drinking and very cheerful, under their own vines and fig-trees; here we have them so in God's courts; now they found Solomon's words true concerning wisdom's ways, that they are ways of pleasantness. They had abundant joy and satisfaction while they attended at God's house, for there, 1. Solomon offered a great sacrifice, 22,000 oxen, and 120,000 sheep, enough to have drained the country of cattle, if it had not been a very fruitful land. The heathen thought themselves very generous when they offered sacrifices by hundreds, (hecatombs they called them,) but Solomon outdid them, he offered them by thousands. When Moses dedicated his altar, the peace-offerings were twenty-four "bullocks; rams, goats, and lambs," 180, Num. vii. 88; then the people were poor, but now they were increased in wealth, more was expected from them; where God sows plentifully, he must reap accordingly. All these sacrifices could not be offered in one day, but in the several days of the feast; thirty oxen a day served Solomon's table, but thousands shall go to God's altar; few are thus minded, to spend more on their souls than on their bodies. The flesh of the peace-offerings, which belonged to the offerer, it is likely, Solomon treated the people with; Christ fed those who attended him. The brazen altar was 62 ¶ And [i]the king, and all Israel with him, offered sacrifice before the LORD.

63 And Solomon offered [k]a sacrifice of peace-offerings, which he offered unto the LORD, two and twenty thousand oxen,[13] and an hundred and twenty thousand sheep. So the king and all the children of Israel [l]dedicated the house of the LORD.

64 The same day did the king [m]hallow the middle[14] of the court that was before the house of the LORD: for there he offered burnt-offerings, and meat-offerings, and the fat of the peace-offerings: because [n]the brasen altar that was before the LORD was too little to receive the burnt-offerings, and meat-offerings, and the fat of the peace-offerings.

65 ¶ And at that time Solomon [o]held a feast, and all Israel with him, [p]a great congregation, [q]from the entering in of Hamath[15] unto [r]the river of Egypt, before the LORD our God, [s]seven days and seven days, even fourteen days.

66 On [t]the eighth day he sent the people away: and they [§]blessed the king, and went unto their tents [u]joyful and glad of heart for all the goodness that the LORD had done for David his servant, and for Israel his people.

not large enough to receive all these sacrifices, so that, to serve the present occasion, they were forced to offer many of them "in the middle of the court," ver. 64. Some think, on altars, altars of earth or stone, erected for the purpose, and taken down when the solemnity was over; others think, on the bare ground: they that will be generous in serving God, need not stint themselves for want of room and occasion to be so. 2. He kept a feast, the feast of tabernacles, as it should seem, after the feast of dedication, and both together lasted fourteen days, ver. 65, yet they said not, "Behold, what a weariness is it!"—Henry.

CHAP. IX. SOLOMON'S PRAYER ANSWERED.—Ver. 1—2. Solomon did not finish his other buildings till above twelve years after the dedication of the temple; and it is improbable that this gracious appearance of God to him was delayed so long: some expositors, therefore, render these verses, "And it was, that thus Solomon finished," &c. "And the LORD appeared," &c. The two subjects are kept entirely distinct in Chronicles, 2 Chron. vii. 11, 12.—The encouragement given Solomon while building the temple, was either sent by a prophet, or given in an answer by the high priest; for this was only the second appearance of God to him. Ver. 3. The Lord favourably accepted the temple which Solomon had built and consecrated to him, and set it apart as holy, for the residence of his ark, the centre of his worship, the place of his altar and sacrifices, and the visible pledge of his gracious presence with Israel, so long as they adhered to his ordinances and commandments. And he promised, "that his eyes and his heart should be there perpetually: that is, he would regard it with peculiar attention and favour, and delight in doing good to those who worshipped at, or towards that holy place, 2 Chron. vii. 12—16. And had not the national sins of Israel forfeited the blessing, this would uninterruptedly have been the case until the coming of Christ.

HIRAM.—Ver. 11—14. Hiram had furnished Solomon with timber, not only for building the temple, but also for his own house, and his many other magnificent works: and he likewise "had sent him a hundred and twenty talents of gold;" for that seems to be the proper construction of the fourteenth verse. Solomon therefore was indebted to Hiram, beyond the corn, and wine, and oil agreed upon; and he gave him these cities as a compensation. They seem to have been small towns in the vicinity of Tyre, beyond the boundaries of the land, as divided by Joshua, and lately taken from the ancient inhabitants. Probably they lay in ruins. Hiram, however, was not satisfied with them, and called them the land of Cabul. Perhaps being accustomed to magnificence, and to acquire wealth by commerce, he had no turn for cultivating land; and, finding the roads bad, the houses mean, and the country depopulated, he was not aware of the advantage which might be made of them. Solomon afterwards rebuilt them, and the Israelites dwelt in them: and probably Hiram was satisfied with some equivalent.—Scott.

SOLOMON'S GOODNESS AND GREATNESS.—Ver. 25. "Three times in a year" he offered burnt-offerings extraordinary, namely, at the three yearly feasts, the passover, pentecost, and feast of tabernacles, in honour of the divine institution; beside what he offered at other times, both statedly, and upon special occasions. With his sacrifices he burnt incense, not himself, (that was king Uzziah's crime,) but the priest for him, at his charge, and for his particular use. It is said, he offered "on the altar which he himself built." He took care to build it, and then, 1. He himself made use of it. Many will assist the devotions of others that neglect their own. Solomon did not think his building an altar would excuse him from sacrificing, but rather engage him the more to it. 2. He himself had the benefit and comfort of it. Whatever pains we take for the support of religion, to the glory of God, and the edification of others, we ourselves are likely to have the advantage of it. Solomon also built a fleet of trading ships, at Ezion-geber, ver. 26, a port on the coast of the Red Sea, the furthest stage of the Israelites, when they wandered in the wilderness, Numb. xxxiii. 35. That wilderness, probably, now began to be peopled by the Edomites, which it was not then. To them this port had belonged, but David having subdued the Edomites, it now pertained to the crown of Judah. The fleet traded to Ophir in the East Indies; supposed to be that which is now called Ceylon. Gold was the commodity traded for; substantial wealth. It should seem Solomon had before been Hiram's partner, or put a venture into his ships, which made him a rich return of 120 talents, ver. 14, that encouraged him to build a fleet of his own. The success of others, in any employment should quicken our industry; for "in all labour there is profit." Solomon sent his own servants for factors, and merchants, and supercargoes, but hired Tyrians for sailors, "for they had knowledge of the sea," ver. 27. Thus one nation needs another; Providence so ordering it, that there may be mutual commerce and assistance; for not only as Christians, but as men, we are members one of another. The fleet brought home to Solomon "420 talents of gold," ver. 28. Canaan, the holy land, the glory of all lands, had no gold in it: which teaches us, that that part of the wealth of this world which is for hoarding and trading is not the best part of it, but that which is more immediately for the present support and comfort of life, our own and others; such were the productions of Canaan. Solomon got much by his merchandise, but, it should seem, David got much more by his conquests; what was Solomon's "four hundred and twenty talents," to David's "hundred thousand talents of gold?" 1 Chron. xxii. 14; xxix. 4. Solomon got much by his merchandise, and yet has directed us to a better trade, within reach of the poorest, having assured us, from his own 21 Their children [o]that were left after them in the land, whom the children of Israel also were [p]not able utterly to destroy, upon those did Solomon [q]levy a tribute [r]of bond service unto this day.

22 But [s]of the children of Israel did Solomon make no bondmen: [t]but they were men of war, and his servants, and his princes, and his captains, and rulers of his chariots, and his horsemen.

23 These were the [u]chief of the officers that were over Solomon's work, five hundred and fifty,[5] which bare rule over the people that wrought in the work.

24 ¶ But [x]Pharaoh's daughter came up out of [y]the city of David unto her house which Solomon had built for her: then did he build [z]Millo.

25 ¶ And [a]three times in a year did Solomon offer burnt-offerings and peace-offerings upon the altar which he built unto the LORD, and [b]he burnt incense [§]upon the altar that was before the LORD. [c]So he finished the house.

26 ¶ And king Solomon [d]made a navy of ships in [e]Ezion-geber,[6] which is beside [f]Eloth, on the [‖]shore of the Red sea, in the land of Edom.

27 And Hiram sent in the navy [g]his servants, shipmen that had knowledge of the sea, with the servants of Solomon.

28 And they came to [h]Ophir, and fetched from thence gold, [i]four hundred and twenty talents, and brought it to king Solomon.

AND [*]when the queen of [b]Sheba [c]heard of the fame of Solomon [d]concerning the name of the LORD, she came [e]to prove him with hard questions.[1]

2 And she came to Jerusalem with [f]a very great train, with camels that bare [g]spices, and very much gold, and precious stones: and when she was come to Solomon, she [h]communed with him of all that was in her heart.

3 And Solomon [i]told her all her [*]questions: there was not any thing [j]hid from the king, which he told her not.

4 ¶ And when the queen of Sheba had seen all [k]Solomon's wisdom, and [l]the house that he had built,

5 And [m]the meat of his table, and the sitting of his servants, and the [†]attendance of his ministers, and their apparel, and his [‡]cupbearers, and his [n]ascent by which he went up unto the house of the LORD; [o]there was no more spirit in her.[2]

6 And she said to the king, It was a true [§]report that I heard in mine own land of thy [‖]acts and of thy wisdom.

7 Howbeit [p]I believed not the words, until I came, and mine eyes had seen it: and, behold, the half was not told me: [*]thy wisdom and prosperity exceedeth the fame which I heard.

8 Happy are thy men, [q]happy are these thy servants, which stand continually before thee, and that hear thy wisdom.

9 [r]Blessed be the LORD thy God, which [s]delighted in thee, to set thee on the throne of Israel: [t]because the LORD loved Israel for ever, therefore made he thee king, [u]to do judgment and justice.

10 ¶ And [v]she gave the king an hundred and twenty talents of gold, and of [x]spices very great store, [y]and precious stones: there came no more such abundance of spices as these which the queen of Sheba gave to king Solomon.

11 And the navy also of Hiram,[3] that brought gold from [z]Ophir, brought in from Ophir great plenty of [a]almug trees, and precious stones.

12 And the king made of the almug trees [†]pillars for the house of the LORD, and for the king's house, [b]harps also and psalteries for singers: there came no such almug trees, nor were seen unto this day.

13 And king Solomon gave unto the queen of Sheba [c]all her desire, whatsoever she asked, beside that [‡]which Solomon gave her of his royal bounty. So she turned and went to her own country, she and her servants.

14 ¶ Now the weight of gold that came to Solomon in one year [d]was six hundred threescore and six talents of gold,[4]

15 Beside that he had of the merchantmen, and of the traffic of the spice merchants, and of [e]all the kings of Arabia, and of the [§]governors of the country.

16 ¶ And king Solomon made [f]two hundred targets of beaten gold: six hundred shekels of gold went to one target.

17 And he made three hundred shields of beaten gold; three pound of gold went to one shield:[5] and the king put them [g]in the house of the forest of Lebanon.

18 ¶ Moreover the king made [h]a great throne of [i]ivory,[6] and overlaid it with the best gold.

19 The throne had six steps, and the top of the throne was round [‖]behind: and there were [*]stays on either side on the place of the seat, and two lions stood beside the stays.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The Lord is ever ready to hear the prayers which we make before him, and to manifest his acceptance of our upright services: and when we present ourselves, in body and soul, to be consecrated as the temples of the Holy Spirit, to his glory, he will hallow and sanctify us by his grace, and render us meet to be a holy habitation for himself: though before we were altogether polluted. In and through Jesus Christ, his eyes and his heart are always upon every true believer, to watch over him, and to rejoice in doing him good; yet it is only at intervals that he manifests his presence, and lifts up the light of his countenance upon him; but in heaven we shall always behold his face, and be filled with unalloyed, uninterrupted felicity.—Scott.

CHAP. X. QUEEN OF SHEBA.—Ver. 1, 2. By a comparison of texts, it appears that Cush, the son of Ham, had a descendant called Sheba, and it is probable that he settled in Africa, to the south of Egypt. Eber also had a descendant called Sheba; and Abraham, a grandson by Keturah, called by the same name. On these and other accounts it has been controverted, whether the Queen of Sheba came from some part of Ethiopia in Africa, or from the most remote region of Arabia, near the Indian ocean, in Asia.—Tradition favours the former opinion; but then it is blended with manifest falsehoods. Our Lord says, "The queen of the south came from the uttermost part of the earth, to hear the wisdom of Solomon:" and Ethiopia is more distant from Jerusalem than any part of Arabia; but at the same time it does not so well answer the description, "the uttermost part of the earth," Matt. xii. 42. Learned men are therefore now generally of opinion, that Sheba lay in the most southern part of Arabia Felix, between the Red Sea and the Indian Ocean; that the queen of Sheba was descended from Abraham by Keturah, and retained some traditional fragments of true religion; and that she had heard the fame of Solomon from the mariners of the fleet to Ophir, which had put into some of her ports: and indeed the more general connection, in which the name Sheba is used, in the subsequent part of Scripture, powerfully confirms this conclusion. Our Lord's testimony to the motives which influenced the queen of Sheba, sufficiently refutes the disadvantageous surmises which have often been entertained and advanced. She "had heard of the fame of Solomon, concerning the name of the LORD, and she came to hear his wisdom."

HER ADMIRATION OF SOLOMON AND HIS COURT.—1. She owned her expectation far outdone, though it was highly raised by the report she heard, ver. 6, 7. She is far from repenting her journey, or calling herself a fool for undertaking it, but acknowledges it was well worth her while to come so far, for the sight of that which she could not believe the report of. Usually, things are represented to us, both by common fame and by our own imagination, much greater than we find them when we come to examine them; but here the truth exceeded both fame and fancy. Those who, through grace, are brought to experience the delights of communion with God, will say that the one-half was not told them of the pleasures of Wisdom's ways, and the advantages of her gates. Glorified saints, much more, will say that it was a true report which they heard of the happiness of heaven, but that the thousandth part was not told them, 1 Cor. ii. 9. 2. She pronounced them happy that constantly attended him, and waited on him at table, "'Happy are thy men, happy are these thy servants,' ver. 8, they may improve their own wisdom by hearing thine." She was tempted to envy them, and wish herself one of them. Note, It is a great advantage to be in good families, and to have opportunity of frequent converse with those that are wise, and good, and communicative. Many have this happiness who know not how to value it. With much more reason may we say this of Christ's servants, "Blessed are they that dwell in his house, they will be still praising him." 3. She blessed God, the Giver of Solomon's wisdom and wealth, and the author of his advancement, who had made him king.—Henry.

TARSHISH.—Ver. 22. Many learned men have endeavoured, to show that Tarshish was a city in Spain, called Tartessus; and some think that this navy, which Solomon had with the navy of Hiram, was distinct from that which traded to Ophir, and was fitted out from some port on the Mediterranean: and they account for the length of time taken up in each voyage, by supposing that a great part of it was employed in selling and buying, or bartering, the several articles of commerce.—But, whatever gold might be, ivory, apes, and peacocks, (or parrots, as some render the word,) do not seem to have been articles of trade in any of the countries bordering on the Mediterranean.—"Jehoshaphat made ships of Tarshish to go to Ophir for gold: but they went not; for the ships were broken at Ezion-gaber."—"He joined himself with Ahaziah to make ships to go to Tarshish, and they made the ships in Ezion-gaber.—And the ships were broken, that they were not able to go to Tarshish." These passages, being decisive proofs that the ships of Tarshish, ships to go to Tarshish, were built at Ezion-gaber, on the Red sea, the learned Bishop Lowth, (having adopted the opinion that Tarshish was Tartessus in Spain,) says, "Tarshish is celebrated in Scripture for the trade which Solomon carried on thither in conjunction with the Tyrians. Jehoshaphat attempted afterward to renew that trade, and from the account given of that attempt, it appears that this fleet was to sail from Ezion-gaber on the Red sea, and must therefore have designed to sail round Africa, as Solomon's fleet probably had done before: for it was a three years' voyage; and they brought 21 ¶ And all king Solomon's [l]drinking vessels were of gold, and all the vessels of [m]the house of the forest of Lebanon were of pure gold; [†]none were of silver: it was nothing accounted of in the days of Solomon.

22 For the king had at sea a navy of [n]Tharshish[?] with the navy of Hiram: once in three years came the navy of Tharshish, bringing gold, and silver, [‡]ivory, and apes, and [o]peacocks.

23 So king Solomon [p]exceeded all the kings of the earth for riches and for wisdom.

24 ¶ And all the earth sought [§]to Solomon, to hear his wisdom, [q]which God had put in his heart.

25 And they brought [r]every man his present, vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and garments, and armour, and spices, horses, [s]and mules, [t]a rate year by year.

26 ¶ And [u]Solomon gathered together chariots and horsemen: and he had a thousand and four hundred chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen, whom he bestowed [x]in the cities for chariots, and with the king at Jerusalem.

27 ¶ And [y]the king [l]made silver to be in Jerusalem as stones,[8] and cedars made he to be as the sycamore trees that are in the vale, for abundance.

28 ¶ And *Solomon had [z]horses brought out of Egypt, [a]and linen yarn: the king's merchants received the linen yarn at a price.

29 And a chariot came up and went out[9] of Egypt for six hundred shekels of silver, and an horse for an hundred and fifty: and so for all [b]the kings of the Hittites, and for the kings of Syria, did they bring them out by [†]their means.

BUT king Solomon [a]loved many strange women, *together with the daughter of Pharaoh, women of the Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites, Zidonians, and Hittites;

2 Of the nations concerning which the LORD said unto the children of Israel, [b]Ye shall not go in to them, neither shall they come in unto you: for [c]surely they will turn away your heart after their gods: [d]Solomon clave unto these in love.

3 And he had [e]seven hundred[1] wives, princesses, and three hundred concubines: and his wives turned away his heart.

4 For it came to pass, [f]when Solomon was old, that [g]his wives turned away his heart after other gods: and [h]his heart was not perfect with the LORD his God, as was the heart of David his father.

5 For Solomon went after [i]Ashtoreth the goddess of the Zidonians, and after [k]Milcom, the abomination of the Ammonites.

6 And Solomon did evil in the sight of the LORD, and [†]went not fully after the LORD, as did David his father.

7 Then did Solomon [l]build an high place for [m]Chemosh, the [n]abomination of Moab, in [o]the hill that is before Jerusalem,[2] and for Molech, the abomination of the children of Ammon.

8 And likewise did he for [p]all his strange wives, which burnt incense and sacrificed unto their gods.

9 ¶ And the LORD was [q]angry with Solomon, because [r]his heart was turned from the LORD God of Israel, [s]which had appeared unto him twice,

10 And had [t]commanded him concerning this thing, that he should not go after other gods: but he kept not that which the LORD commanded.

11 Wherefore the LORD said unto Solomon, Forasmuch as this [‡]is done of thee, and thou hast not kept my covenant and my statutes, which I have commanded thee, [u]I will surely rend the kingdom from thee, and will give it to thy servant.

12 Notwithstanding [v]in thy days I will not do it [x]for David thy father's sake: but [y]I will rend it out of the hand of thy son.

13 Howbeit [z]I will not rend away all the kingdom; but will give [a]one tribe[3] to thy son, [b]for David my servant's sake, and [c]for Jerusalem's sake which I have chosen.

14 ¶ And [d]the LORD stirred up [e]an adversary unto Solomon, Hadad the Edomite: he was of the king's seed in Edom.

15 For it came to pass, [f]when David was in Edom, and Joab the captain of the host was gone up to bury the slain, [g]after he had smitten [h]every male in Edom;

16 (For six months did Joab remain there with all Israel, until he had cut off every male in Edom:)

17 That Hadad fled, he and certain Edomites of his father's servants with him, to go into Egypt; [i]Hadad being yet a little child.

18 And they arose out of [k]Midian,[4] and came to [l]Paran: and they took men with them out of Paran, and they came to Egypt, unto Pharaoh king of Egypt; which gave him an house, and appointed him victuals, and gave him land.

gold from Ophir probably from the coast of Arabia, silver from Tartessus, and ivory, apes, and peacocks, from Africa.—It is certain that, under Pharaoh-necho, about two hundred years after, this voyage was made by the Egyptians," &c.—But, with all deference to so eminent a writer, it must be allowed extremely improbable, that in regular voyages for commerce, (not discovery, for which Pharaoh-necho's extraordinary expedition doubtless was undertaken,) such a circuitous course should be chosen; when, as far as we can learn, it was not then known that Africa was a peninsula! To fit out one navy at Ezion-gaber, for Ophir, whether in Arabia or the East Indies, which might coast some parts of Africa; and to fit out another navy to Spain from some Mediterranean port, would be an obvious and compendious measure: but that the same ships should attempt the whole, and after taking in the far richest part of their freight, comparatively near home, should with it attempt to sail round Africa, in order to add silver, and some other articles of inferior value, at Tartessus, must strike every reflecting person as a most unparalleled proceeding.–To sail round Africa at that time, would be vastly more formidable, than a voyage round the world at present: and a single glance at a map must convince any person acquainted with commerce, that no man of common prudence would ever think of such a voyage for lucrative purposes.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Wisdom and piety are exceedingly valuable, and render men truly honourable: and they who form a due estimate of their worth, will think no expense or labour too great to obtain them.—When we first attend seriously to religion, we shall meet with many "hard questions," which we cannot resolve, and which will often perplex and distress our minds, especially if at a distance from proper instructions. But "then shall we know if we follow on to know the LORD." By waiting and prayer, by practising what we have learned, by diligently searching the Scriptures, and by consulting wise and experienced Christians, we shall be delivered from our difficulties, and a clearer light will shine upon our path.–They who possess wisdom and knowledge should be courteous and accessible, and glad to communicate them for the good of others; even as the rich should be to impart their wealth.—Scott.

CHAP. XI. SIN AND DANGER OF POLYGAMY.—Ver. 1—8. We have not a more melancholy and astonishing instance of human depravity in the sacred Scriptures than that recorded in these verses. He who was named "Jedediah," Beloved of the LORD, and who early in life is declared to have "loved the LORD:" he who had been favoured with such special tokens of God's favour, and had received such answers to his prayers: he who had been honoured to build the temple, and was so enlarged in supplication when it was dedicated: he who was renowned throughout the earth for his wisdom and piety, as well as his wealth and prosperity: he who was employed as an inspired writer, whose name is affixed to a part of the oracles of God: who had given such excellent counsels and warnings to others, and was so illustrious a type of Christ: even he apostatized, and became a public and shameful worshipper of abominable idols, to the disgrace of his understanding, as well as the scandal of his profession!—It is probable that his declension was gradual: he was, perhaps, elated with spiritual pride, as well as induced by his prosperity to indulge in luxury and ostentation: or, perhaps, he deemed it unnecessary for one of his wisdom and ability, and of his rank and authority, to restrict himself by those rules, which were needful or salutary to inferior persons, as if he were secure from those evils which they were intended to prevent! He first multiplied horses, and caused the people to go down into Egypt for that purpose; then he greatly multiplied gold and silver, contrary to the law of Moses; not as his father had done, for the service of the sanctuary, but for the increase of his own splendour. Thus, the barrier was broken through, and the fervour of his piety abated.—After the example of his father, he married several women, and added one to another, more and more rapidly, till he had got together an immense number of wives and concubines. And he doubtless might argue, that if it was lawful to have two wives, why not many? and, in his case, who could maintain them all, they might not be inexpedient, and would add to his magnificence and royal dignity. Probably Pharaoh's daughter, whom he first married, was a real convert; (for we find no temples to the gods of Egypt:) and this might induce him to take more wives of the heathen, flattering himself that his wisdom and example would prevail with them also to embrace the worship of JEHOVAH. Thus he proceeded, till, perhaps, persons were employed to collect from every part of his kingdom, but especially from the subjected nations, every beautiful woman whom they met, without regard to her religion. Those of superior rank seem to have been numbered among his wives, and styled princesses; while the inferiors were his concubines, with inferior privileges. Towards the close of his life, when he was above fifty years of age, he grew more addicted to his women than before: and, spending much time in their company, he doubtless in a degree neglected both the worship of God, and the affairs of his kingdom: and perhaps the enormous expense which their extravagance occasioned, rendered those burdens requisite, of which the people afterwards complained. But the evil did not stop here: for his women gained still greater ascendency over him, and gradually prevailed with him to connive at their idolatries, to humour them by building idolatrous temples, and at length to join with them in their abominable worship! When one had been thus gratified, there could be no peace, unless the others were obliged in the same manner; and therefore he did thus for all his strange wives.—They who have noted in history, or in society, the effects of 20 And the sister of Tahpenes bare him Genubath his son, whom Tahpenes [o]weaned in Pharaoh's house: and Genubath was in Pharaoh's household among the sons of Pharaoh.

21 And when Hadad [p]heard in Egypt that David slept with his fathers, and that Joab the captain of the host was dead, Hadad said to Pharaoh, [q]Let me depart, that I may go to mine own country.

22 Then Pharaoh said unto him, [q]But what hast thou lacked with me, that, behold, thou seekest to go to thine own country? And he answered, [r]Nothing: howbeit [r]let me go in any wise.

23 ¶ And [s]God stirred him up another adversary, Rezon the son of Eliadah, which fled from his lord [t]Hadadezer king of Zobah:

24 And he gathered men unto him, and became captain over a band, when David slew them of Zobah: and they went to [u]Damascus, and dwelt therein, and reigned in Damascus.

25 And he was an adversary[s] to Israel [x]all the days of Solomon, beside the mischief that Hadad did: and he [y]abhorred Israel, and reigned over Syria.

26 ¶ And [z]Jeroboam the son of Nebat, [a]an Ephrathite of Zereda, [b]Solomon's servant, whose mother's name was Zeruah, a widow woman, even he lifted up his hand against the king.

27 And this was the cause that he [c]lifted up his hand against the king: [d]Solomon built Millo, and [*]repaired [e]the breaches of [f]the city of David his father.

28 And the man Jeroboam was a mighty man of valour: and Solomon seeing the young man that he [†]was industrious, [g]he made him ruler over all the [‡]charge of [h]the house of Joseph.

29 And it came to pass at that time when Jeroboam went out of Jerusalem, that the prophet [i]Ahijah the [k]Shilonite found him in the way: and he had clad himself with a new garment;[6] [l]and they two were alone in the field:

30 And Ahijah caught the new garment that was on him, and [m]rent it in twelve pieces:[7]

31 And he said to Jeroboam, Take thee ten pieces: for [n]thus saith the LORD, the God of Israel, Behold, I will rend the kingdom out of the hand of Solomon, and will give ten tribes to thee:

32 (But [o]he shall have one tribe for my servant David's sake, and [p]for Jerusalem's sake, the city which I have chosen out of all the tribes of Israel:)

the influence of inveigling women over the greatest and wisest of men, will readily perceive that matters were speedily in a train; and that it was almost impossible, without an immediate divine interposition, that Solomon should stop short of this extreme folly and wickedness, when he had once suffered himself to be entangled in the fatal net. The inspired historian, therefore, quotes the prohibition of marrying strange women, with the annexed consequence, "Surely they will turn away your heart after their gods;" to show that no eminency of wisdom, or firmness of resolution, will secure any man, when in a careless or self-confident spirit he presumes to violate God's commandment, and thus to run into temptation. Of this Solomon formed a most striking proof. David had committed several sins, but he had repented, and humbled himself for them: and he had still adhered to the worship of JEHOVAH, and never in the smallest instance set the people an example of idolatry, or gave any connivance to that greatest of all abominations, that open treason against the King of heaven, and violation of the national covenant with Israel. But Solomon's heart was not thus "perfect with the LORD his God;" and "he went not fully after the LORD!"—Scott.

JEROBOAM.—We have here the first mention of that infamous name, "Jeroboam the son of Nebat, that made Israel to sin;" he is here brought upon the stage as an adversary to Solomon, whom God had expressly told, ver. 11, that he would give the greatest part of his kingdom to his servant, and Jeroboam was the man. We have here an account, 1. Of his extraction, ver. 26, he was of the tribe of Ephraim, the next in honour to Judah; his mother was a widow, to whom Providence had made up the loss of a husband in a son that was active and ingenious, and (we may suppose) a great support and comfort to her. 2. Of his elevation. It was Solomon's wisdom, when he had work to do, to employ proper persons in it; he observed Jeroboam to be a very industrious young man, one that minded his business, took a pleasure in it, and did it with all his might, and therefore he gradually advanced him, till at length he made him receiver-general for the two tribes of Ephraim and Manasseh, or perhaps put him into an office equivalent to that of lord-lieutenant of those two counties, for he was ruler of the burthen, or tribute, that is, either of the taxes or of the militia, of the house of Joseph. Note, Industry is the way to preferment; "Seest thou a man that is diligent in his business," that will take care and pains, and go through with it? He shall "stand before kings," and not always be on the level with mean men. Observe a difference between David and both his predecessor and his successor; when Saul saw a "valiant man, he took him to himself," 1 Sam. xiv. 52; when Solomon saw an "industrious" man, he preferred him; but David's "eyes were upon the faithful in the land," that they might "dwell with him:" if he saw a godly man, he preferred him, for he was a man after God's own heart, whose "countenance beholds the upright." 3. Of his designation to the government of the ten tribes, after the death of Solomon. Some think he was himself plotting against Solomon, and contriving to rise to the throne; that he was turbulent and aspiring. The Jews say, that when he was employed by Solomon in building Millo, he took opportunities of reflecting upon Solomon as oppressive to his people, and suggesting that which would alienate them from his government; it is not, indeed, probable that he should say much to that purport, for Solomon would have got notice of it, and it would have hindered his preferment: but it is plainly intimated that he had it in his thoughts, for the prophet tells him, ver. 37, "Thou shalt reign according to all that thy soul desireth:" but this was the cause, or rather this was the story, of his lifting up of his hand against the king; he made him ruler over the tribes of Joseph, and as he was going to take possession of his government, he was told by a prophet, in God's name, that he should be king, which emboldened him to aim high, and, in some instances, to oppose the king, and give him vexation.—Henry.

SOLOMON'S DEATH.—Ver. 42, 43. Solomon was the only king who reigned so long as forty years over all Israel: yet he was not above sixty years of age when he died, and perhaps he had injured his constitution by indulgence. We are not here informed, whether he repented before his death, or not: and this silence speaks a warning to every one of us, not to yield to temptations, lest we should leave the world in uncertainty, and be condemned as hypocrites in the consciences of God's people. But this silence in the book of Kings no more proves that Solomon did not repent, than the silence of the book of Chronicles proves that he did not commit idolatry. I would not indeed decide upon so controverted a point with unhesitating confidence: yet the book of Ecclesiastes seems fully to show that he repented, and publicly declared that repentance before his death. We are not, however, so much interested in the solution, as some persons seem to suppose; for it is extremely nugatory to put the proof of doctrines on examples. If he did not repent, he doubtless perished, notwithstanding all his profession and eminent endowments: for no part of Scripture gives encouragement concerning those who die in unrepented wickedness. But many think that this supposition would prove all his profession to have been hypocritical; which does not so well accord to his name Jedidiah, and the testimony of the Holy Spirit, that he "loved the LORD."—Scott.

CHAP. XII. REHOBOAM'S FOLLY.—Ver. 8—15. The wise counsel of the old men did not suit the rash, insolent, and domineering spirit of Rehoboam: and he opposed to it the advice of the companions of his youthful pleasures, who would be sure to accommodate themselves to his inclinations. They counselled him therefore to speak with autho-

4 Thy father made [d]our yoke grievous:[2] now therefore make thou the grievous service of thy father, and his heavy yoke which he put upon us, lighter, and we will serve thee.

5 And he said unto them, Depart yet for three days, then come again to me. And the people departed.

6 ¶ And king Rehoboam [e]consulted with the old men, that stood before Solomon his father while he yet lived, and said, How do ye advise that I may answer this people?

7 And they spake unto him, saying, [f]If thou wilt be a servant unto this people this day,[g] and wilt serve them, and answer them, and [g]speak good words to them, then they will be thy servants for ever.

8 But [h]he forsook the counsel of the old men, which they had given him, and consulted with the young men that were grown up with him, and which stood before him:

9 And he said unto them, [i]What counsel give ye that we may answer this people, who have spoken to me, saying, Make the yoke which thy father did put upon us lighter?

10 And the young men that were grown up with him spake unto him, saying, [k]Thus shalt thou speak unto this people that spake unto thee, saying, Thy father made our yoke heavy, but make thou it lighter unto us; thus shalt thou say unto them, [l]My little finger shall be thicker than my father's loins.

11 And now whereas my father did lade you with a heavy yoke, [m]I will add to your yoke: my father hath chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with [n]scorpions.[4]

12 ¶ So Jeroboam and all the people came to Rehoboam the third day, as the king had appointed, saying, [o]Come to me again the third day.

13 And the king [p]answered the people *roughly, and forsook the old men's counsel that they gave him;

14 And spake to them after [q]the counsel of the young men, saying, [r]My father made your yoke heavy, and I will add to your yoke: my father also chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

15 Wherefore the king hearkened not unto the people; for [s]the cause[5] was from the LORD, [t]that he might perform his saying, which the LORD spake by Ahijah the Shilonite unto Jeroboam the son of Nebat.

16 ¶ So when all Israel saw that the king hearkened not unto them, the people answered the king, saying, [u]What portion have we in David? neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse: [v]to your tents, O Israel: [x]now see to thine own house, David. So [y]Israel departed unto their tents.

17 But as for [z]the children of Israel which dwelt in the cities of Judah, Rehoboam reigned over them.

18 Then king Rehoboam sent [a]Adoram, who was over the tribute; and [b]all Israel stoned him with stones, that he died. Therefore king Rehoboam [†]made speed to get him up to his chariot, to [c]flee to Jerusalem.

19 So [d]Israel [‡]rebelled against the house of David [e]unto this day.

20 ¶ And it came to pass, when all Israel heard that Jeroboam was come again, that they sent and called him unto the congregation, [f]and made him king over all Israel: there was [g]none that followed the house of David, but the tribe of Judah only.

21 ¶ And [h]when Rehoboam was come to Jerusalem, he assembled all the house of Judah, with the tribe of Benjamin, [i]an hundred and fourscore thousand chosen men, which were warriors, to fight against the house of Israel, to bring the kingdom again to Rehoboam the son of Solomon.

22 [j]But the word of God came unto Shemaiah[6] [k]the man of God, saying,

23 Speak unto Rehoboam, the son of Solomon, king of Judah, and unto all the house of Judah and Benjamin, and to the remnant of the people, saying,

24 Thus saith the LORD, [l]Ye shall not go up, nor fight against your brethren the children of Israel: return every man to his house; [m]for this thing is from me. [n]They hearkened therefore to the word of the LORD, and returned to depart, according to the word of the LORD.

25 ¶ Then Jeroboam [o]built [p]Shechem in mount Ephraim, and dwelt therein; and went out from thence, and built [q]Penuel.[7]

26 ¶ And Jeroboam [r]said in his heart, [s]Now shall the kingdom return to the house of David:

27 If this people [t]go up to do sacrifice in the house of the LORD at Jerusalem, then shall the heart of this people turn again unto their lord, even unto Rehoboam king of Judah, [u]and they shall kill me, and go again to Rehoboam king of Judah.

28 Whereupon the king [x]took counsel, and made [y]two calves of gold, and said unto them, [z]It is too much for you to go up to Jerusalem: [a]behold thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.

29 And he set the one in [b]Beth-el, and the other put he in [c]Dan.

30 And this thing [d]became a sin: for the people went to worship before the one, even unto Dan.

31 And he made [e]an house of high places,[8] and made [f]priests of the lowest of the people, which were not of the sons of Levi.

What authority he possessed in Judah, we may gather from this passage, where it is related, that he prevailed with the king and 180,000 men to lay down their arms, and return home, merely by declaring that the separation which had taken place was by the order and appointment of God.—CALMET.

rity, and to damp the spirits of the assembly by resolute language; that they might no longer dare to dictate to him. The expressions which they suggested allowed to the utmost, and even aggravated, the injurious charge brought against Solomon; and yet avowed a resolution of greater oppression and severity! The king was advised to menace them, that "his little finger should be thicker than his father's loins:" that is, that, as he was vastly more powerful than Solomon was at the beginning of his reign; so he would certainly let them feel the weight of that power, if they dared to oppose him! Perhaps he thought thus, because he came to the throne at a more mature age than Solomon had done; and had not any brothers to rival him in it. He also declared that he would "add to their yoke," by demanding heavier services and taxes of them: and, if they hesitated to obey, he would chastise them with scorpions, severe punishments as terrible as the sting of a scorpion; or, as some think, a terrible scourge thus called.—Such language as this was not very wise in Pharaoh to the poor enslaved Israelites, but it was not at all likely it should be endured by a rich, numerous, and free people. Nothing can be conceived more foolish and exasperating than such an address in so critical a juncture: but it was adopted, because it coincided with the self-importance and tyrannical temper of Rehoboam: and we may cease to wonder at his extreme infatuation, when we are told, that "the cause was from the LORD, that he might perform his word."—Scott.

THE GREAT SCHISM.—Ver. 15. We have here the rending of the kingdom of the ten tribes from the house of David; to effect which, the people were bold and resolute in their revolt. They highly resented the provocation that Rehoboam had given them, were incensed at his menaces, concluded that that government would, in the progress of it, be intolerably grievous, which, in the beginning of it, was very haughty; and therefore immediately came to this resolve, one and all, "What portion have we in David?" ver. 16. They speak here very unbecomingly of David, that great benefactor of their nation, calling him the son of Jesse, no greater a man than his neighbours. How soon are good men, and their good services to the public, forgotten! The rashness of their resolution was also much to be blamed; in time, and with prudent management, they might have settled the original contract with Rehoboam, to mutual satisfaction. Had they inquired who [illegible] this advice, and taken a course to remove those evil counsellors from [illegible] rupture might have been prevented: otherwise, their jealousy for their [illegible] is not a servant, is not a [illegible] they will be ruled [illegible] away from the great ends of their advancement, which was to be "ministers of God to them for good." But thus to rebel against the seed of David, whom God had advanced to the kingdom, (entailing it on his seed,) and to set up another king, in opposition to that family, was a great sin; see 2 Chron. xiii. 5—8. To this God refers, Hos. viii. 4, "They have set up kings, but not by me." And it is here mentioned, to the praise of the tribe of Judah, that they "followed the house of David," ver. 17, 20, and for aught that appears, they found Rehoboam better than his word, nor did he rule with the rigour which at first he threatened.—Henry.

JEROBOAM'S ESTABLISHMENT OF IDOLATRY.—Ver. 26—29. The Lord had promised Jeroboam, that he would give ten tribes to him, and confirm the kingdom over them to his posterity, in case he obeyed his commandments: but he either forgot, or despised the word of the Lord; and, leaning to his own understanding, he concluded, that he never could secure the obedience of the people, if they went up to Jerusalem to worship. For in case Rehoboam permitted them to come and return in safety, (as it is probable he would have done,) their friendly intercourse with their brethren, their social worship, and mutual kindness, would induce them to return to their submission to David's family, and to purchase Rehoboam's favour by killing his competitor. This might indeed seem natural and reasonable, but it contradicted the truth of God; and Jeroboam's wicked policy violated his commandments. To cover his secret intentions, he pretended that it was too much trouble for the people to go to Jerusalem to worship; and that they might as acceptably serve God nearer home. He therefore made two golden calves, in imitation, no doubt, of the idolatries which he had witnessed in Egypt, or according to the idolatry of Israel in the wilderness: and he placed them at the southern and northern extremities of his kingdom: at Beth-el, afterwards called on that account "Beth-aven," or the house of vanity: and at Dan, where the Danites had formerly established idolatry. These were also reputed sacred places; the one, for Jacob's vision and vow: and the other, for the customary idolatry which had there prevailed. Thus he "made Israel to sin," and introduced the worship of the golden calves, which was perpetuated in [illegible] dom of Israel, without interruption, till the Assyrian captivity: and the bulk [illegible] ple readily concurred in his measures, as suited to their convenience and [illegible] though the priests, Levites, and many Israelites, were honourable [illegible] dent that Jeroboam meant this worship for JEHOVAH the God of Israel, [illegible] them out of the land of [illegible] though it was directly [illegible] infinitely [illegible]

Jeroboam's hand withereth, 1; and at the prayer of the prophet is restored, 6; the disobedient prophet is slain by a lion, 23; Jeroboam's obstinacy, 33.

AND, behold, there came [a]a man of God[1] out of Judah [b]by the word of the LORD unto Beth-el: and [c]Jeroboam stood by the altar to *burn incense.

2 And he cried against the altar in the word of the LORD, and said, [d]O altar, altar, thus saith the LORD; Behold, a child shall be born unto the house of David, [e]Josiah by name;[2] and upon thee shall he offer the priests of the high places that burn incense upon thee, and men's bones shall be burnt upon thee.

3 And [f]he gave a sign the same day, saying, This is the sign which the LORD hath spoken; Behold, the altar shall be rent, and the ashes that are upon it shall be poured out.

4 ¶ And it came to pass, when king Jeroboam heard the saying of the man of God, which had cried against the altar in Beth-el, that he put forth his hand from the altar, saying, [g]Lay hold on him.[3] And [h]his hand, which he put forth against him, dried up, so that he could not pull it in again to him,

5 The altar also was rent, and the ashes poured out from the altar, [i]according to the sign which the man of God had given by the word of the LORD.

6 And the king answered and said unto the man of God, [k]Entreat now the face of the LORD thy God, and pray for me, that my hand may be restored me again. [l]And the man of God besought the [†]LORD, and the king's hand was restored him again, and became as it was before.

7 ¶ And the king said unto the man of God, Come home with me, and [m]refresh thyself, [n]and I will give thee a reward.

8 And the man of God said unto the king, [o]If thou wilt give me half thine house, [p]I will not go in with thee, neither will I eat bread nor drink water in this place:

9 For [q]so was it charged me by the word of the LORD, saying, [r]Eat no bread, nor drink water, nor turn again by the same way that thou camest.

10 So he went another way, and returned not by the way that he came to Beth-el.

11 ¶ Now there dwelt [s]an old prophet[4] in Beth-el; and his [‡]sons [t]came and told him all the works that the man of God had done that day in Beth-el: the words which he had spoken unto the king, them they told also to their father.

12 And their father said unto them, What way went he? For his sons had seen what way the man of God went, which came from Judah.

13 And he said unto his sons, [u]Saddle me the ass. So they saddled him the ass: and he rode thereon,

14 And went after the man of God, and found him [x]sitting under an oak: and he said unto him, [y]Art thou the man of God that camest from Judah? And he said, I am.

15 Then he said unto him, Come home with me, and eat bread.

16 And he said, [z]I may not return with thee, nor go in with thee: neither will I eat bread nor drink water with thee in this place:

17 For [§]it was said to me [a]by the word of the LORD, Thou shalt eat no bread nor drink water there, nor turn again to go by the way that thou camest.

18 He said unto him, I am a prophet also as thou art; and [b]an angel spake unto me by the word of the LORD, saying, Bring him back with thee into thine house, that he may eat bread, and drink water. [c]But he lied unto him.

19 So [d]he went back[5] with him, and did eat bread in his house, and drank water.

20 ¶ And it came to pass, as they sat at the table, that [e]the word of the LORD came unto the prophet that brought him back:

21 And he cried unto the man of God that came from Judah, saying, [f]Thus saith the LORD, Forasmuch as [g]thou hast disobeyed the mouth of the LORD, and hast not kept the commandment which the LORD thy God commanded thee,

22 But camest back, and hast eaten bread, and drunk water in the place, of the which the LORD did say to thee, Eat no bread, and drink no water; [h]thy carcase shall not come unto the sepulchre of thy fathers.

23 ¶ And it came to pass, after he had eaten bread, and after he had drunk, that he saddled for him the ass, to wit, for the prophet whom he had brought back.

24 And when he was gone, [i]a lion met him[6] by the way, and slew him: and his carcase was cast in the way, and the ass stood by it, the lion also stood by the carcase.

for that species of idolatry also. Thus the worship of images of Christ, and similar superstitions, in the ancient Romish church, soon introduced the worship of saints and angels. Ver. 30. "Even unto Dan." The people readily resorted to sacrifice, to the appointed places: though sometimes, that might occasion them longer journeys, than if they had gone to Jerusalem. Perhaps they often went from the southern part of the land, even to Dan, to maintain communion with those who worshipped there, who probably would not be backward in repaying their civility. Ver. 31. Temples, on high places, were erected for the worship of the calves, at Beth-el and Dan; which were intended to serve the purpose to the religion of the ten tribes, that the temple did to Judah. Some think there were several chapels and altars erected, for the convenience of the worshippers; and perhaps others were added in different parts of the land. For these he appointed and consecrated priests of the poorest and most illiterate of the people, who would on that account be the more obsequious to him for their own interest. Or, as others explain the words, he made priests from every extremity of the land, or from every tribe and family without exception. Thus he exempted the people from paying tithes to the Levites, whom he drove out of his kingdom, because they would not concur in his idolatry: and he paid court to the other tribes, by admitting them to the priesthood, of which many were ambitious: and in both respects he, no doubt, thought himself, and was considered by others, a consummate politician.—Scott.

CHAP. XIII. JEROBOAM WARNED.—Ver 1. "To burn incense." Jeroboam seems on this occasion to have officiated himself; and to have burned incense at the same altar on which the sacrifices had been offered. As the typical meaning of these institutions was not at all understood, and as the Divine appointment was entirely disregarded; every kind of innovation was made without scruple. Ver. 2. We are not informed of this prophet's name; but he came from Judah in the name of JEHOVAH, whose worship at the temple Jeroboam and Israel had forsaken; and he predicted the prevalency of the house of David, whose authority they had rejected. With holy boldness and great earnestness he cried against the altar, whilst Jeroboam and his attendants were performing their religious rites. As the destruction of this newly instituted worship was to be expressly foretold, and the stupidity of the idolaters themselves to be severely reproved, he addressed himself to the altar and not to the worshippers.—This prediction was delivered above three hundred years before Josiah was born; yet during all those years no one of the house of David gave his son, or assumed himself, this name, or attempted to fulfil the prophecy, until the appointed time was arrived; and then Amon, a wicked prince, named his son Josiah.—This extraordinary prophecy was a plain declaration that the family of David would continue, and be honoured as the supporters of true religion, when the kingdom of the ten tribes should be incapable of resisting them.—The burning of men's bones upon the altar was the greatest contempt of it imaginable: and the offering of the priests themselves upon it, the greatest mark of God's abhorrence of their crimes. Ver. 3—6. The judgment inflicted upon Jeroboam, and the rending of the altar as it had been foretold, intimidated him, so that he durst not attempt any thing further against "the man of God," whose message was thus divinely attested. In this emergency he had no confidence in his idol-gods, his upstart priests, or his self-invented sacrifices; but he expected help from the prayers of the prophet. He therefore begged him to intreat the face, (or the favour,) of the Lord his God for him; but he neither acknowledged his guilt, nor desired instructions from the prophet, nor sought forgiveness of his sins, nor desisted from his idolatry. He merely desired the removal of the Divine judgment, which the prophet readily prayed for and obtained.

THE OLD PROPHET.—Ver. 11—19. This old prophet continued to reside at Beth-el, after the priests and Levites had been driven away, and after idolatry was publicly established there: yet he entered no protest against it; and his sons were present at the idolatrous sacrifice, and made no secret of it. One old prophet: if any others had lived there, they had ere this left the place. These circumstances, joined to his conduct on this occasion, are convincing proofs, that though called a prophet he was not a really godly man. Perhaps he had been educated in the schools of the prophets, and had been favoured with the Spirit of prophecy. This had acquired him the reputation of a prophet, and he had maintained it in the days of Solomon when religion was respected. But when the change took place under Jeroboam, being a carnal man, he preferred ease and interest to his religion, and made no opposition to the prevailing party: perhaps satisfying his conscience with holding his own sentiments privately, and not actually joining in the idolatry. Yet he was still desirous of the reputation of a prophet, as far as he could safely retain it: and this appears to have been his leading motive, in enticing the prophet of Judah back again; and not kindness to him, as some, or malice against him, as others have conjectured.

THE DISOBEDIENT PROPHET.—Ver. 20—22. As the Lord inspired Balaam, contrary to his intentions, to pronounce blessings, and to utter, though doubtless with the greatest reluctance, prophecies concerning Israel, Num. xxiii. 7, 8, xxiv. 1, 2, 13; so was this prophet constrained to pronounce sentence against the man of God, whom he had seduced into disobedience; and thus to publish the shame of his own horrible imposture, and to read against himself a more dreadful doom except he repented.—The sentence

32 For [o]the saying which he cried by the word of the LORD against the altar in Beth-el, and against all [p]the houses of the high places which are [q]in the cities of Samaria, shall surely come to pass.

33 ¶ After this thing [r]Jeroboam returned not[9] from his evil way, but [†]made again of the lowest of the people priests of the high places: [s]whosoever would, he [‡]consecrated him, and he became one of the priests of the high places.

34 And this thing [t]became sin unto the house of Jeroboam, even [u]to cut it off, and to destroy it from off the face of the earth.

CHAP. XIV.

Abijah being sick, Jeroboam sendeth his wife, disguised, with presents to the prophet Ahijah at Shiloh, 1. Ahijah, forewarned, denounceth God's judgment, 5.

AT [a]that time Abijah [b]the son of Jeroboam fell sick.

2 And Jeroboam said to his wife, Arise, I pray thee, and [c]disguise thyself, that thou be not known to be the wife of Jeroboam; and get thee to Shiloh: behold, there is [d]Ahijah the prophet, which told me that I should be king over this people.

3 And [e]take [*]with thee ten loaves, and [†]cracknels,[1] and a [‡]cruse of honey, and go to him: [f]he shall tell thee what shall become of the child.

4 And Jeroboam's wife did so, and arose, and went to [g]Shiloh, and came to the house of Ahijah. But Ahijah could not see; [h]for his eyes [§]were set by reason of his age.

5 ¶ And [i]the LORD said unto Ahijah, Behold, the wife of Jeroboam cometh to ask a thing of thee for her son; for he is sick: thus and thus shalt thou say unto her: for it shall be, when she cometh in, that she shall feign herself to be another woman.

6 And it was so, when Ahijah heard the sound of her feet, as she came in at the door, that he said, Come in, [k]thou wife of Jeroboam; [l]why feignest thou thyself to be another? [m]for I am sent to thee with [l]heavy tidings.

7 Go, tell Jeroboam, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, [n]Forasmuch as I exalted thee from among the people, and made thee prince over my people Israel,

8 And [o]rent the kingdom away from the house of David, and gave it thee: and yet thou hast not been as [p]my servant David, who kept my commandments, and who followed me with all his heart, to do that only which was right in mine eyes;

9 But [q]hast done evil above all that were before thee: for [r]thou hast gone and made thee other gods, and molten images, [s]to provoke me to anger, and hast [t]cast me behind thy back:

10 Therefore, behold, [u]I will bring evil upon the house of Jeroboam, and will cut off from Jeroboam [x]him that pisseth against the wall, and [y]him that is shut up[2] and left in Israel, and will take away the remnant of the house of Jeroboam, [z]as a man taketh away dung, till it be all gone.

11 Him [a]that dieth of Jeroboam in the city shall the dogs eat; and him that dieth in the field shall the fowls of the air eat: for the LORD hath spoken it.

12 Arise thou therefore, get thee to thine own house: and [b]when thy feet enter into the city, the child shall die.

13 And all Israel [c]shall mourn for him, and bury him: for he only of Jeroboam shall come to the grave, because in him [d]there is found some good thing toward the LORD God of Israel, in the house of Jeroboam.

14 Moreover [e]the LORD shall raise him up a king[3] over Israel, who shall cut off the house of Jeroboam that day: [f]but what? even now.

15 ¶ For [g]the LORD shall smite Israel, [h]as a reed is shaken in the water, and he shall [i]root up Israel out of [k]this good land, which he gave to their fathers, and [l]shall scatter them was direct, that the prophet of Judah should not die in peace at home, to be buried in his own sepulchre: but the time and circumstances of his death were not specified. Ver. 23—32. The old prophet did not accompany the prophet of Judah, perhaps apprehensive of some divine judgment overtaking him: but some think that he supplied him with the ass on which he rode, and that he had come on foot. The lion, commissioned by God, slew the prophet, but did not devour his body; and he neither hurt nor frighted away the ass: nay, he behaved so tamely, that travellers ventured past him, perhaps at a distance! And even the old prophet dared, and was allowed without molestation, to take away his body for burial! All these miraculous circumstances marked his death as a divine rebuke for his disobedience, in eating bread at idolatrous Beth-el; and both counteracted the conclusion, which Jeroboam might have been tempted to draw from his death against the truth of his message, and formed a solemn proof how God abhorred, and would have all his people abhor, this newly instituted worship.—Thus, for one offence, a faithful servant of God was punished with immediate death, being "chastened of the Lord, that he should not be condemned with the world; whilst the lying prophet and the idolatrous king escaped with impunity, being reserved to the punishments of a future state; which were in this instance loudly proclaimed. The old prophet indeed paid respect to the man of God, and expressed his conviction that his predictions would be verified, and a concern about his own bones; but he seems to have shown no humiliation for his enormous crimes, no tokens of true repentance, no care about his soul: he neither left Beth-el, nor entered a public protest against Jeroboam's idolatry; nor did any thing which many a hypocrite hath not equalled or exceeded in attempting to buoy up his own presumption, or to impose upon others. Nay, he appears to have been desirous of gratifying his own vanity, and his claim to be considered as a prophet, when he buried the man of God in his own sepulchre, and lamented over him, "Alas, my brother!" He was, however, instrumental in accomplishing the Lord's word: and the prophet of Judah, being buried at Beth-el with a distinguishing inscription, was [illegible] to keep his prediction in remembrance, and to witness against [illegible] of the golden calves. Elias Levita observes, "Jeroboam is said to have [illegible] prophecies there are [illegible]; and [illegible] was fulfilled [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] beyond the river, [m]because they have made their groves, [n]provoking the LORD to anger.

16 And [o]he shall give Israel up because of the sins of Jeroboam, [p]who did sin, and who made Israel to sin.

17 ¶ And Jeroboam's wife arose, and departed, and came to [q]Tirzah:[4] and [r]when she came to the threshold of the door, the child died;

18 And they buried him: and all Israel mourned for him, according to the word of the LORD, which he spake by the hand of his servant Ahijah the prophet.

19 ¶ And the rest of the acts of Jeroboam, [s]how he warred, and how he reigned, behold, they are written [t]in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel.[5]

20 And the days which Jeroboam reigned were two and twenty years: [u]and he [*]slept with his fathers, and [x]Nadab his son reigned in his stead.

21 ¶ And Rehoboam the son of Solomon reigned in Judah. [y]Rehoboam was forty and one years old when he began to reign, and he reigned seventeen years in Jerusalem, [z]the city which the LORD did choose out of all the tribes of Israel, [a]to put his name there. And his mother's name was [b]Naamah an Ammonitess.

22 And [c]Judah did evil in the sight of the LORD, and [d]they provoked him to jealousy with their sins which they had committed, [e]above all that their fathers had done.

23 For they also [f]built them high places, and [†]images, and [g]groves, on every high hill, and under every green tree.

24 And [h]there were also sodomites in the land: and they did according to all the abominations of the nations which the LORD cast out before the children of Israel.

25 ¶ And it came to pass in the fifth year of king Rehoboam, that [i]Shishak king[6] of Egypt came up against Jerusalem:

26 And [k]he took away the treasures of the house of the LORD, and the treasures of the king's house; he even took away all: and he took away all [l]the shields of gold which Solomon had made.

27 And king Rehoboam [m]made in their stead brasen shields, and committed them unto the hands of the chief of the [‡]guard, which kept the door of the king's house.

28 And it was so, when the king went into the house of the LORD, that the guard bare them, and brought them back into [n]the guard chamber.

29 ¶ Now the rest of the acts of Rehoboam, and all that he did, [o]are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

CHAP. XV.

Abijam's wicked reign, 1; Asa succeedeth him, 8; he dying, Jehoshaphat succeedeth, 24. Baasha's wicked reign, 33.

NOW [s]in the eighteenth year of king Jeroboam the son of Nebat reigned Abijam over Judah.

2 Three years reigned he in Jerusalem. And [b]his mother's name was [c]Maachah,[1] the daughter of [d]Abishalom.

3 And he walked in [e]all the sins of his father, which he had done before him: [f]and his heart was not perfect with the LORD his God, as the heart of David his father.

4 Nevertheless [g]for David's sake did the LORD his God [h]give him a [*]lamp in Jerusalem, to set up his son after him, [i]and to establish Jerusalem:

5 Because [j]David did that which was right in the [k]eyes of the LORD, and turned not aside[2] from any thing that he commanded him all the days of his life, [k]save only in the matter of Uriah the Hittite.

6 And [l]there was war between Rehoboam and Jeroboam all the days of his life.

7 ¶ Now [m]the rest of the acts of Abijam, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah? And [n]there was war between Abijam and Jeroboam.

8 And [o]Abijam slept with his fathers; and they buried him in the city of David: and [p]Asa his son reigned in his stead.

9 ¶ And in the twentieth year of Jeroboam king of Israel reigned Asa over Judah.

10 And forty and one years reigned he in Jerusalem: and his [†]mother's name was Maachah, the daughter of Abishalom.

11 And [q]Asa did that which was right in the eyes of the LORD, as did David his father.

12 And he took away [r]the sodomites out of the land, and removed [s]all the idols that his father had made.

13 And also [t]Maachah [u]his mother, even her he removed from being queen, because she had made an idol in a grove; and Asa [‡]destroyed her idol,[3] [v]and burnt it by [x]the brook Kidron.

14 But [y]the high places were not removed: nevertheless Asa's heart [z]was perfect with the LORD all his days.

Jeroboam's family, shall die in honour; shall be buried, and shall be lamented, as one that lived desired. Note, Those that are distinguished by divine grace, shall be distinguished by divine providence. This hopeful child dies first of all the family, for God often "takes them soonest whom he loves best;" heaven is the fittest place for them, this earth is not worthy of them. 2. In wrath to the family; it was a sign the family would be ruined, when he was taken by whom it might have been reformed. The righteous are removed from the evil to come in this world, to the good to come in a better world. It is a bad omen to a family when the best in it are buried out of it; when what was valuable is picked out, the rest is for the fire. It is likewise a present affliction to the family and kingdom, by which both ought to have been bettered. It aggravated it to the poor mother, that should not reach home time enough to see her son alive. "When thy feet enter into the city," just then "the child shall die." This was to be a sign to her of the accomplishment of the rest of the threatenings, as 1 Sam. ii. 34.—Henry.

SHISHAK'S INVASION.—Ver. 25—28. It is probable that Shishak was excited by Jeroboam, as well as allured by the prospect of an immense booty, in thus making war against Rehoboam. If (as some learned men suppose) Shishak was the Sesostris of pagan historians, he was a most powerful and formidable conqueror: and Rehoboam, perhaps intimidated by seeing the hand of God so speedily lifted up against him, seems to have tamely surrendered. Thus in less than five years from Solomon's death, the temple was plundered, as well as his royal palaces; and Shishak having seized the booty, appears to have relinquished his conquests in Judah.—Rehoboam replaced the golden shields with others made of brass: and the use which he made of these shows for what purposes those of gold had been designed; and intimates, that he still on some occasions attended the worship of God at his temple.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Parents often suffer and are corrected in the affliction of their children: and on such occasions they should examine their lives, repent of their sins, humble themselves before God, submit to his will, seek help from him, and beg that the affliction may be sanctified for the good of their souls. But sinners are more anxious to know the secret purposes of God, than to understand his revealed will and their own duty: they are often conscious that their forms are not to be depended on: but are afraid that others should perceive their convictions, and despise them. They often secretly reverence the faithful servants of God: and, having found the truth of some of their words, they have an inward persuasion that the rest also will be verified, except as they flatter themselves with hopes of escaping the miseries denounced against them. They form, indeed, very erroneous judgments both of God and of his servants; yet they would be glad of help or information in times of trouble, did they not fear rebukes and warnings. They therefore either keep at a distance, or attempt to impose upon faithful ministers, by disguising their real characters, and pretending kindness to them. Indeed the wisest of men may thus be deceived; but God searcheth every heart, and often unmasks the hypocrite before the world: he more frequently enables his servants to see through their disguises, and to address them in their real, not their assumed, characters; and at last he will expose them to universal shame and contempt before the assembled world.—Scott.

CHAP XV. ABIJAM.—Ver. 1. We have here a short account of the short reign of Abijam the son of Rehoboam, king of Judah. He makes a better figure, 2 Chron. xiii., where we have an account of his war with Jeroboam, the speech he made before the armies engaged, and the wonderful victory he obtained by the help of God. There he is called Abijah, My father is the Lord, because no wickedness is there laid to his charge. But here, where we are told of his faults, Jah, the name of God, is, in disgrace to him, taken away from his name, and he is called Abijam, Jer. xxii. 24. Few particulars are related concerning him. 1. He began his reign in the beginning of Jeroboam's 18th year; for Rehoboam reigned but 17, chap. xiv. 21. Jeroboam indeed survived Rehoboam, but Rehoboam's Abijah lived to succeed him, and to be a terror to Jeroboam, while Jeroboam's Abijah, whom we read of, chap. xiv. 1, died before him. 2. He reigned scarcely three years, for he died before the end of Jeroboam's 20th year, ver. 9. Being made proud and secure by his great victory over Jeroboam, 2 Chron. xiii. 21, God cut him off, to make way for his son Asa, who would be a better man. 3. "His mother's name was Maachah, the daughter of Abishalom," namely, Absalom, David's son, as I am the rather inclined to think, because two other of Rehoboam's wives were his near relations, 2 Chron. xi. 18, one the daughter of Jerimoth, David's son; and another the daughter of Eliab, David's brother. He took warning by his father, not to marry strangers; yet thought it below him to marry his subjects, except they were of the royal family. 4. He carried on his father's wars with Jeroboam. As there was continual war between Rehoboam and Jeroboam, not set battles, (they were forbidden, chap. xii. 24,) but frequent encounters, especially upon the borders; one making incursions and reprisals on the other: so there was war between Abijam and Jeroboam, ver. 7, till Jeroboam, with a great army, invaded him, and then Abijam, not being forbidden to act in his own defence, routed him, and weakened him, that he compelled him to be quiet the rest of his reign, 2 Chron. xiii. 20.

15 And [a]he brought in the [s]things which his father had dedicated, and the things which himself had dedicated, into the house of the LORD, silver, and gold, and vessels.

16 ¶ And [b]there was war between Asa and Baasha king of Israel all their days.

17 And [c]Baasha king of Israel went up against Judah, and built [d]Ramah,[4] that [e]he might not suffer any to go out or come in to Asa king of Judah.

18 Then [f]Asa took all the silver and the gold that were left in the treasures of the house of the LORD, and the treasures of the king's house, and delivered them into the hand of his servants: and king Asa sent them to [g]Ben-hadad, the son of Tabrimon, the son of Hezion, king of Syria, that dwelt at [h]Damascus, saying,

19 There is a [i]league between me and thee, and between my father and thy father: behold, I have sent unto thee a present of silver and gold; come and [k]break[5] thy league with Baasha king of Israel, that he may [l]depart from me.

20 So Ben-hadad hearkened unto king Asa, and sent the captains of the hosts which he had against the cities of Israel, and smote [l]Ijon, and [m]Dan, and [n]Abel-beth-maachah, and all [o]Cinneroth, with all the land of Naphtali.

21 And it came to pass, [p]when Baasha heard thereof, that he left off building of Ramah, and dwelt in [q]Tirzah.

22 Then king Asa [r]made a proclamation throughout all Judah; none was *exempted: and they took away the stones of Ramah, and the timber thereof, wherewith Baasha had builded; and king Asa built with them Geba of Benjamin, and [t]Mizpah.

23 ¶ The [u]rest of all the acts of Asa, and all his might, and all that he did, and the cities which he built, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah? Nevertheless [x]in the time of his old age he was diseased in his feet.[6]

24 And Asa slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David his father: and [y]Jehoshaphat his son reigned in his stead.

25 ¶ And [z]Nadab the son of Jeroboam [†]began to reign over Israel in the second year of Asa king of Judah, and reigned over Israel two years.

26 And [a]he did evil in the sight of the LORD, and [b]walked in the way of his father, and [c]in his sin wherewith he made Israel to sin.

Jehu's prophecy against Baasha, 1. Zimri's conspiracy, 8. Ahab's wicked reign, 29. Joshua's curse fulfilled upon Hiel the builder of Jericho, 34.

THEN the word of the LORD came to [a]Jehu the son of [b]Hanani against Baasha, saying,

2 Forasmuch as [c]I exalted thee out of the dust, and made thee prince[1] over my people Israel; and [d]thou hast walked in the way of Jeroboam, and [e]hast made my people Israel to sin, to provoke me to anger with their sins;

3 Behold, I will take away the posterity of Baasha, and the posterity of his house; and [f]will make thy house like the house of Jeroboam the son of Nebat.

4 Him that dieth of Baasha in the city [g]shall the dogs eat; and him that dieth of his in the field shall the fowls of the air eat.

5 ¶ Now [h]the rest of the acts of Baasha, and what he did, and his might, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

6 So [i]Baasha slept[2] with his fathers, and was buried in Tirzah: and [j]Elah his son reigned in his stead.

7 And also by [k]the hand of the prophet Jehu the son of Hanani came the word of the LORD against Baasha, and against his house, even for all the evil that he did in the

do. For though it was but twenty years after the death of Solomon that he began to reign, yet very gross corruption had spread far, and taken deep root. Immorality he first struck at; "he took away the Sodomites out of the land," suppressed the brothels; for how can either prince or people prosper while those cages of unclean and filthy birds, more dangerous than pest-houses, are suffered to remain? Then he proceeded against idolatry; "he removed all the idols," even those "that his father had made," ver. 12. His father having made them, he was the more concerned to remove them, that he might cut off the entail of the curse, and prevent the visiting of that iniquity upon him and his. Nay, (which redounds much to his honour, and shows his heart was perfect with God,) when he found idolatry in the court, he rooted it out thence, ver. 13. When it appeared Maachah his mother, or rather his grandmother, (but called his mother, because she had the education of him in his childhood,) had an idol in a grove, though she was his mother, his grandmother, though, it is likely, she had a particular fondness for it, though, being old, she could not live long to patronise it, though she kept it for her own use only, yet he would by no means connive at it. Reformation must begin at home. Bad practices will never be suppressed in the country, while they are supported in the court. Asa, in every thing else, will honour and respect his mother; he loves her well, but he loves God better, and, like the Levite, Deut. xxxiii. 9, bravely forgets the relation, when it comes into competition with his duty. If she be an idolater, her idol shall be destroyed, publicly exposed to contempt, defaced, and burnt to ashes "by the brook Kidron," on which, it is probable, he strewed the ashes, in imitation of Moses, Exod. xxxii. 20, and in token of his detestation of idolatry, and his indignation at it, wherever he found it. Let no remains of a court-idol appear. 2. She shall be deposed; he removed her from being queen, or from the queen, that is, from conversing with his wife; he banished her the court, and confined her to an obscure and private life. They that have power are happy, when thus they have hearts to use it well.

Ahijah. His son Nadab succeeded him. If the death of his brother Abijah had had a due influence upon him, to make him religious, and the honour done him at his death had engaged him to follow his good example, his reign might have been long and glorious; but he "walked in the way of his father," ver. 26, kept up the worship of his calves, and forbade his subjects to go up to Jerusalem to worship; "sinned, and made Israel to sin;" and therefore God brought ruin upon him quickly, in the second year of his reign. He was besieging Gibbethon, a city which the Philistines had taken from the Danites, and was endeavouring to retake it; and there, in the midst of his army, did Baasha, with others, conspire against him, and kill him, ver. 27, and so little interest had he in the affections of his people, that his army did not only not avenge his death, but chose his murderer for his successor. Whether Baasha did it upon a personal pique against Nadab, or to be avenged on the house of Jeroboam, for some affront received from them; or whether, under pretence of freeing his country from the tyranny of a bad prince; or whether, merely from a principle of ambition, or to make way for himself to the throne, does not appear; but he "slew him," and "reigned in his stead," ver. 28. And the first thing he did, when he came to the crown, was to "cut off all the house of Jeroboam," that he might the better secure himself, and his own usurped government. He thought it not enough to imprison or banish them, but he destroyed them, left not only no males, as was foretold, chap. xiv. 10, but none that breathed. Herein he was barbarous, but God was righteous. Jeroboam's sin was punished, ver. 30, for they that provoke God, do it "to their own confusion;" see Jer. vii. 19. Ahijah's prophecy was accomplished, ver. 29, for no word of God shall fall to the ground. Divine threatenings are not designed merely to terrify.—Henry.

CHAP. XVI. BAASHA.—Ver. 2—7. The conduct of Baasha, in conspiring against Nadab, and murdering him and Jeroboam's family, was highly criminal. But the success of his conspiracy, and his advancement from a very low condition, to the throne of Israel, were from the Lord; whose benefits aggravated the guilt of his subsequent idolatry. God acknowledged Israel as his people, notwithstanding their apostacy: because they professed themselves his worshippers; because there were many believers in the land; and because he intended to [illegible] among them, and not utterly to cast them off. This also was [illegible] prince over the [illegible] made sight of the LORD, in provoking him to anger [l]with the work of his hands, in being like the house of Jeroboam; and [m]because he killed him.[8]

8 ¶ In the twenty and sixth year of Asa king of Judah began Elah the son of Baasha to reign over Israel in Tirzah, two years.

9 And his servant Zimri, captain of half his chariots, [n]conspired against him, as he was in Tirzah, [o]drinking himself drunk in the house of Arza, [p]steward of his house in Tirzah.

10 And [q]Zimri went in and smote him, and killed him, in the twenty and seventh year of Asa king of Judah, and [r]reigned in his stead.

11 ¶ And it came to pass, when he began to reign, as soon as he sat on his throne, that [s]he slew all the house of Baasha: [t]he left him not one that pisseth against a wall, [u]neither of his kinsfolks nor of his friends.

12 Thus did Zimri destroy all the house[4] of Baasha, [v]according to the word of the LORD, which he spake against Baasha [x]by Jehu the prophet, 13 For all the sins of Baasha, and the sins of Elah his son, by which they sinned, and by which they made Israel to sin, in provoking the LORD God of Israel to anger with their [y]vanities.

14 Now the rest of the acts of Elah, and all that he did, are [z]they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

15 ¶ In the twenty and seventh year of Asa king of Judah did Zimri reign [a]seven days in Tirzah. And the people were [b]encamped against Gibbethon, which belonged to the Philistines.

16 And the people that were encamped heard say, Zimri hath conspired, and hath also slain the king: wherefore all Israel made [c]Omri, the captain of the host, king over Israel that day in the camp.

17 And Omri went up from Gibbethon, and all Israel with him, and they [d]besieged Tirzah.

18 And it came to pass, when Zimri saw that the city was taken, that he went into the palace of the king's house, and [e]burnt the king's house over him with fire, and died,

19 For his sins which he sinned [f]in doing evil in the sight of the LORD, in walking in the way of Jeroboam, and [g]in his sin[5] which he did, to make Israel to sin.

20 Now [h]the rest of the acts of Zimri, and his treason that he wrought, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

He soon, however, found those judgments to be true.—PATRICK.

followed Tibni the son of Ginath, to make him king; and half followed Omri.

22 But the people that followed Omri prevailed against the people that followed Tibni the son of Ginath: so Tibni died, and Omri reigned.

23 ¶ In the thirty and first year[6] [d]of Asa king of Judah, began Omri to reign over Israel, [e]twelve years: six years reigned he in Tirzah.

30 And Ahab the son of Omri did evil in the sight of the LORD [p]above all that were before him.

31 And it came to pass, [t]as if it had been [p]a light thing for him to walk in the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, that he [q]took to wife [r]Jezebel the daughter of Ethbaal king of [s]the Zidonians, [t]and went and [u]served Baal, and worshipped him.

32 And he reared up an altar for Baal in [x]the house of Baal, which he had built in Samaria.

33 And Ahab [y]made a grove; and Ahab [z]did more to provoke the LORD God of Israel to anger, than all the kings of Israel that were before him.

34 ¶ In his days did Hiel[8] the Beth-elite build Jericho: he laid the foundation thereof in Abiram his first-born, and set up the gates thereof in his youngest son Segub, according to the word of the LORD, which he spake by Joshua the son of Nun.

then raised, upon that disaster, and the city remaining still in the Philistines' hands, the army of Israel was now renewing the attempt, ver. 15, and Elah should have been with them, to command in chief, but he loved his own ease and safety better than his honour or duty, or the public good, and therefore staid behind to take his pleasure; and, when he was "drinking himself drunk in his servant's house," Zimri killed him, ver. 9, 10. Let it be a warning to drunkards, especially to those who designedly drink themselves drunk, that they know not but death may surprise them in that condition. 1. Death comes easily upon men when they are drunk; beside the chronical diseases which men frequently bring themselves into by hard drinking, and which cut them off in the midst of their days, men, in that condition, are more easily overcome by an enemy, as Amnon by Absalom, and are liable to more bad accidents, being unable to help themselves. 2. Death comes terribly upon men in that condition, finding them in the act of sin, and incapacitated for any act of devotion; that day "comes upon them at unawares," Luke xxi. 34, like a thief.

ZIMRI.—Zimri is said to have reigned seven days, ver. 15, so long before Omri was proclaimed king, and himself proclaimed traitor; but we may suppose it a longer time before he died, for he continued long enough to show his inclination to the way of Jeroboam, and to make himself obnoxious to the justice of God, by supporting his idolatry, ver. 19. Tirzah was a beautiful city, but not fortified, so that Omri soon made himself master of it, ver. 17, forced Zimri into the palace, which being unable to defend, and yet unwilling to surrender, he burnt, and himself in it, ver. 18. Unwilling that his rival should ever enjoy that sumptuous palace, he burnt it; and fearing, that if he fell into the hands of the army, either alive or dead, he should be ignominiously treated, he burnt himself in it. See what desperate practices men's wickedness sometimes brings them to, and how it hurries them into their own ruin; see the disposition of incendiaries, who set palaces and kingdoms on fire, though they are themselves in danger of perishing in the flame.

OMRI.—Omri made himself famous by building Samaria, (which ever after was the royal city of the kings of Israel,) the palace at Tirzah being burnt, (and, in process of time, grew so considerable, that it gave name to the middle part of Canaan, which lay between Galilee on the north and Judea on the south,) and to the inhabitants of that country, who were called Samaritans. He bought the ground for "two talents of silver," somewhat more than £700 of our money, for a talent was £353 11s. 10½d. perhaps Shemer, who sold him the ground, let him have it considerably the cheaper, upon condition that the city should be called after his name, which, otherwise, would have borne the name of the purchaser; it was called Samaria, or Shemeren, as it is in the Hebrew, from Shemer, the former owner, ver. 24. The kings of Israel changed their royal seats; Shechem first, then Tirzah, now Samaria; but the kings of Judah were constant to Jerusalem, the city of God: they that cleave to the Lord, fix; they that leave him, ever wander. He made himself infamous by his wickedness, for "he did worse than all that were before him," ver. 25. Though he was brought to the throne with much difficulty, and Providence had remarkably favoured him in his advancement, yet he was more profane, or more superstitious, and a greater persecutor, than either of the houses of Jeroboam or Baasha; he went further than they had done, in "establishing iniquity by a law," and forcing his subjects to comply with him in it; for we read of the statutes of Omri, the keeping of which made "Israel a desolation," Mic. vi. 16. Jeroboam made Israel to sin, by temptation, example, and allurement; but Omri did it by compulsion. How he ended his reign, ver. 27, 28. He was in some repute for the might which he showed; many a bad man has been a stout man. He died in his bed, as Jeroboam and Baasha did themselves; but, like them, left it to his posterity to fill up the measure, and then pay off the scores of his iniquity.

REBUILDING OF JERICHO.—One of Ahab's subjects, in imitation of his presumption, ventured to build Jericho, in defiance of the curse Joshua had long since pronounced on him that should attempt it, ver. 34. It comes in as an instance of the height of impiety men were then arrived at, especially at Bethel, where one of the calves was, for of that city this daring sinner was. Observe, 1. How ill he did; like Achan, he meddled with the accursed thing, turning that to his own use which was devoted to God's honour: he began to build, in defiance of the curse well known in Israel, jesting with it, perhaps, as a bugbear, or fancying it was worn out by length of time, for it was above 500 years since it was pronounced, Josh. vi. 26. He went on to build, in defiance of the execution of the curse in part; for, though his eldest son died when he began, yet he would proceed, in contempt of God and his wrath, revealed from heaven, against his ungodliness. 2. How ill he sped; he built for his children, but God wrote him childless; his eldest son died when he began, the youngest when he finished, and all the rest, (it is supposed,) between. Note, Those whom God curses, are cursed indeed; none ever hardened his heart against God, and prospered. God keep us back from presumptuous sins, those great transgressions!—Henry.

CHAP. XVII. ELIJAH.—Ver. 1. This most illustrious prophet, Elijah, was raised up in the reign of the most wicked among the kings of Israel; and he is brought to our notice in a very abrupt manner. Nothing is recorded either of his parentage, education, or previous manner of life. He is called "the Tishbite;" but it was not agreed whether

AND *Elijah the Tishbite, who was of the inhabitants of Gilead, said unto Ahab, [a]As the LORD God of Israel liveth, [b]before whom I stand, there shall not be [c]dew nor rain these years, but according to my word.

2 And [d]the word of the LORD came unto him, saying,

3 Get thee hence, and turn thee eastward, and *[e]hide thyself by the brook Cherith,[1] that is before Jordan.

4 And it shall be, that thou shalt drink of the brook; and [f]I have commanded the ravens to feed thee there.

5 So he went and [g]did according unto the word of the LORD: for he went and dwelt by the brook Cherith, that is before Jordan.

6 And [h]the ravens brought him bread and flesh in the morning, and bread and flesh in the evening; and he drank of the brook.

7 And it came to pass [†]after a while, that [i]the brook dried up, because there had been no rain in the land.

8 ¶ And [k]the word of the LORD came unto him, saying,

9 Arise, get thee to [l]Zarephath,[2] [m]which belongeth to Zidon, and dwell there: behold, I have commanded a [n]widow woman there to sustain thee.

10 So he arose, and went to Zarephath. And when he came to the gate of the city, behold, the widow woman was there gathering of sticks: and he called to her, and said, *[o]Fetch me, I pray thee, a little water in a vessel, that I may drink.

11 And [p]as she was going to fetch it, he called to her, and said, Bring me, I pray thee, [q]a morsel of bread in thine hand.

12 And she said, [r]As the LORD thy God liveth, I have not a cake, [s]but an handful of meal in a barrel,[3] and a little oil in a cruse: and, behold, I am gathering two sticks,[4] that I may go in and dress it for me and my son, [t]that we may eat it, and die.

13 And Elijah said unto her, [u]Fear not; go and do as thou hast said: but [v]make me thereof a little cake [x]first, and bring it unto me, and after make for thee and for thy son.

14 For [y]thus saith the LORD God of Israel, [z]The barrel of meal shall not waste, neither shall the cruse of oil fail, until the day that the LORD [‡]sendeth rain upon the earth.

15 And she went and [a]did according to the saying of Elijah: and she, and he, and her house, did eat [§]many days.

16 And [b]the barrel of meal wasted not, neither did the cruse of oil fail, [c]according to the word of the LORD which he spake [‖]by Elijah.

17 ¶ And it came to pass after these things, that [d]the son of the woman, the mistress of the house, fell sick; and his sickness was so sore, [e]that there was no breath left in him.

18 And she said unto Elijah, [f]What have I to do with thee, [g]O thou man of God? [h]art thou come unto me to call my sin to remembrance, and to slay my son?

19 And he said unto her, Give me thy son. And he took him out of her bosom, and carried him up [i]into a loft,[5] where he abode, and laid him upon his own bed.

20 And [j]he cried unto the LORD, and said, O LORD my God, [k]hast thou also brought evil upon the widow with whom I sojourn, by slaying her son?

21 And [l]he *stretched himself upon the child three times, and cried unto the LORD, and said, [m]O LORD my God, I pray thee, let this child's soul come [†]into him again.

22 And the LORD heard the voice of Elijah; and the soul of the child came into him again, [n]and he revived.

23 And Elijah took the child, and brought him down out of the chamber into the house, and delivered him unto his mother: and Elijah said, [o]See, thy son liveth.

24 And the woman said to Elijah, [p]Now by this I know that thou art a man of God, and that [q]the word of the LORD in thy mouth is truth.

Elijah meeteth with good Obadiah, 1; he reproveth Ahab, and convinceth Baal's prophets, 17; he obtaineth rain, 41.

AND it came to pass [a]after many days, that the word of the LORD came to Elijah in [b]the third year, saying, [c]Go, shew thyself unto Ahab; and [d]I will send rain upon the earth.

2 And Elijah [e]went to shew himself unto Ahab. And there was [f]a sore famine in Samaria.[1]

3 ¶ And Ahab called *Obadiah, which was [†]the governor of his house. (Now Obadiah [g]feared the LORD greatly:

4 For it was so, when [‡]Jezebel [h]cut off the prophets of the LORD, that Obadiah took an hundred prophets, and hid them by fifty [i]in a cave, and [k]fed them with [l]bread and water.)

5 And Ahab said unto Obadiah,[2] Go into the land, unto all fountains of water, and unto all brooks: peradventure we may find [m]grass to save the horses and mules alive, that [§]we lose not all the beasts.

6 So they divided the land between them to pass throughout it: [n]Ahab went one way by himself, and Obadiah went another way by himself.

this title was taken from the place where he lived, or given him because he was the reformer of Israel; for the word signifies a converter. He was of the inhabitants of Gilead, beyond Jordan, but we know not of which tribe. His name signifies, The LORD my God is He. This might imply that JEHOVAH, the true God, would stand by him in the perilous services in which he was called, in opposing the worship of false gods.—It may be supposed that Elijah had previously warned Ahab to forsake his idolatry, and that he had treated his message with contempt: at length, therefore, he declared, and confirmed it with a solemn oath by the LORD God of Israel, before whom he stood, (as his servant acting by his authority,) that there should be neither rain nor dew for years, but according to his word; that is, until he came again and foretold its coming, and prayed for it. The expression, "As the LORD God of Israel liveth," intimated that the idols of the heathen were lifeless stocks, and could not help their worshippers.—The duration of this drought was three years and a-half; and the effects must have been inexpressibly calamitous. One whole year, without rain or dew, would afflict this land more terribly than it can be conceived: but in much less than three years and a-half, nearly all the cattle must be destroyed, and most of the inhabitants would be either dead, or migrated into other countries. Yet the bulk of Israel continued mad upon their idols, throughout this most tremendous calamity! It was sent in answer to the prophet's prayer, which probably he offered in Ahab's hearing; and the judgment was intended to be a demonstration that Baal could not defend his worshippers against the indignation of JEHOVAH. The glory of God and the interests of true religion were therefore so greatly concerned in this decision, which was needful in order to prevent the utter apostacy and rejection of Israel, that the prophet might present this petition in wise zeal, and true benevolence; and doubtless he was immediately instructed by the Lord to do so. The benefit of the calamity would abundantly outweigh the miseries: for, though many were hardened, yet, doubtless, numbers were eventually brought to repentance, and made to embrace and continue steadfast in the service of the true God.

WIDOW OF ZAREPHATH AND HER CHILD.—Ver. 17. Perhaps her child died suddenly, before the prophet had time to pray for his recovery; because the Lord intended a greater display of his own glory, and a more distinguishing favour to the woman, than the sparing of his life: or, he was left to die without any miraculous interposition, to try her faith. Ver. 18. This woman had heard that the drought had come upon Israel in answer to Elijah's prayer: and perhaps she supposed that her affliction had come upon her in the same way. She seems to have venerated his sanctity, and to have had a trembling consciousness of her own sinfulness. Perhaps the death of her son brought her former worship of Baal to remembrance; or she thought she was not worthy of the company of the prophet, or had not duly profited by it. But her mind was much agitated; and her words imply a mixture of unbelief and impatience, as well as self-abasement and a sense of guilt. And she seems to have thought the presence of the man of God was dangerous to such a sinner, and hastened divine judgments upon her. Yet, by her own account, the prophet's presence had prolonged her son's life, and her own also, ver. 12. Ver. 20. Elijah himself could not understand the mystery of this dispensation; but wondered that the Lord should bring evil on the woman, who entertained him for his sake, as well as on those who rejected both God and his prophet. Ver. 21, 22. These actions of Elijah denoted the earnestness of his desires, and the greatness of his expectations, of the child's restoration to life. He would, if possible, have communicated of his own life to him, or have concurred, if any thing had been in his power, to his revival.—The expression, "Let the child's soul come into him again," not only intimates the prophet's certainty that he was really dead, but it marks the distinction betwixt the rational soul and the earthly body, to be as real as that betwixt the house and its inhabitants; for both the prophet and the historian, "speaking as they were moved by the Holy Ghost," used proper language. No one had yet, as far as we know, been raised from the dead; and perhaps no prayer to this effect had ever before been offered. Elijah's petition was no doubt directed by immediate inspiration. Ver. 24. The woman had been strongly tempted to unbelief; but she had now got the victory, and was more confirmed and assured in faith and hope than ever. She had doubted, but now she knew, that Elijah was the servant of God, and she fully expected the performance of all his declarations.—Scott.

CHAP. XVIII. OBADIAH.—Ver. 3. 1. It was strange that so wicked a man as Ahab would prefer him to office, and continue him in it; certainly it was because he was a man of celebrated honesty, industry, and ingenuity, and one whom he could repose a confidence in, whose eyes he could trust as much as his own, as appears here, ver. 5. Joseph and Daniel were preferred, because there were none so fit as they for the places they were preferred to. Note, Those who profess religion should study to recommend themselves to the esteem even of those that are without, by their integrity, fidelity, and application to business. 2. It was strange that so good a man as Obadiah would accept of preferment in a court so addicted to idolatry, and all manner of wickedness. We may be sure, it was not made necessary, to qualify him for preferment, that he should be of the king's religion, that he should conform to the "statutes of Omri, or the law of the house of Ahab." Obadiah would not have accepted the place, if he could not have had it without bowing the knee to Baal, nor was Ahab so impolitic as to exclude those from the other bullock, and lay it on wood, and put no fire under.

24 And call ye on the name of your gods, and I will call on the name of the LORD: and the God that [u]answereth by fire, let him be God. And all the people answered [6]and said, [*]It is well spoken.

25 ¶ And Elijah said unto the prophets of Baal, Choose you one bullock for yourselves, and dress it first; for ye are many; and call on the name of your gods, but put no fire under.

26 And they took the bullock which was given them, and they dressed it, and called on the name of Baal [x]from morning even until noon, saying, O Baal, [†]hear us. But there was [y]no voice, nor any that [‡]answered. And they [§]leaped upon the altar[7] which was made.

27 And it came to pass at noon, that [z]Elijah mocked them,[8] and said, Cry [‖]aloud: for he is a god; either [*]he is talking, or he [†]is pursuing, or he is in a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth, and [a]must be awaked.

28 And they cried aloud, and [b]cut themselves after their manner with knives and lancets, till [‡]the blood gushed out upon them.[9]

29 And it came to pass, when midday was past, and they [c]prophesied until the time of the [§]offering of the evening sacrifice, that there was [d]neither voice, nor any to answer, nor any [‖]that regarded.

30 ¶ And Elijah said unto all the people, Come near unto me. And all the people came near unto him. And [e]he repaired the altar of the LORD that was broken down.

31 And Elijah took [f]twelve stones, according to the number of the tribes of the sons of Jacob, unto whom the word of the LORD came, [g]saying, Israel shall be thy name:

32 And [h]with the stones he built an altar [i]in the name of the LORD: and he made a trench about the altar, as great as would contain two measures of seed.

33 And [j]he put the wood in order, and cut the bullock in pieces, and laid him on the wood, and said, [k]Fill four barrels with water, and pour it on the burnt-sacrifice,[10] and on the wood.

34 And he said, [l]Do it the second time. And they did it the second time. And he said, Do it the third time. And they did it the third time.

35 And the water [*]ran round about the altar; and he filled [m]the trench also with water.

36 And it came to pass [n]at the time of the offering of the evening sacrifice, that Elijah the prophet came near, and said, [o]LORD God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel, [p]let it be known this day that thou art offices, that were fit to serve him, merely because they would not join with him in his devotions; that man that is true to his God will be faithful to his prince. Obadiah therefore could, with a good conscience, enjoy the place, and therefore would not decline it, or give it up, though he foresaw he could not do the good he desired to do in it; they that fear God need not go out of the world, bad as it is. 3. It was strange that either he did not reform Ahab, or Ahab corrupt him: but, it seems, they were both fixed; he that was filthy would be filthy still, and he that was holy would be holy still. Those that fear God greatly will keep up the fear of him in bad times and places; thus Obadiah did. God has his remnant among all sorts, high and low; there were saints in Nero's household and in Ahab's. This great good man used his power for the protection of God's prophets; he hid 100 of them in two caves, when the persecution was hot, and "fed them with bread and water," ver. 4. He did not think it enough to fear God himself, but, having wealth and power wherewithal to do it, he thought himself obliged to assist and countenance others that feared God; nor did he think his being kind to them would excuse him from being good himself, but he did both, he both feared God greatly himself, and patronised those that feared him likewise. See how wonderfully God raises up friends for his ministers and people, for their shelter in difficult times, there where one should least expect them; bread and water were now scarce commodities, yet Obadiah will find a competency of both for God's prophets, to keep them alive for service hereafter, though now they were laid aside.

THE TRIAL.—Elijah proposes to bring the matter to a fair trial; and it was so much the fairer, because Baal had all the external advantages on his side. The king and court were all for Baal; so was the body of the people. The managers of Baal's cause were 450 men, fat and well fed, ver. 22, beside 400 more, their supporters or seconds, ver. 19. The manager of God's cause was but one man, lately a poor exile, hardly kept from starving; so that God's cause has nothing to support it but its own right. However, it is put to this experiment; "Let each side prepare a sacrifice, and pray to its God, and 'the God that answereth by fire, let him be God:' if neither do, let them turn atheists; if both, let them continue to 'halt between two.'" Elijah, doubtless, had a special commission from God to put it to this test, else he had tempted God and affronted religion; but the case was extraordinary, and the judgment upon it would be of use, not only then, but in all ages. It is an instance of the courage of Elijah, that he durst stand alone in the cause of God against such powers and numbers; and the issue encourages all God's witnesses and advocates never to fear the face of man. Elijah does not say, "The God that answers by water," (though that was the thing the country needed,) but "that 'answers by fire, let him be God;'" because the atonement was to be made by sacrifice, before the judgment could be removed in mercy. The God therefore that has power to pardon sin, and to signify it by consuming the sin-offering, must needs be the God that can relieve us against the calamity.

BAAL'S PROPHETS.—Ver. 27. How importunate and noisy the prophets of Baal were in their applications to him. They got their sacrifices ready; and we may well imagine what a noise 450 men made, when they cried as one man, and with all their might, "O Baal, hear us; O Baal, answer us;" as it is in the margin: and this for some hours together, longer than Diana's worshippers made their cry, "Great is Diana of the Ephesians," Acts xix. 34. How senseless, how brutish, were they in their addresses to Baal! 1. Like fools, "they leaped upon the altar," as if they would themselves become sacrifices with their bullock: or, thus they expressed their great earnestness of mind. "They leaped up and down," or danced about the altar: they hoped by their dancing to please their deity, as Herodias did Herod, and so to obtain their request. 2. Like madmen, they "cut themselves in pieces with knives and lancets," ver. 20, for vexation that they were not answered, or in a sort of prophetic fury, hoping to obtain the favour of their god, by offering to him their own blood, when they could not do it with the blood of their bullock. God never required his worshippers thus to honour him; but the service of the Devil, though, in some instances, it pleases and pampers the body, yet, in other things, it is really cruel to it, as in envy and drunkenness. It seems this was the manner of the worshippers of Baal: God expressly forbade his worshippers to cut themselves, Deut. xiv. 1. He insists upon it that we mortify our lusts and corruptions; but corporeal penances and severities, such as the papists use, which have no tendency to that, are no pleasure to him: "Who has required these things at your hands?"

ELIJAH'S VICTORY.—God immediately answered by fire, ver. 38. Elijah's God was neither talking nor pursuing, needed not to be either awakened or quickened; while he was yet speaking, "the fire of the Lord fell," and not only, as at other times, (Lev. ix. 24; 1 Chron. xxi. 6; 2 Chron. vii. 1,) "consumed the sacrifices and the wood," in token of God's acceptance of the offering, but "licked up all the water in the trench," exhaling that, and drawing it up as a vapour, in order to the intended rain, which was to be the fruit of this sacrifice and prayer, more than of natural causes. Compare Ps. cxxxv. 7. "He causeth vapours to ascend, and maketh lightnings for the rain;" for this rain he did both. Those who fall as victims to the fire of God's wrath, no water can shelter from it, any more than briers or thorns, Isa. xxvii. 4, 5. But this was not all; to complete the miracle, the fire consumed the "stones of the altar, and" the very "dust," to show that it was no ordinary fire, and perhaps to intimate, that though God accepted this occasional sacrifice from this altar, yet, for the future, they ought to demolish all the altars on

6 And he looked, and, behold, there [n]was a cake baken on the coals,[3] and a cruse of water at his †head. And he did eat and drink, and laid him down again.

8 And he arose, and did eat and drink, and went [q]in the strength of that meat [r]forty days and forty nights, unto [s]Horeb the mount of God.

9 ¶ And he came thither [t]unto a cave, and lodged there; and, behold, the word of the LORD came to him, and he said unto him, [u]What doest thou here, Elijah?

10 And he said, I have been [x]very jealous for the LORD God of hosts: for the children of Israel have forsaken thy covenant, [y]thrown down thine altars, and slain thy prophets with the sword; and I, even [z]I only, am left; and [a]they seek my life, to take it away.

their high places, and, for their constant sacrifices, make use of that at Jerusalem only. Moses's altar and Solomon's were consecrated by the fire from heaven; but this was destroyed, because no more to be used. We may well imagine what a terror the fire struck on guilty Ahab, and all the worshippers of Baal, and how they fled from it as far and as fast as they could, saying, "Lest it consume us also," alluding to Num. xvi. 34. —Henry.

THE RAIN.—Ver. 43—45. As Elijah had no servant before he went to Zarephath, some have thought that the widow's son whom he had raised to life had accompanied him. But it appears from the narrative that he was not old enough; and it is more likely, that a young person from the schools of the prophets attended Elijah on this occasion.—The prophet spake as one assured that his prayer would immediately be answered; and like Jacob of old, he seemed determined not to let the Lord go until he had blessed him. The servant was therefore ordered to go seven times: and he saw no appearance till the last, when a very small cloud arose, which the prophet knew to be the forerunner of the desired blessing; and he sent word to Ahab accordingly.—We may be sure that the rain was equal to the necessities of the land; and it formed another demonstration that JEHOVAH was the only true God.—Scott.

CHAP. XIX. JEZEBEL'S ANGER.—1. Jezebel sent Elijah a threatening message, ver. 2, that she had vowed and sworn to be the death of him within 24 hours. Something prevented her from doing it just now, but she resolves it shall not be long undone. Note, Carnal hearts are hardened and enraged against God by that which should convince and conquer them, and bring them into subjection to him. She swears by her gods, and, raging like one distracted, cursed herself, if she slay not him, without any proviso of a divine permission. Cruelty and confidence often meet in persecutors: "I will pursue, I will overtake," Exod. xv. 9. But, how came she to send him word of her design, and so to give him an opportunity of making his escape? Did she think him so daring, that he would not flee? or, was there a special Providence in it, that she should be thus infatuated by her own fury? I am apt to think that, though she desired nothing more than his blood, yet at this time she durst not meddle with him, "for fear of the people, all counting him a prophet," a great prophet, and therefore sent this message to him, merely to frighten him, and get him out of the way for the present, that he might not carry on what he had begun. The backing of her threats with an oath and imprecation does not at all prove that she really intended it, but only intended to make him believe it. The gods she swore by could do her no harm. 2. Elijah hereupon, in a great fright, fled for his life, it is likely by night, and came to Beer-sheba, ver. 3. Shall we praise him for this? We praise him not. Where was the courage with which he had lately confronted Ahab, and all the prophets of Baal? nay, which kept him by his sacrifice, when the fire of God fell upon it? He that stood undaunted in the midst of the terrors both of heaven and earth, trembles at the impotent menaces of a proud passionate woman. "Lord, what is man?" Great faith is not always alike strong.—Henry.

ELIJAH AT HOREB.—Ver. 11—14. There seems to have been, in this manifestation of God to Elijah, an intended reference to that with which Moses was favoured, when the Lord caused his goodness to pass before him; and to the terrific solemnities from Mount Sinai, (where Elijah now was,) compared with the mild majesty in which he communed with Israel from above the mercy-seat. It was preceded by a vehement wind, rending the mountains and rocks; by an earthquake still more tremendous, and by a fire, similar perhaps to that which appeared on Mount Sinai at the delivery of the law: all these effects were no doubt produced by the ministration of angels. But the Lord made known his more immediate presence, not by these terrors, but by a still small voice; and it is not said that there was any visible appearance of glory. This intimated that miraculous judgments, and terrifying displays of the Lord's power and indignation, though proper for the destruction or intimidation of his enemies, or to excite attention, were only preparatives for that real good intended for Israel; which must be effected by the energy of his Spirit accompanying the convincing and persuasive instructions of his word. Elijah had perhaps expected to carry all before him with a high hand, and with continued miracles and judgments; or he had supposed that the desired reformation was to be effected by the sanction of civil authority, or the support of the people at large. Whereas, having gained their attention by the famine, and its gracious removal in answer to his prayers, by calling for, and obtaining fire from heaven to consume the sacrifice, and by the execution of Baal's priests, and by rain in answer to his prayers; he ought to have proceeded to instruct them with meekness and gentleness, "publicly and from house to house," and to have excited others to assist him: and then the Lord would have blessed that still small voice, for the most important purposes; notwithstanding the persecuting rage of Ahab and Jezebel, and the general apostacy of the people. Thus miracles in the first ages of Christianity called men's attention to the preaching of the gospel, which, as a still voice, was the power of God to salvation to thousands and millions.

SELECTION OF ELISHA.—Ver. 19. This might occur after Elijah's return from the wilderness of Damascus, or in his journey thither.—Elisha was employed in husbandry, and his father seems to have been a man of wealth. Whilst he was employed in his labour, Elijah cast his mantle upon him, which was intended, and understood, as a call to him thou anoint to be king over Israel: and [q]Elisha the son of Shaphat of [r]Abel-meholah shalt thou anoint to be prophet in thy room.

17 And it shall come to pass, that [s]him that escapeth [t]the sword[6] of Hazael shall Jehu slay: and him that escapeth from [u]the sword of Jehu, shall [x]Elisha slay.

18 [y]Yet [‡]I have left me seven thousand in Israel, all [z]the knees which have not bowed unto Baal, and [a]every mouth which hath not kissed him.[7]

19 ¶ So he departed thence, and found [b]Elisha the son of Shaphat, who was ploughing with twelve yoke of oxen before him, and [c]he with the twelfth: and Elijah passed by him, and cast [d]his mantle upon him.

20 And [e]he left the oxen, and ran after Elijah, and said, [f]Let me, I pray thee, kiss my father and my mother, and then I will follow thee. And he said unto him, [‡]Go back again: for what have I done to thee?

21 And he returned back from him, and took a yoke of oxen, and slew them, and [g]boiled their flesh with the instruments of the oxen, and [h]gave unto the people, and they did eat. Then he arose, and went after Elijah, and [i]ministered unto him.

Ben-hadad besieged Samaria, 1. The Syrians are slain, 13. Ahab dismisseth Ben-hadad, 31; a prophet reproveth him, 35.

AND [*]Ben-hadad the king of Syria gathered all his host together: and there were [b]thirty and two kings with him, [c]and horses, and chariots: and he went up and [d]besieged Samaria, and warred against it.

2 And [e]he sent messengers to Ahab king of Israel into the city, and said unto him, Thus saith Ben-hadad,

3 Thy [f]silver[1] and thy gold is mine; thy wives also and thy children, even the goodliest, are mine.

4 And the king of Israel answered and said, My lord, O king, according to thy saying, [g]I am thine, and all that I have.

5 And the messengers came again, and said, Thus speaketh Ben-hadad, saying, Although I have sent unto thee, saying, Thou shalt deliver me thy silver, and thy gold, and thy wives, and thy children;

6 Yet I will send my servants unto thee to-morrow about this time, [h]and they shall search thine house, and the houses of thy servants; and it shall be, that whatsoever is [*]pleasant in thine eyes, they shall put it in their hand, and take it away.

7 Then the king of Israel called [i]all the elders of the land, and said, [j]Mark, I pray you, and see how this man [k]seeketh mischief: for he sent unto me for my wives, and for my children, and for my silver, and for my gold; and I [†]denied him not.

8 And all the elders and all the people said unto him, Hearken not unto him, nor consent.

9 Wherefore he said unto the messengers of Ben-hadad, Tell my lord the king, All that thou didst send for to thy servant at the first, I will do: but this thing I may not do. And the messengers departed, and brought him word again.

10 And Ben-hadad sent unto him, and said, [l]The gods do so unto me, and more also, [m]if the dust of Samaria shall suffice for handfuls for all the people that [‡]follow me.

11 And the king of Israel answered and said, Tell him, [n]Let not him that girdeth[2] on his harness boast himself as he that putteth it off.

12 And it came to pass, when Ben-hadad heard this [§]message, as he was [o]drinking, he and the kings in the [‖]pavilions, that he said unto his servants, [*]Set yourselves in array. And they set themselves in array against the city.

13 ¶ And, behold, there [†]came a prophet unto Ahab king of Israel, saying, Thus saith the LORD, [p]Hast thou seen all this great multitude? behold, I will deliver it into thine hand this day; [q]and thou shalt know that I am the LORD.

14 And Ahab said, By whom? And he said, Thus saith the LORD, Even by [‡]the young men of the princes of the provinces. Then he said, Who shall [§]order the battle? And he answered, Thou.

15 Then he numbered the young men of the princes of the provinces, and they were [r]two hundred and thirty-two: and after them he numbered all the people, even all the children of Israel,[3] being [s]seven thousand.

16 And they went out at noon. But [t]Ben-hadad was drinking himself drunk in the pavilions, he and the kings, the thirty and two kings that helped him.

17 And [u]the young men of the princes of the provinces went out first: and Ben-hadad sent out, and they told him, saying, There are men come out of Samaria.

18 And he said, [v]Whether they be come out for peace, take them alive; or whether they be come out for war, take them alive.

19 So these young men of the princes of the provinces came out of the city, and the army which followed them.

20 And [x]they slew every one his man: [4] and [y]the Syrians fled; and Israel pursued them: and Ben-hadad the king of Syria [z]escaped on an horse, with the horsemen.

21 And the king of Israel [a]went out, to follow and attend upon him. Ver. 20, 21. It is probable that Elijah intended to discover whether Elisha was decided to renounce his temporal interests, and to venture persecution as a prophet of the Lord; and to lead him to count his cost ere he engaged. But Elisha's heart was touched by the Holy Spirit, and he was ready to leave all to attend Elijah. He did not ask to wait till the death of his parents, but only to bid them farewell: and, having made a feast for his neighbours of the flesh of the oxen, prepared with their yokes as the fuel, (in token that he never meant to return again to that employment,) he followed Elijah, and ministered to him, that under his tuition he might be prepared to succeed him, and in the meantime be a help and comfort to him. The prophet could now no longer complain that he was left alone, for the Lord had provided him a companion.—From the ensuing history it appears, that Elijah and Elisha employed themselves, not only in privately instructing the people, but also in founding or superintending seminaries of prophets in different parts of the land, who might assist them in the work of reformation, and maintain it when they were removed.—Scott.

CHAP. XX. BEN-HADAD'S INSOLENCE.—Ver. 2—11. Ben-hadad's first message was couched in insulting language. He not only considered Ahab's riches as already his property, but his wives and children, even the goodliest of them, as his slaves. Yet Ahab understood this only as a claim to dominion over him and his property or kingdom, and in abject terms he consented to be his vassal, and to do him homage, and pay him tribute. Ben-hadad, therefore, (perhaps perceiving his terror and pusillanimity,) grew more insolent, and by a second message demanded the immediate possession and use of them all, for himself and his servants, who meant to carry away what was most valuable, whether it belonged to Ahab or to his people. To this the elders of Israel would not allow the king to consent; the dominion and the public treasures Ben-hadad might have taken, but to plunder the city and enslave the inhabitants must not be granted. To this answer the king of Syria sent a blustering menace, confirmed with an oath by his idols, implying, that he would enter Samaria with such numbers, that, when the whole city was reduced to a heap of dust, it would not afford them every one a handful: but Ahab very pertinently reminded him not to triumph till he had gotten the victory, as at present he was only preparing for the battle.—Scott.

DIVINE ASSURANCE OF VICTORY.—1. This prophet animates Ahab with an assurance of victory, which was more than all the elders of Israel could give him, ver. 8, though they promised to stand by him. This prophet, who is not named, (for he "spake in God's name,") tells him from God that this very day the siege should be raised, and the army of the Syrians routed, ver. 13. When the prophet said, "Thus saith the Lord," we may suppose Ahab began to tremble, expecting a message of wrath: but he is revived, when it proves a gracious one. He is reminded of the use he must make of this blessed turn of affairs. "'Thou shalt know that I am Jehovah,' the sovereign Lord of all:" God's foretelling a thing that was so very unlikely, proved that it was his own doing. 2. He instructs him what to do for the gaining of this victory. (1.) He must not stay till the enemy had attacked him, but must sally out upon them, and surprise them in their trenches. (2.) The persons employed must be the "young men of the princes of the provinces," the pages, the footmen, who were few in number, but 232, utterly unacquainted with war, and the unlikeliest men that could be thought of for such a bold attempt; yet these must do it, those weak and foolish things must be instruments of confounding the wise and strong, that, while Ben-hadad's boasting is punished, Ahab's might be prevented and precluded, and the "excellency of the power might be of God." (3.) Ahab must himself so far testify his confidence in the word of God, as to command in person, though, in the eye of reason, he exposed himself to the utmost danger by it; but it is fit that those who have the benefit of God's promises should enter upon them. Yet (4.) He is allowed to make use of what forces he had at hand, to follow the blow, when these young men had broken the ice. All he had in Samaria, or within call, were but 7000 men, ver. 15. It is observable, that it is the same number with theirs that had not "bowed the knee to Baal," chap. xix. 18, though, it is likely, not the same men. The issue was accordingly; the proud Syrians were beaten, and the poor despised Israelites were more than conquerors.—Henry,

BEN-HADAD'S SECOND EXPEDITION.—Ver. 23—25. The servants of Ben-hadad, either in flattery, as if no human valour could possibly route his army, or from present conviction, ascribed their defeat to the gods of Israel. They supposed that Israel had many deities, like the gods of other nations, to whom they ascribed a limited power within a certain district, out of which they could do nothing. JEHOVAH had displayed his glory from mount Sinai; the temple was built on mount Zion; Samaria was situated on a hill; and the people loved to sacrifice on high places; therefore the Syrians concluded that the gods of Israel were powerful upon the mountains, but not in the plains; and they foolishly expected to prevail against Israel and JEHOVAH by changing their ground. It is, however, probable, that they considered the plain country as better suited to their army, which was furnished with cavalry and chariots of war, than to the foot soldiers of Israel.—Their other advice was sensible and pertinent. The kings served rather for pomp and feasting, than for war; and it could not be expected that they would either and smote the horses and chariots, and slew the Syrians with a great slaughter.

22 ¶ And [b]the prophet came to the king of Israel, and said unto him, Go, [c]strengthen thyself, and mark, and see what thou doest: for [d]at the return of the year the king of Syria will come up against thee.

23 And the servants of the king of Syria said unto him, [e]Their gods are gods of the hills;[5] therefore they were stronger than we; but let us fight against them in the plain, and surely we shall be stronger than they.

24 And do this thing. [f]Take the kings away, every man out of his place, and put captains in their rooms:

25 And number thee an army, like the army that [l]thou hast lost, horse for horse, and chariot for chariot: and we will fight against them in the plain, and surely we shall be stronger than they. And he hearkened unto their voice, and did so.

26 And it came to pass at the return of the year, that Ben-hadad numbered the Syrians, and went up to [g]Aphek,[6] to *fight against Israel.

27 And the children of Israel were numbered, and [†]were all present, and went against them: and the children of Israel pitched before them [h]like two little flocks of kids;[7] but the Syrians filled the country.

28 ¶ And [i]there came a man of God, and spake unto the king of Israel, and said, Thus saith the LORD, [k]Because the Syrians have said, the LORD is God of the hills, but he is not God of the valleys, [l]therefore will I deliver all this great multitude into thine hand, and [m]ye shall know that I am the LORD.

29 And they pitched one over against the other [n]seven days. And so it was, that in the seventh day the battle was joined: and the children of Israel slew of the Syrians [o]an hundred thousand footmen in one day.

30 But the rest fled to Aphek, into the city; and there [p]a wall fell[8] upon twenty and seven thousand of the men that were left. And Ben-hadad [q]fled, and came into the city, [‡]into an inner chamber.

31 ¶ And [r]his servants said unto him, Behold now, we have heard that the kings of the house of Israel are [s]merciful kings: let us, I pray thee, [t]put sackcloth on our loins, and ropes upon our heads, and go out to the king of Israel: [u]peradventure he will save thy life.

32 So they girded sackcloth on their loins, and put ropes on their heads, and came to the king of Israel, and said, [v]Thy servant Ben-hadad saith, I pray thee, let me live. And he said, Is he yet alive? [x]he is my brother.

33 Now [y]the men did diligently observe whether any thing would come from him, and did hastily catch it: and they said, Thy brother Ben-hadad. Then he said, Go ye, bring him. Then Ben-hadad came forth to him; [z]and he caused him to come up into the chariot.

34 And Ben-hadad said unto him, [a]The cities which my father took from thy father, I will restore; and thou shalt make streets for thee in Damascus, as my father made in Samaria. Then, said Ahab, I will send thee away with this covenant. [b]So he made a covenant with him, and sent him away.

35 ¶ And a certain man [c]of the sons of the prophets said unto his neighbour[9] [d]in the word of the LORD, [e]Smite me, I pray thee. And the man refused to smite him.

36 Then said he unto him, [f]Because thou hast not obeyed the voice of the LORD, behold, as soon as thou art departed from me, a lion shall slay thee. And as soon as he was departed from him, a lion found him, and slew him.

37 Then he found another man, and said, [g]Smite me, I pray thee. And the man smote him, [§]so that in smiting he wounded him.

38 So the prophet departed, and waited for the king by the way, and [h]disguised himself with ashes upon his face.[10]

39 And as the king passed by, he cried unto the king: and he said, [i]Thy servant went out[11] into the midst of the battle; and, behold, a man turned aside, and brought a man unto me, and said, Keep this man: if by any means he be missing, then shall [k]thy life be for his life, [l]or else thou shalt [l]pay a talent of silver.

40 And as thy servant was busy here and there, *he was gone. And the king of Israel said unto him, [m]So shall thy judgment be; thyself hast decided it.

41 And he hasted, and took [n]the ashes away from his face; and the king of Israel discerned him, that he was of the prophets.

42 And he said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, [o]Because thou hast let go out of thy hand a man whom I appointed to utter destruction, therefore [p]thy life[12] shall go for his life, and thy people for his people.

43 And the king of Israel [q]went to his house heavy and displeased, and came to Samaria.

be so hearty in the cause of Syria, or so observant of exact discipline, as Syrian captains appointed by the king, and desirous of signalizing themselves, would be.—Scott.

DEFEAT OF BEN-HADAD.—After the armies had faced one another seven days, (the Syrians, it is likely, boasting, and the Israelites trembling,) they engaged, and the Syrians were totally routed, 100,000 men slain by the sword of Israel in the field of battle, ver. 29, and 27,000 men, that thought themselves safe "under the walls of Aphek," a fortified city, (from the walls of which the shooters might annoy the enemy, if they pursued them, 2 Sam. xi. 24,) found their bane where they hoped for protection, the wall fell upon them, probably overthrown by an earthquake, and, the cities of Canaan being walled up to heaven, it reached a great way, and they were all either killed, or hurt, or overwhelmed with dismay. Ben-hadad, who thought his city Aphek should have held out against the conquerors, finding it thus unwalled, and the remnant of his forces dispirited and dispersed, had nothing but secrecy to rely upon for safety, and therefore hid himself in "a chamber within a chamber," lest the pursuers should seize him. See how the greatest confidence often ends in the greatest cowardice; "Now, is the God of Israel the 'God of the valleys,' or no?" He shall know, now that he is forced "into an inner chamber to hide himself," see chap. xxii. 25.—Henry.

HIS SUBMISSION.—Ver. 31—34. A general opinion seems to have prevailed, that the princes of Israel, the people of God, were more generous and clement than other kings; and, indeed, sentiments derived from the oracles of God produce good effects in this respect, on multitudes who do not act habitually on religious principles.—Ben-hadad's umbassadors, appearing in his name before Ahab, clothed in sackcloth, and with ropes on their heads, formed a remarkable contrast to the preceding state of affairs. Thus they acted as penitents and criminals, who were sorry that they had attacked Ahab, and confessed that they deserved to die for that offence. This was a very great mortification to Ben-hadad; and it was equally flattering to Ahab's vanity, who, seduced by it, forgot both the interests of Israel, and his own real honour and security. Indeed, he ought to have given God the glory of his victory, and to have consulted the prophets in what manner to deal with Ben-hadad. But he acknowledged this wicked prince as his brother; being more pleased with the dignity of a king than the distinction of an Israelite. He even treated him with respect, and made a league with him upon disadvantageous terms; and sent him away, without any security, except his bare word, for the performance of the treaty.—These streets of Damascus were probably allotted the Israelites for the purposes of trade, that in them they might live unmolested according to their own laws. It is probable that the same liberty had been allowed the Syrians in Samaria; where the idolaters were at ease, when the prophets of JEHOVAH were cut off.—Scott.

REPROOF.—Wounded as the prophet was, and disguised with ashes, that he might not be known to be a prophet, he made his application to the king in a story, whereby he charged himself with such a crime as the king was now guilty of in sparing Ben-hadad, and waits for the king's judgment upon it; the case, in short, is this:—A prisoner taken in the battle was committed to his custody, by a man, (we may suppose one that had authority over him as his superior officer,) with this charge, "If he be missing, thy life shall be for his life," ver. 39. The prisoner has made his escape through his carelessness. Can the chancery in the king's breast relieve him against his captain, who demands his life in lieu of the prisoner's? "By no means," says the king, "thou shouldest either not have undertaken the trust, or been more careful and faithful to it, there is no remedy, (Curat lex—Let the law take its course,) thou hast forfeited thy bond, and execution must go out upon it; 'so shall thy doom be, thyself has decided it.'" Now the prophet has what he would have, puts off his disguise, and is known by Ahab himself to be a prophet, ver. 41, and plainly tells him, "Thou art the man:" is it "my" doom? No it is "thine; thyself hast decided it; out of thine own mouth art thou judged; God, thy Superior and Commander-in-chief, delivered into thy hands one plainly marked for destruction, both by his own pride and God's providence, and thou hast not carelessly lost him, but wittingly and willingly dismissed him, and so hast been false to thy trust, and lost the end of thy victory; expect therefore no other than that 'thy life shall go for his life,' which thou hast spared," (and so it did, chap. xxii. 35, "and thy 'people for his people,' whom likewise thou hast spared;" and so they did afterward, 2 Kings x. 32, 33. When their other sins brought them low, this came into the account. There is a time when "keeping back the sword from blood" is "doing the work of the Lord deceitfully," Jer. xlviii. 10. Foolish pity spoils the city.—Henry.

CHAP. XXI. ELIJAH'S MESSAGE TO AHAB.—Elijah denounces God's wrath against Ahab; "I have found thee," says he, ver. 20, "because thou hast sold thyself to work evil." Note, Those that give up themselves to sin will certainly be found out, sooner or later, to their unspeakable horror and amazement. Ahab is now set to the bar, as Naboth was, and trembles more than he did. 1. Elijah finds the indictment against him, and convicts him upon the notorious evidence of the fact, ver. 19. "Hast thou killed, and also taken possession?" He is here charged with the murder of Naboth; and it would not serve him to say the law killed him, (perverted justice is the highest injustice;) or, that if he were unjustly prosecuted, it was not his doing, he knew nothing of it; for

2 And Ahab spake unto Naboth, saying, [a]Give me thy vineyard, that I may have it for [d]a garden of herbs, because it is near unto my house: and I will give thee for it a better vineyard than it; or, if it [*]seem good to thee, I will give thee the worth of it in money.

3 And Naboth said to Ahab, [e]The LORD forbid it me, that [f]I should give the inheritance of my fathers[1] unto thee.

4 And Ahab came into his house [g]heavy and displeased because of the word which Naboth the Jezreelite had spoken to him: for he had said, I [h]will not give thee the inheritance of my fathers. [i]And he laid him down upon his bed, and turned away his face, and would eat no bread.

5 ¶ But [k]Jezebel his wife came to him, and said unto him, [l]Why is thy spirit so sad, that thou eatest no bread?

6 And he said unto her, [m]Because I spake unto Naboth the Jezreelite, and said unto him, Give me thy vineyard for money; or else, if it please thee, I will give thee another vineyard for it: and he answered, [n]I will not give thee my vineyard.

7 And Jezebel his wife said unto him, [o]Dost thou now govern the kingdom of Israel?[2] Arise, and eat bread, and let thine heart be merry: [p]I will give thee the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite.

8 So [q]she wrote letters in Ahab's name, and sealed them with his seal, and sent the letters unto [r]the elders and to [s]the nobles that were in his city, dwelling with Naboth.

9 And she wrote in the letters, saying, [t]Proclaim a fast,[3] and set Naboth [†]on high among the people:

10 And set [u]two men, [x]sons of Belial, before him, to bear witness against him, saying, [y]Thou didst blaspheme God and the king. And then carry him out, and stone him, that he may die.

11 And the men of his city, even the elders and the nobles who were the inhabitants in his city, [z]did as Jezebel had sent unto them, and as it was written in the letters which she had sent unto them.

12 They [a]proclaimed a fast, and set Naboth on high among the people.

13 And there came in two men, children of Belial, and sat before him: and [b]the men of Belial witnessed against him, even against Naboth, in the presence of the people, saying, Naboth did [c]blaspheme God and [d]the king. Then [e]they carried him forth out of the city, and stoned him with stones, that he died.

14 Then they sent to Jezebel, saying, [f]Naboth is stoned, and is dead.

15 ¶ And it came to pass, when Jezebel heard that Naboth was stoned, and was dead, that Jezebel said to Ahab, [g]Arise, take possession of the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite, which he refused to give thee for money: for Naboth is not alive, but dead.

16 And it came to pass, when Ahab heard that Naboth was dead, that [h]Ahab rose up to go down to the vineyard of Naboth the Jezreelite, to take possession of it.

17 ¶ And [i]the word of the LORD came to Elijah the Tishbite, saying,

18 Arise, go down to meet Ahab king of Israel, [k]which is in Samaria: behold, he is in the vineyard of Naboth, whither he is gone down to possess it.

19 And thou shalt speak unto him, saying, Thus saith the LORD, [l]Hast thou killed, and also taken possession? And thou shalt speak unto him, saying, Thus saith the LORD, [m]In the place where dogs licked[4] the blood of Naboth shall dogs lick thy blood, even thine.

20 And Ahab said to Elijah, [n]Hast thou found me, O mine enemy? And he answered, I have found thee: because [o]thou hast sold thyself [p]to work evil in the sight of the LORD.

21 Behold, [q]I will bring evil upon thee, and will take away thy posterity, and will cut off from Ahab [r]him that pisseth against the wall, and [s]him that is shut up and left in Israel.

22 And will [t]make thine house like the house of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, and like the house of Baasha the son of Ahijah, for the provocation wherewith thou hast provoked me to anger, and [u]made Israel to sin.

23 And of [x]Jezebel also spake the LORD, saying, The dogs shall eat Jezebel by the [‡]wall of Jezreel.

24 Him [y]that dieth of Ahab in the city the dogs shall eat; and him that dieth in the field shall the fowls of the air eat.

25 But [z]there was none like unto Ahab,[5] which did [a]sell himself to work wickedness in the sight of the LORD, [b]whom Jezebel his wife [§]stirred up.

26 And he did [c]very abominably in following idols, [d]according to all things as did the Amorites, whom the LORD cast out before the children of Israel.

27 ¶ And it came to pass, when Ahab heard those words, that [e]he rent his clothes, and put sackcloth upon his flesh, and fasted, and [f]lay in sackcloth, and [g]went softly.[6]

28 And the word of the LORD came to Elijah the Tishbite, saying,

29 [h]Seest thou how [i]Ahab humbleth himself before me? because he humbleth himself before me, [k]I will not bring [l]the evil in his days: but [m]in his son's days will I bring the evil upon his house.

it was to please him that it was done, and he had showed himself pleased with it, and so had made himself guilty of all that was done in the unjust prosecution of Naboth. He killed for he took possession. If he takes the garden, he takes the guilt with it. Terra transit cum onere—The land with the incumbrance. 2. He passes judgment upon him, That his family should be ruined and rooted out, ver. 21, and all his posterity cut off. That his house should be made like the houses of his wicked predecessors, Jeroboam and Baasha, ver. 22, particularly, that they who died in the city should be meat for dogs, and they who died in the field, meat for birds, ver. 24, which had been foretold of Jeroboam's house, chap. xiv. 11, and of Baasha's, chap. xvi. 4. That Jezebel, particularly, should be devoured by dogs, ver. 23, which was fulfilled, 2 Kings ix. 36, and as for Ahab himself, that the dogs should "lick his blood" in the very same place where they licked Naboth's, ver. 19. "'Thy blood, even thine,' though it be royal blood, though it swell thy veins with pride, and boil in thy heart with anger, ere long it shall be an entertainment for the dogs;" which was fulfilled, chap. xxii. 38. This intimates that he should die a violent death, should come to his grave with blood, and that disgrace should attend him, the foresight of which must needs be a great mortification to a proud man. Punishments after death are here most insisted on, which, though such as affected the body only, perhaps were designed as figures of the soul's misery after death.—Henry.

JEZEBEL'S CRUEL POLICY.—Ver. 8—14. Jezebel wrote in Ahab's name, and sealed the letters with his seal, which it seems he allowed her to use when and as she pleased. Thus the elders of Jezreel were required to obey her directions, as they valued the king's favour. She represented Naboth as a dangerous criminal, who must be taken off, without a particular inquiry into the nature of his offence: yet, as he bore a fair character, some charge must be brought against him, which might prevent the people from taking umbrage at his execution. A fast must therefore be proclaimed; as if some horrid wickedness had been discovered, which threatened the city with divine judgments, till solemnly expiated. This would excite general consternation: and on the day appointed, Naboth must be seized; and "men of Belial" procured, (that is, men wholly unprincipled, and free from all restraints of conscience, who would do any thing for hire,) to testify that he had blasphemed God and the king: thus he would be condemned to be stoned for the blasphemy; for the treasonable words, his estate would be confiscated; and the elders were required to see the sentence immediately executed. These infamous orders were as infamously obeyed, without hesitation or reluctance; and by elders and nobles of Israel, though in contempt of all religion, law, and justice!—It seems they stoned Naboth's sons also, that there might be none to avenge his death, or to demand his estate. When Jezebel cut off the Lord's prophets, she had doubtless inured the magistrates to similar practices, and rewarded their wickedness: so that she did not fear a refusal from the elders of Jezreel. They also knew from whom the orders came, and reported the execution of them to Jezebel, not to Ahab.—The elders of the same city, not long after, paid as implicit obedience to Jehu's orders, in putting to death seventy of Ahab's descendants, 2 Kings x. 3—10. Ver. 15, 16. Ahab proved that he was pleased with the conduct of Jezebel and her agents, and indeed made it his own; by readily going in person to take possession of the estate, for which the murder had been committed. Ver. 17—19. The junior prophets were sent upon ordinary messages to Ahab; but Elijah himself was employed on this occasion, whose very presence would dismay the proud tyrant, and whose strong faith and intrepid spirit qualified him for such a service. In the very vineyard of Naboth, even whilst Ahab was seizing on his prey, and surrounded by his officers, the prophet delivered this message to him, for his deeper mortification, and that it might be more noticed by others. He directly charged Ahab with the murder of Naboth, nor did he attempt to deny or excuse himself. The prediction, that dogs should lick the blood of Ahab certainly implied that he would be cut off by a violent death: but the expression, "in the place where," &c., occasions considerable difficulty; because Samaria was at some distance from Jezreel. Some learned men think that the word rendered "the place where," may mean, in like manner as: but this signification of the original word is perhaps unprecedented. Others suppose that the word place is taken in a large sense, for all the adjacent region; and so includes Samaria, where Ahab dwelt, and where he was buried, as well as the city of Jezreel, chap. xxii. 37, 38. But may we not say that, as dogs licked the blood of Ahab, literally, when his chariot was washed in the pool of Samaria; so they licked his blood, as flowing through the veins of his son Joram, when Joram was slain by Jehu, and his body thrown into this very spot? 2 Kings ix. 25, 26. Ver. 20. After the slaughter of Baal's prophets, and Elijah's flight from Jezebel, Ahab had returned to his wicked course of life, and he shunned the prophet as his worst enemy. Before, indeed, he had bestowed much pains to find him: but being now determined in idolatry, and yet afraid of him, whose prayers had called for drought upon the land, and fire and rain from heaven; and especially still feeling in his conscience the anguish of his cutting rebukes, he even trembled at the thoughts of him. Others called prophets had come to him with milder messages, and he thought them more friendly; but Elijah's severity could not be mollified. His presence therefore on this occasion surprised, offended, and affrighted him: and when his enemy had found him, he expected not to go well away, but hear some awful judgment denounced against him for his recent transgression.—Nor did Elijah deny that he was an enemy to his wickedness: he neither paid respect to him, nor was intimidated by his anger or power. He had found him as

CHAP. XXII.

Ahab, seduced by false prophets, is slain at Ramoth-gilead, 1; the dogs lick up his blood, 37. Jehoshaphat's good reign, 41, and acts, 45. Ahaziah's evil reign, 51.

AND [a]they continued three years without war between Syria and Israel.

2 And it came to pass [b]in the third year, that [c]Jehoshaphat the king of Judah came down to the king of Israel.

3 And the king of Israel said unto his servants, Know ye that [d]Ramoth in Gilead is ours, and we be *still, and take it not out of the hand of the king of Syria?

4 And he said unto Jehoshaphat, [e]Wilt thou go with me to battle to Ramoth-gilead?[1] And Jehoshaphat said to the king of Israel, [f]I am as thou art, my people as thy people, my horses as thy horses.

5 ¶ And Jehoshaphat said unto the king of Israel, [g]Enquire, I pray thee, at the word of the LORD to day.

6 Then the king of Israel gathered [h]the prophets together, about four hundred men, and said unto them, Shall I go against Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall I forbear? And they said, [i]Go up; for the LORD shall deliver it into the hand of the king.

7 ¶ And Jehoshaphat said, [j]Is there not here a prophet of the LORD besides, that we might enquire of him?

8 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, There is [k]yet one man, Micaiah the son of Imlah, by whom we may enquire of the LORD: [l]but I hate him, for he doth not prophesy [m]good [n]concerning me, but evil. And Jehoshaphat said, [o]Let not the king say so.

9 Then the king of Israel called an [†]officer, and said, [p]Hasten hither Micaiah the son of Imlah.

10 And the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat the king of Judah sat each on his throne, [q]having put on their robes, in a [‡]void place in the entrance of the gate of Samaria; and [r]all the prophets prophesied before them.

11 And Zedekiah the son of Chenaanah made him [s]horns of iron:[2] and he said, [t]Thus saith the LORD, With these shalt thou push the Syrians, until thou have consumed them.

12 And all the prophets prophesied so, saying, [u]Go up to Ramoth-gilead, and prosper: for the LORD shall deliver it into the king's hand.

13 And the messenger that was gone to call Micaiah, spake unto him, saying, [x]Behold now, the words of the prophets declare good unto the king with one mouth: let thy word, I pray thee, be like the word of one of them, and speak that which is good.

14 And Micaiah said, As the LORD liveth, [y]what the LORD saith unto me, that will I speak.

15 ¶ So he came to the king. And the king said unto him, Micaiah, [z]shall we go against Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall we forbear? And he answered him, [a]Go, and prosper: for the LORD shall deliver it into the hand of the king.

16 And the king said unto him, How many times [b]shall I adjure thee, [c]that thou tell me nothing but that which is true in the name of the LORD?

17 And he said, [d]I saw all Israel scattered upon the hills, [e]as sheep that have not a shepherd: and the LORD said, These have no master: let them return every man to his house in peace.

18 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, [f]Did I not tell thee that he would prophesy no good concerning me, but evil?

19 And he said, [g]Hear thou therefore the word of the LORD: [h]I saw the LORD sitting on his throne, and [i]all the host of heaven standing by him, on his right hand and on his left:

20 And the LORD said, Who shall [j]persuade Ahab, that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-gilead? And one said on this manner, and another said on that manner.

21 And [k]there came forth a spirit, and stood before the LORD, and said, I will persuade him.

22 And the LORD said unto him, Wherewith? And he said, I will go forth, and I will be [l]a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets. And he said, [m]Thou shalt persuade him, and prevail also: go forth, and do so.[3]

23 Now therefore, behold, [n]the LORD hath put a lying spirit in the mouth of all these thy prophets, and [o]the LORD hath spoken evil concerning thee.

24 ¶ But [p]Zedekiah the son of Chenaanah went near, and [q]smote Micaiah on the cheek, and said, [r]Which way went the Spirit of the LORD from me to speak unto thee?

25 And Micaiah said, [s]Behold, thou shalt see in that day, when thou shalt go [t]into an inner chamber to hide thyself.

CHAP. XXII. AHAB AND JEHOSHAPHAT IN ALLIANCE.—Ahab engages Jehoshaphat, and draws him in to join with him in this expedition, for the recovery of Ramoth-gilead, ver. 4. And here I do not wonder that Ahab should desire the assistance of so pious and prosperous a neighbour. Even bad men have often coveted the friendship of the good. It is desirable to have an interest in those that have an interest in heaven; and to have those with us that have God with them. But it is strange that Jehoshaphat will go so entirely into Ahab's interests, as to say, "I am as thou art, and my people as thy people." I hope not; Jehoshaphat and his people are not so wicked and corrupt as Ahab and his people. Too great a complaisance to evil-doers has brought many good people, through unwariness, into a dangerous fellowship with "the unfruitful works of darkness." Jehoshaphat had like to have paid dear for his compliment, when, in the battle, he was taken for Ahab. Yet some observe, that in joining with Israel against Syria, he atoned for his father's fault, in joining with Syria against Israel, chap. xv. 19, 20.—Henry.

FALSE PROPHETS.—Ver. 6. It is most probable that these were the prophets of the groves, who escaped when the prophets of Baal were slain at the command of Elijah; for certainly they were false prophets. As they ate at Jezebel's table, we may be sure that they commonly prophesied in the name of Baal: but it seems that occasionally they could speak in the name of the LORD. In this verse indeed the word is not JEHOVAH, but Adonia, which is used with greater latitude: but afterwards both Zedekiah, and the rest of them, used the word JEHOVAH, ver. 11, 12. Like some modern philosophers and poets, they perhaps would argue, that it was all one, whether the Supreme Being were called Baal, or JEHOVAH, or Jupiter. To humour the matter therefore with Jehoshaphat, and to show that they were no bigots, but men of candour and liberality, they would for once prophesy in the name of JEHOVAH. They perhaps allowed Jehoshaphat to be a good sort of man: but he had some narrow prejudices, and would not be satisfied if they said, "Go up, for Baal shall deliver it into the hand of the king;" and they would scorn to disagree with him about a trifling variation, which they could make with little trouble, and without expense. They perceived, likewise, which way Ahab's inclinations leaned, and to please him likewise they assured him of success. It is, however, to be supposed, that the number and valour of Ahab's forces, his alliance with Jehoshaphat, and the scandalous treachery of Ben-hadad, concurred in encouraging their hopes that he would obtain the victory; especially as, notwithstanding his idolatries, he had before been successful.—Scott.

MICAIAH—THE TRUE PROPHET.—Being pressed, Micaiah plainly foretold that the king would be cut off in this expedition, and his army scattered, ver. 17. He saw them in a vision, or dream, dispersed upon the mountains, as sheep that have no one to guide them: "Smite the shepherd, and the sheep will be scattered," Zech. xiii. 7. This intimates, 1. That Israel should be deprived of their king, who was their shepherd; God took notice of it, "These have no master." 2. That they would be obliged to retire re infecta—without accomplishing what they went for. He does not foresee any great slaughter in the army, but that they should make a dishonourable retreat; "Let them return every man to his house in peace:" put into disorder indeed for the present, but no great losers, by the death of their king: he shall fall in war, but they shall go home in peace. Thus Micaiah, in his prophecy, testified what he had seen and heard, (let them take it how they pleased,) while the others prophesied merely "out of their own hearts:" see Jer. xxxiii. 28. The prophet that has a dream, let him tell that, and so quote his authority; "and he that has my word, let him speak my word faithfully," and not his own; for "what is the chaff to the wheat?" Now Ahab finds himself aggrieved, turns to Jehoshaphat, and appeals to him, whether Micaiah had not manifestly a spite against him, ver. 18. They that bear malice to others are generally willing to believe that they bear malice to them, though they have no cause for it, and therefore to put the worst constructions upon all they say. What evil did Micaiah prophecy to Ahab, in telling him, if he proceeded in this expedition, it would be fatal to him, while he might choose whether he would proceed in it or no? The greatest kindness we can do to one that is going in a dangerous way, is to tell him of his danger. He informed the king how it was, that all his prophets encouraged him to proceed; God permitted Satan, by them, to deceive him into his ruin, and he by vision, knew of it; it was represented to him, and he represented it to Ahab, that the God of heaven had determined he should fall at Ramoth-gilead, ver. 19, 20, that the favour he had wickedly shown to Ben-hadad might be punished by him and his Syrians, and that he being in some doubt whether he should go to Ramoth-gilead or no, and resolving to be advised by his prophets, they should persuade him to it, and prevail, ver. 21, 22, and hence it was, that they encouraged him with so much assurance, ver. 23, it was a lie from the father of lies, but by the divine permission. The matter is here represented after the manner of men; we are not to imagine that God is ever put upon new counsels, or is ever at a loss for means whereby to effect his purposes, or that he needs to consult with angels, or any creature, about the methods he should take, or that he is the Author of sin, or the cause of any man's either telling or believing a lie; but beside what was intended by this, with reference to Ahab himself, it is to teach us, 3. That God is a great King above all kings; and has a me. And he said, [a]Hearken, O people, every one of you.

29 ¶ So [b]the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat the king of Judah went up[4] to Ramoth-gilead.

30 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, [‡]I will disguise myself, and enter into the battle; but [c]put thou on thy robes. And the king of Israel [d]disguised himself, and went into the battle.

31 ¶ But the king of Syria commanded his [e]thirty and two captains that had rule over his chariots, saying, [f]Fight neither with [g]small nor great, save only with the king of Israel.

32 And it came to pass, when the captains of the chariots saw Jehoshaphat, that they said, Surely it is the king of Israel. And they turned aside to fight against him: and [h]Jehoshaphat cried out.

33 And it came to pass, when the captains of the chariots perceived that it was not the king of Israel, [i]that they turned back from pursuing him.

34 ¶ And a certain man drew a bow [§]at a venture,[5] [k]and smote the king of Israel between the [‖]joints of the harness: wherefore he said unto the driver of his chariot, Turn thine hand, and carry me out of the host; for I am [*]wounded.

35 And the battle [†]increased that day: and the king was stayed up in his chariot against the Syrians, and [‖]died at even: and the blood ran out of the wound into the [‡]midst of the chariot.

36 And [m]there went a proclamation throughout the host about the going down of the sun, saying, [n]Every man to his city, and every man to his own country.

37 ¶ So the king died, and was [§]brought to Samaria; and they buried the king in Samaria.

38 And one washed the chariot in the pool of Samaria, [o]and the dogs licked up his blood, and they washed his armour, according unto the word of the LORD which he spake.

39 ¶ Now [p]the rest of the acts of Ahab, and all that he did, and [q]the ivory house which he made, and all the cities that he built, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

40 So Ahab [r]slept with his fathers; and Ahaziah his son reigned in his stead.

41 ¶ And [s]Jehoshaphat the son of Asa began to reign over Judah in the fourth year of Ahab king of Israel.

42 Jehoshaphat was thirty and five years old when he began to [t]reign; and he reigned twenty and five years in Jerusalem: [x]and his mother's name was Azubah, the daughter of Shilhi.

43 And [y]he walked in all the ways of Asa his father; [z]he turned not aside from it, doing that which was [a]right in the eyes of the LORD: nevertheless [b]the high places were not taken away; for the people offered and burnt incense yet in the high places.

44 And Jehoshaphat [c]made peace with the king of Israel.

45 Now [d]the rest of the acts of Jehoshaphat, and his might that he shewed, and how he warred, [e]are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

46 And [f]the remnant of the sodomites, which remained in the days of his father Asa, he took out of the land.

48 Jehoshaphat [‖]made [i]ships of Tharshish[*] to go [k]to Ophir for gold: but they [l]went not; for the ships were broken at [m]Ezion-geber.[†]

49 Then said Ahaziah the son of Ahab unto Jehoshaphat,[8] Let my servants go with thy servants in the ships: but Jehoshaphat would not.

50 ¶ And Jehoshaphat [n]slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers [o]in the city of David his father: and [p]Jehoram his son reigned in his stead.

51 ¶ Ahaziah the son of Ahab [q]began to reign over Israel in Samaria the seventeenth year of Jehoshaphat king of Judah, and reigned [r]two years over Israel.

52 And [s]he did evil in the sight of the LORD, and walked in the way of his father, and [t]in the way of his mother, [u]and in the way of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin:

throne above all the thrones of earthly princes; "You have your thrones," (said Micaiah to these two kings,) "and you think you may do what you will, and we must all say as you would have us; but 'I saw the Lord sitting upon his throne,' and every man's judgment proceeding from him, and therefore I must say as he says; he is not a man, as you are." 4. That he is continually attended and served by an innumerable company of angels, those heavenly hosts, who stand by him, ready to go where he sends them, and to do what he bids them, messengers of mercy "on his right hand," of wrath "on his left hand." 5. That he not only takes cognizance of, but presides over, all the affairs of this lower world, and overrules them "according to the counsel of his own will;" the rise and fall of princes, the issues of war, and all the great affairs of state, which are the subject of the consultations of wise and great men, are no more above God's direction than the meanest concerns of the poorest cottages are below his notice. 6. God has many ways of bringing about his own counsels, particularly concerning the fall of sinners when they are ripe for ruin; he can do it either in this manner or in that manner. 7. That there are malicious and lying spirits, which go about continually seeking to devour, and, in order to that, seeking to deceive, and especially to put lies into the mouths of prophets, by them to entice many to their destruction. 8. It is not without the divine permission that the devil deceives men. Thereby God serves his own purposes. "With him is strength and wisdom, the deceived and the deceiver are his," Job xii. 16. When he pleases, for the punishment of those who receive not the truth in the love of it, he not only "lets Satan loose to deceive them," Rev. xx. 7, 8, but "gives up men to strong delusions to believe" him, 2 Thess. ii. 11, 12. 9. Those are manifestly marked for ruin that are thus given up; God has certainly "spoken evil concerning those" whom he has given up to be imposed upon by lying prophets.

AHAB'S DEATH.—Ver. 34. Ahab received his mortal wound in the battle, notwithstanding his endeavours to secure himself in the habit of a private sentinel. Let no man think to hide himself from God's judgment, no, not in masquerade; "Thine hand shall find out all thine enemies," whatever disguise they are in, ver. 34. The Syrian that shot him little thought of doing such a piece of service to God and his king, for he "drew a bow at a venture," not aiming particularly at any man, yet God so directed the arrow that, 1. He hit the right person, the man that was marked for destruction, whom, if they had taken alive, as was designed, perhaps Ben-hadad would have spared: those cannot escape with life whom God hath doomed to death. 2. He hit him in the right place, "between the joints of the harness," the only place about him where this arrow of death could find entrance. No armour is of proof against the darts of divine vengeance; case the criminal in steel, and it is all one, "he that made him can make his sword to approach to him." That which to us seems altogether casual, is done by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God.

JEHOSHAPHAT'S REIGN.—Ver. 43. Here is a short account of the reign of Jehoshaphat king of Judah, which we shall have a much fuller narrative of in the book of Chronicles and of the greatness and goodness of that prince, neither of which was lessened or sullied by any thing but his intimacy with the house of Ahab, which upon several accounts, was a diminution to him; his confederacy with Ahab, in war, we have already found dangerous to him, and his confederacy with Ahaziah his son, in trade, sped no better; he offered to go partner with him in a fleet of merchant ships, that should fetch gold from Ophir, as Solomon's navy did, ver. 48. See 2 Chron. xx. 35, 36. But, while they were preparing to set sail, they were exceedingly damaged, and disabled by a storm, "broken at Ezion-geber," which a prophet gave Jehoshaphat to understand was a rebuke to him, for his league with wicked Ahaziah, 2 Chron. xx. 37. And therefore, as we are told here, ver. 49, when Ahaziah desired, a second time, to be a partner with him, or, if that could not be obtained, that he might but send his servants, with some effects, on board Jehoshaphat's ships, he refused; "Jehoshaphat would not;" the rod of God, expounded by the word of God, had effectually broken him off from his confederacy with that ungodly unhappy prince. Better buy wisdom dear than be without it; but experience is therefore said to be the mistress of fools, because they are fools that will not learn till they are taught by experience, and particularly till they are taught the danger of associating with wicked people. Now, Jehoshaphat's reign appears here to have been none of the longest, but one of the best. 1. It was none of the longest, for he reigned but 25 years, ver. 42, but then it was in the prime of his time, between 35 and 60, and these 25, added to his father's happy 41, give us a grateful idea of the flourishing condition of the kingdom of Judah, and of religion in it, for a great while, even when things were very bad, upon all accounts, in the kingdom of Israel. If Jehoshaphat reigned not so long as his father, to balance that, he had not those blemishes on the latter end of his reign that his father had. 2 Chron. xvi. 9, 10, 12, and it is better for a man, that has been in reputation for wisdom and honour, to die in the midst of it, than to outlive it. 2. Yet it was one of the best, both in respect of piety and prosperity. He did well, he "did that which was right in the eyes of the Lord," ver. 43, observed the commands of his God, and trod in the steps of his good father, and persevered therein, he "turned not aside from it;" yet every man's character has some but or other, so had his: the "high places were not taken away," no not out of Judah and Benjamin, though those tribes lay so near Jerusalem, that they might easily bring their offerings and in-

THE SECOND BOOK OF THE # KINGS,

THE FOURTH BOOK OF THE KINGS.

THIS book is merely a continuation of the preceding, to which it it is joined in the Hebrew Canon. The remarks, therefore, already made on that, in a great measure apply to this.—It contains the history of above three hundred years. As all the prophets (commonly so called), whose writings have been preserved, lived in the latter part of this period (those excepted who lived during or after the captivity), and as they continually refer to the facts recorded in this history, we may consider all their predictions as sanctioning, by their accomplishment, the Divine authority of the narrative, though it does not contain any express prophecy, the completion of which extended much beyond the term of the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity.

Moab rebelleth, 1. Ahaziah, sending to Baal-zebub, hath judgment by Elijah, 2. Elijah twice bringeth fire from heaven on Ahaziah's messengers, 5. Jehoram succeedeth Ahaziah, 17.

A. M. 3108.—B. C. 896.

THEN [a]Moab rebelled against Israel [b]after the death of Ahab.

2 ¶ And Ahaziah fell down through [c]a lattice in his upper chamber that was in Samaria, and [d]was sick: and he sent messengers, and said unto them, Go, enquire of [e]Baal-zebub the [f]god of Ekron,[1] [g]whether I shall recover of this disease.

3 But [h]the angel of the LORD said to [i]Elijah the Tishbite, [k]Arise, go up to meet the messengers of the king of Samaria, and say unto them, Is it [l]not because there is not a God in Israel, that [m]ye go to enquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron?

4 Now therefore thus saith the LORD, *Thou shalt not come down from that bed on which thou art gone up, [n]but shalt surely die. And Elijah departed.

5 ¶ And when the messengers turned back unto him, he said unto them, Why are ye now turned back?

6 And they said unto him, There came a man up to meet us, and said unto us, Go, turn again unto the king that sent you, and say unto him, Thus saith the LORD, Is it not because there is not a God in Israel, that thou sendest to enquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron? [o]therefore thou shalt not come down from that bed on which thou art gone up, but shalt surely die.

7 And he said unto them, [†]What manner of man was he which came up to meet you, and told you these words?

8 And they answered him, He was [p]an hairy man,[2] and girt with a girdle of leather about his loins. And he said, It is Elijah the Tishbite.

9 Then the king [q]sent unto him a captain of fifty with his fifty. And he went up to him: and, behold, [r]he sat on the top of an hill. And he spake unto him, [s]Thou man of God, the king hath said, Come down.

10 And Elijah answered and said to the captain of fifty, [t]if I be a man of God, then [u]let fire come down from heaven, and consume thee and thy fifty. And there came down fire from heaven, [x]and consumed[3] him and his fifty.

11 [y]Again also he sent unto him another captain of fifty with his fifty. And he answered and said unto him, [z]O man of God, thus hath the king said, Come down quickly.

12 And Elijah answered and said unto them, [a]If I be a man of God, let fire come down from heaven, and consume thee and thy fifty. And the fire of God came down from heaven and consumed him and his fifty.

13 ¶ And [b]he sent again a captain of the third fifty with his fifty: and the third captain of fifty went up, and came and [‡]fell on his knees before Elijah, and [c]besought him, and said unto him, [d]O man of God, I pray thee, let my life, and the life of these fifty thy servants, be precious in thy sight.

14 Behold, there came fire down from heaven, and burnt up the two captains of the former fifties with their fifties: therefore let my [•]life now be precious in thy sight.

15 And the angel of the LORD said unto Elijah, Go down with him: [f]be not afraid of him. And he arose, and went down with him unto the king.

16 And he said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, [g]Forasmuch as thou hast sent messengers to enquire of Baal-zebub the god of Ekron, is it not because there is no God in Israel to enquire of his word? therefore thou shalt not come down off that bed on which thou art gone up, but shalt surely die.

17 ¶ So he died according to the word of the LORD which Elijah had spoken. And Jehoram reigned in his stead, [h]in the second year of Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat king of Judah; because he had no son.[4]

18 Now the rest of the acts of Ahaziah which he did, are they not written [i]in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

cense to the altar there, and could not pretend as some other of the tribes, the inconveniency of lying remote; but old corruptions are with difficulty rooted out, especially when they have formerly had the patronage of those that were good, as the high places had of Samuel, Solomon, and some others.—Henry.

CHAP. I. AHAZIAH'S SUPERSTITION AND ELIJAH'S REPROOF.—In his distress, Ahaziah sends messengers to inquire of the god of Ekron, whether he should recover or no, ver. 2. And here, 1. His inquiry was very foolish: "Shall I recover?" Even nature itself would rather have asked, "What means may I use, that I may recover?" But as one solicitous only to know his fortune, not to know his duty, his question is only this, "Shall I recover?" which a little time would give answer to. We should be more thoughtful what will become of us after death, than how, or when, or where, we shall die; and more desirous to be told how we may conduct ourselves well in our sickness, and get good to our souls by it, than whether we shall recover from it. 2. His sending to Baal-zebub was very wicked; to make a dead and dumb idol, perhaps newly erected, (for idolaters were fond of new gods,) his oracle, was no less a reproach to his reason than to his religion. Baal-zebub signifies "the lord of a fly;" one of their Baals, that, perhaps, gave his answers either by the power of the dæmons, or the craft of the priests, with a humming noise, like that of a great fly; or that had (as they fancied) rid their country of the swarms of flies wherewith it was infested, or of some pestilential disease brought among them by flies. Perhaps this dunghill deity was as famous then, as the oracle of Delphos was, long after, in Greece. In the New Testament, "the prince of the devils" is called "Beelzebub," Matt. xii. 24, for the gods of the Gentiles were devils, and this, perhaps, grew to be one of the most famous.

DIVINE JUDGMENT.—Elijah calls for a fire from heaven to consume this haughty daring sinner; not to secure himself, he could have done that some other way, nor to avenge himself, for it was not his own cause that he appeared and acted in; but to prove his mission, and to "reveal the wrath of God" from "heaven against the ungodliness and unrighteousness of men." This captain had in scorn called him "a man of God;" "If I be so," says Elijah, "thou shalt pay dear for making a jest of it." He valued himself upon his commission, (the king has said, "Come down,") but Elijah will let him know that the God of Israel is superior to the king of Israel, and has a greater power to enforce his commands. It was not long since Elijah had fetched fire from heaven to consume the sacrifice, 1 Kings xviii. 38, in token of God's acceptance of that sacrifice as an atonement for the sins of the people; but they having slighted that, now the fire falls, not on the sacrifice, but on the sinners themselves, ver. 10. See here, 1. What an interest the prophets had in heaven: what the Spirit of God in them demanded, the power of God effected; Elijah did but speak, and it was done; he that formerly had fetched water from heaven, now fetches fire; oh, the power of prayer! "Concerning the work of my hands, command ye me," Isa. xlv. 11. 2. What an interest heaven had in the prophets! God was always ready to plead their cause, and avenge the injuries done to them; kings shall still be "rebuked for their sakes," and charged to do "his prophets no harm;" one Elijah is more to God than 10,000 captains and their fifties; doubtless, Elijah did this by a divine impulse, and yet our Saviour would not allow the disciples to draw it into a precedent, Luke ix. 54. They were now not far from the place where Elias did this act of justice upon provoking Israelites, and would needs, in like manner, call for fire upon those provoking Samaritans. "No," says Christ, "by no means, 'you know not what manner of spirit you are of,'" that is, (1.) "You do not consider 'what manner of spirit,' as disciples, you are called to, and how different from that of the Old Testament dispensation; it was agreeable enough to that dispensation of terror, and of the letter, for Elias to call for fire; but the dispensation of the Spirit and of grace will by no means allow of it." (2.) "You are not aware what manner of spirit you are upon this occasion acted by, and how different from that of Elias: he did it in holy zeal, you in passion; he was concerned for God's glory, you for your own reputation only." God judges men's practices by their principles, and his judgment is according to truth.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Ver. 1—8. Man's revolt from God is often punished by the rebellion of those who owe subjection to him.—Death meets men in the most unexpected places and forms, but always under the direction of the all-wise and righteous God. If reconciled to him by faith in the Saviour, and walking in his ways, "death is ours," and can never come in a wrong time or manner: but to the impenitent and unbelieving he is and must be "the king of terrors."—False religion amuses men's minds, and gratifies a vain curiosity: but the Bible declares the way of acceptance, and the path of duty; and, without attempting to inform us of the events of our future lives, or the time and manner of our death, it teaches us to be always ready; and instructs us how to behave under every dispensation of Providence, and thus to find comfort under them all, and derive benefit from them.—With such instructions, and access to the mercy-seat of our God and Father, we have no occasion to consult any of those oracles, which pretend to unfold what God has been pleased to conceal. The believer, assured by the word of God that all things shall work together for his good, may rejoice in hope, and look forward with comfort: but the foreknowledge of the afflictions of future life, joined to the terror of final misery, would mar the little enjoyment which the unbeliever

Elijah divideth Jordan, and granting Elisha his request, is taken up into heaven, 1. Elisha divideth Jordan, 12; he healeth the waters, 19. Children mocking Elisha are destroyed, 23.

AND it came to pass, when the LORD would [a]take up Elijah into heaven [b]by a whirlwind, that Elijah went with [c]Elisha from [d]Gilgal.

2 And Elijah said unto Elisha, [e]Tarry here, I pray thee; for the LORD hath sent me to Beth-el. And Elisha said unto him, [f]As the LORD liveth, and as thy soul liveth, [g]I will not leave thee. So they went down to [h]Beth-el.

3 And [i]the sons of the prophets that were at Beth-el came forth to Elisha, and said unto him, Knowest thou that the LORD will take away [k]thy master [l]from thy head to-day? And he said, Yea, I know it; hold ye your peace.

4 And Elijah said unto him, Elisha, tarry here, I pray thee; for the LORD hath sent me to [i]Jericho. And he said, [m]As the LORD liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee. So they came to Jericho.

5 And the sons of the prophets that were at Jericho came to Elisha, and said unto him, Knowest thou that the LORD will take away [n]thy master from thy head to-day? And he answered, [o]Yea, I know it; hold ye your peace.

6 And Elijah said unto him, Tarry, I pray thee, here; for the LORD hath sent me to Jordan. And he said, As the Lord liveth, and as thy soul liveth, I will not leave thee. And they two went on.

7 And [p]fifty men of the sons of the prophets went, and stood [*]to view afar off: and they two stood by Jordan.

8 And Elisha took [q]his mantle,[2] and wrapped it together, and smote the waters, and they [r]were divided hither and thither, so that they two went over on dry ground.

9 ¶ And it came to pass when they were gone over, that Elijah said unto Elisha, [s]Ask what I shall do for thee, before I be taken away from thee. And [t]Elisha said, I pray thee, let [u]a double portion of thy spirit be upon me.

10 And he said, [v]Thou hast [†]asked a hard thing: nevertheless, [x]if thou see me when I am taken from thee, it shall be so unto thee; but if not, it shall not be so.

11 And it came to pass, as they still went on, and talked, that, behold, there appeared [y]a chariot of fire, and horses of fire, and parted them both asunder; and Elijah went up [z]by a whirlwind [a]into heaven.

12 ¶ And Elisha, [b]saw it, and he cried, [c]My father, my father, the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof. And [d]he saw him no more: and he took hold of his own clothes, and [e]rent them in two pieces.

13 He took up also [f]the mantle of Elijah that fell from him, and went back, and stood by the [‡]bank of Jordan;

14 And he took the mantle of Elijah that fell from him, and [g]smote the waters, and said, [h]Where is the LORD God of Elijah?[3] And when he also had smitten the waters, they parted hither and thither: and Elisha went over.

15 And when the sons of the prophets, which were [i]to view at Jericho saw him, they said, [j]The spirit of Elijah doth rest on Elisha. And they came to meet him, and [k]bowed themselves to the ground before him.

16 ¶ And they said unto him, Behold now, there be with thy servants fifty [§]strong men; let them go, we pray thee, and seek thy master: lest peradventure [l]the Spirit of the LORD hath taken him up, and cast him upon [l]some mountain, or into some valley. And he said, Ye shall not send.

17 And when [m]they urged him till he was ashamed, he said, Send.[4] They sent therefore fifty men; and they sought three days, but [n]found him not.

18 And when they came again to him, (for he tarried at Jericho,) he said unto them, Did I not say unto you, Go not?

19 ¶ And the men of the city said unto Elisha, Behold, I pray thee, the situation of this city is pleasant, as [o]my lord seeth: but [p]the water is naught, and the ground [*]barren.

20 And he said, Bring me a new cruse, and put [q]salt therein: and they brought it to him.

21 And he went forth unto the spring of the waters, and [r]cast the salt in there,[5] and said, Thus saith the LORD, [s]I have healed these waters; [t]there shall not be from thence any more death or barren land.

22 So the waters were healed unto this day, according to the saying of Elisha which he spake.

23 ¶ And he went up from thence unto [u]Beth-el: and as he was going up by the way, there came forth [x]little children out of the city, and [y]mocked him, and said unto him, [z]Go up, thou bald head; go up, thou bald head.

24 And he turned back, and looked on them, and [a]cursed them in the name of the LORD: and there came forth two [b]she bears out of the wood, and [c]tare forty and two children of them.

25 And he went from thence to [d]mount Carmel, and from thence he returned to Samaria.

has in this world, and torment him before his time.—Men are prone to act as if there were no God; as if they were left to take care of themselves, as well as to spend their lives in following their own inclinations: hence they are so readily induced to yield to every temptation, and to make rapid progress in wickedness, when in pursuit of the objects which they idolize, or when afraid of losing them.—They who would be valiant for the truth, and in the cause of God, before the great ones of this world, must learn temperance and frugality; and evince that they neither envy nor covet their luxuries and embellishments, but are indifferent about all other things, compared with the glory of God, and the salvation of immortal souls.—Scott.

CHAP. II. ELIJAH'S TRANSLATION.—Ver. 11. Elijah is carried up to heaven in a fiery chariot. Like Enoch, he was translated, "that he should not see death;" and was (as Mr. Cowley expresses it) "the second man that leaped the ditch, where all the rest of mankind fell, and went not downward to the sky." Many curious questions might be asked about this matter, which could not be answered. Let it suffice that we are here told, 1. What his Lord, when he came, found him doing. He was talking with Elisha, instructing and encouraging him, directing him in his work, and quickening him to it, for the good of those whom he left behind. He was not meditating or praying, as one wholly taken up with the world he was going to, but engaged in edifying discourse, as one concerned about the kingdom of God among men. We mistake, if we think our preparation for heaven is carried on only by contemplation, and the acts of devotion. Usefulness to others will pass as well in our account as any thing. Thinking of divine things is good, but talking of them (if it come from the heart) is better, because for edification, 1 Cor. xiv. 4. Christ ascended as he was blessing his disciples. 2. What convoy his Lord sent for him; "a chariot of fire, and horses of fire," which appeared either descending upon them from the clouds, or (as Bishop Patrick thinks) running toward them upon the ground: in this form the angels appeared. The souls of all the faithful are carried by an invisible guard of angels into the bosom of Abraham; but Elijah being to carry his body with him, this heavenly guard was visible, not in a human shape as usual, though they might so have borne him up in their arms, or carried him as on eagles' wings, but that had been to carry him like a child, like a lamb, Isa. xl. 31, they appear in the form of a chariot and horses, that he may ride in triumph like a prince, like a conqueror, yea, "more than a conqueror;" the angels are called in Scripture, "Cherubim and Seraphim," and their appearance here, though it may seem below their dignity, answers to both these names; for (1.) Seraphim signifies fiery, and God is said to make them "a flame of fire," Ps. civ. 2. (2.) Cherubim (as many think) signifies chariots, and they are called "chariots of God," Ps. lxviii. 17. And he is said to "ride upon a cherub," Ps. xviii. 10, to which perhaps there is an allusion in Ezekiel's vision of four living creatures, and wheels, like horses and chariots; in Zechariah's vision they are so represented, Zech. i. 8; vi. 1. Compare Rev. vi. 2, &c. See the readiness of the angels to do the will of God, even in the meanest services, for the good of them that shall be heirs of salvation. Elijah must remove to the world of angels, and therefore, to show how desirous they were of his company, some of them would come to fetch him; the chariot and horses appeared like fire, not for burning, but brightness, not to torture or consume him, but to render his ascension conspicuous and illustrious in the eyes of those that stood afar off to view it. Elijah had burned with holy zeal for God and his honour, and now, with a heavenly fire, he was refined and translated. 3. How he was separated from Elisha; this chariot parted them both asunder. Note, The dearest friends must part; Elisha had protested he would not leave him, yet now is left behind by him. 4. Whither he was carried; he "went up by a whirlwind into heaven;" the fire tends upward, the whirlwind helped to carry him through the atmosphere, out of the reach of the magnetic virtue of this earth, and then how swiftly he ascended through the pure æther to the world of holy and blessed spirits we cannot conceive.—Henry.

PUNISHMENT OF YOUTHFUL IMPIETY.—Ver. 23, 24. Several learned men have endeavoured to prove, that these offenders were not children, but grown-up persons: and, no doubt, the word rendered children, is often used in that sense. The addition, however, of little, seems clearly to evince, that they were not men, but young boys, who had been trained up in idolatry, and taught to despise the prophets of the Lord. They had heard that Elijah was "gone up" to heaven, and they insultingly bade Elisha follow him, that they might be rid of him also; and they reviled him for the baldness of his head. Thus they united the crimes of abusing him for a supposed bodily infirmity, contemptuous behaviour towards a venerable person, and enemity against him as the prophet of God. The sin therefore even of these children was very heinous: yet the greater guilt was chargeable on their parents; and their fate was a severe rebuke and awful warning to them. If the Spirit of God had not dictated Elisha's solemn curse of them, Providence would not have followed it with so terrible a judgment. The children of the city in general seem to have been present; and the insult was perhaps the effect of a preconcerted plan, to drive the sons of the prophets from Beth-el by ill treatment. The forty-two children, which were devoured, might be only a small part of the whole company, and perhaps they were the most guilty. However, the Judge of all the earth surely did right. Had he cut them off by a fever, no one would have

Jehoram's reign, 1. Mesha rebelleth, 4. Elisha obtaineth water and promise of victory, 20. The Moabites are overcome, 24.

A. M. 3098. B. C. 906.

NOW [a]Jehoram the son of Ahab began to reign over Israel in Samaria the eighteenth year of Jehoshaphat king of Judah, and reigned twelve years.

2 And he [b]wrought evil in the sight of the LORD; [c]but not like his father, and [d]like his mother: for he put away the *image of [e]Baal that his father had made.

3 Nevertheless [f]he cleaved unto the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat,[1] [g]which made Israel to sin; [h]he departed not therefrom.

4 ¶ And Mesha king of Moab was [i]a sheepmaster, and [k]rendered unto the king of Israel an hundred thousand lambs, and an hundred thousand rams, with the wool.

5 But it came to pass, when Ahab was dead, [l]that the king of Moab rebelled against the king of Israel.

6 ¶ And king Jehoram went out of Samaria the same time, and [m]numbered all Israel.

7 And he went and sent to Jehoshaphat the king of Judah, saying, The king of Moab hath rebelled against me: [n]wilt thou go with me against Moab to battle? And he said, I will go up: I am as thou art, my people as thy people, and my horses as thy horses.

8 And he said, Which way shall we go up? And he answered, The way through [o]the wilderness of Edom.[2]

9 So the king of Israel went, and the king of Judah, and [p]the king of Edom: and they fetched a compass of seven days' journey: and there was [q]no water for the host, and for the cattle [†]that followed them.

10 And the king of Israel said, Alas![3] that [r]the LORD hath called these three kings together, to deliver them into the hand of Moab!

11 But Jehoshaphat said, [s]Is there not here a prophet of the LORD, [t]that we may enquire of the LORD by him? And one of the king of Israel's servants answered and said, Here is Elisha the son of Shaphat, [u]which poured water on the hands of Elijah.

12 And Jehoshaphat said, [x]The word of the LORD is with him. So [y]the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat and the king of Edom went down to him.

13 And Elisha said unto the king of Israel, [z]What have I to do with thee? [a]get thee to [b]the prophets of thy father, and to the prophets of thy mother. And the king of Israel said unto him, [c]Nay: for the LORD hath called these three kings together, to deliver them into the hand of Moab.

14 And Elisha said, As the LORD of hosts liveth, before whom I stand, surely, were it not that [e]I regard the presence of Jehoshaphat the king of Judah, [f]I would not look toward thee, nor see thee.

15 But now [g]bring me a minstrel.[4] And it came to pass, when the minstrel played, that [h]the hand of the LORD came upon him.

16 And he said, Thus saith the LORD, [i]Make this valley full of ditches.

17 For thus saith the LORD, [k]Ye shall not see wind, neither shall ye see rain; yet that valley shall be filled with water, [l]that ye may drink, both ye, and your cattle, and your beasts.

18 And [m]this is but [n]a light thing in the sight of the LORD: [o]he will deliver the Moabites also into your hand.

19 And [p]ye shall smite every fenced city, and every choice city, and shall [q]fell every good tree,[5] and stop all wells of water, and [‡]mar every good piece of land with stones.

20 ¶ And it came to pass in the morning, [r]when the meat-offering was offered, that, behold, there came water by the way of Edom, and the country was [s]filled with water.

21 And when all the Moabites heard that the kings were come up to fight against them, they [t]gathered all that were able to [u]put on armour, and upward, and stood in the border.

22 And they rose up early in the morning, and the sun shone upon the water, and the Moabites saw the water on the other side as red as blood:

23 And they said, [v]This is blood: the kings are surely *slain, and they have smitten one another: [w]now therefore, Moab, to the spoil.

24 And when they came to the camp of Israel, the Israelites rose up and [x]smote the Moabites, so that they fled before them: but they [†]went forward smiting the Moabites, even in their country.

25 And they [y]beat down the cities, and on every good piece of land cast every man his stone, and filled it; and they [z]stopped all the wells of water, [a]and felled all the good trees: [‡]only in [b]Kir-haraseth[6] left they the stones thereof; howbeit the slingers went about it, and smote it.

26 ¶ And when the king of Moab saw that the battle was too sore for him, he took with him seven hundred men that drew swords, to break through even [c]unto the king of Edom: but they could not.

27 Then he took his eldest son that should have reigned in his stead, and [d]offered him for a burnt-offering upon the wall.[7] And there was great indignation against Israel: and [e]they departed from him, and returned to their own land.

objected to it: but, while the dispensation would have been as severe towards them, it would not have been suited in any adequate measure to make the same useful impression on the minds of the survivors, or to inculcate the same important instructions to other ages and nations, as this solemn sentence and immediate execution were.—It seems that the inhabitants of Beth-el were so overawed, that they no more ventured to molest Elisha or the sons of the prophets.—Scott.

CHAP. III. ELISHA IN PRESENCE OF KINGS.—1. He was very plain with the wicked king of Israel, ver. 13. "'What have I to do with thee?' How canst thou expect an answer of peace from me? 'Get thee to the prophets of thy father and mother,' whom thou hast countenanced and maintained in thy prosperity, and let them help thee now in thy distress." Elisha was not imposed upon, as Jehoshaphat was, by his partial and hypocritical reformation; he knew that, though he had put away the image of Baal, Baal's prophets were still dear to him, and perhaps some of them were now in his camp. "Go," said he, "go to them. Get you to the gods whom ye have served," Judg. x. 14. The world and the flesh have ruled you, let them help you: why should God be "inquired of by you?" Ezek. xiv. 3. Elisha tells him to his face, in a holy indignation at his wickedness, that he could scarcely find in his heart to "look toward him," or to "see him," ver. 14. Jehoram is to be respected as a prince, but, as a wicked man, he is a vile person, and is to be contemned, Ps. xv. 4. Elisha, as a subject, will honour him, but, as a prophet, he will make him to know his iniquity. For them that had such an extraordinary commission, it was fit (though not for a common person) to say to a king, "Thou art wicked," Job xxxiv. 18. Jehoram has so much self-command as to take it patiently; he cares not now for hearing of the prophets of Baal, but is a humble suitor to the God of Israel and his prophet, representing the present case as very deplorable, and humbly recommends it to the prophet's compassionate consideration. In effect he owns himself unworthy, but let not the other kings be ruined for his sake. 2. He showed a great respect to the godly king of Judah, "regarded his presence," and, for his sake, would "inquire of the Lord" for them all. It is good being with those that have God's favour, and his prophets' love. Wicked people often fare the better for the friendship and society of those that are godly. 3. He composed himself to receive instructions from God; his mind was somewhat ruffled and disturbed at the sight of Jehoram; though he was not put into a sinful heat or passion, nor had spoken unadvisedly, yet his zeal, for the present, indisposed him for prayer and the operations of the Spirit, which require a mind very calm and sedate. He therefore called for a musician, ver. 15, a devout musician, one accustomed to play upon his harp, and sing psalms to it. To hear God's praises sweetly sung, as David had appointed, would cheer his spirits, and settle his mind, and help to put him into a right frame, both to speak to him, and to hear from him. We find a company of prophets prophesying with "a psaltery and a tabret before them," 1 Sam. x. 5. Those that desire communion with God must keep their spirits quiet and serene. Elisha being refreshed, and having the tumult of his spirits laid by this divine music, "the hand of the Lord came upon him," and his visit did him more honour than that of three kings.

THE VICTORY OVER MOAB.—How easily the enemy were drawn into their own delusions: observe the steps of their self-deceit. 1. They saw the water in the valley where the army of Israel encamped, and conceited it was blood, ver. 22, because they knew it was a dry valley, and (there having been no rain) could not imagine it should be water. The sun shone upon it, and probably "the sky was red and lowering," a presage of "foul weather that day," Matt. xvi. 3, and so it proved to them. But this making the water look red, their own fancies, which made them willing to believe what made for them, suggested, "This is blood;" God permitting them thus to impose upon themselves. 2. If their camp was thus full of blood, they conclude, "Certainly the kings have fallen out, (as confederates of different interests are apt to do,) and they have 'slain one another,' ver. 23, for what else should slay them?" And, 3. If the armies have slain one another, we have nothing to do but to divide the prey. Now therefore, "Moab, to the spoil." These were the gradual suggestions of some sanguine spirits among them, that thought themselves wiser and happier in their conjectures than their neighbours; and the rest, being desirous it should be so, were forward to believe it was so. Quod volumus facile credimus—What we wish we readily believe. Thus they that are to be destroyed are first deceived, Rev. xx. 8, and none are so effectually deceived as those that deceive themselves. How fatally they thereby ran upon "their own destruction." They rushed carelessly into the camp of Israel, to plunder it, but were undeceived, when it was too late.—Henry.

BLOODY SUPERSTITION.—Ver. 27. It has been supposed that the king of Moab offered in sacrifice the eldest son of the king of Edom, whom he had taken prisoner: but the narrative does not admit of this interpretation. It is evident that he sacrificed his own eldest son, and the heir-apparent of his crown, to procure the assistance of his idols, or to avert their indignation. It has been thought that a tradition of Abraham's offering his son Isaac, nay, that even a distorted tradition concerning the sacrifice of the Redeemer, gave occasion to those horrid human sacrifices, which have been, and still are, very common in the Gentile world. But this at most could only be the occasion: the cause was twofold; the depravity and blindness of the human heart, and the subtlety and malignity of Satan; in whose worship, as directed by him, it must be a first prin-

CHAP. IV.

Elisha multiplieth the widow's oil, 1; he giveth a son to the Shunammite, 8; he raiseth her dead son, 18.

NOW there cried a certain woman of the wives of the [a]sons of the prophets unto Elisha, saying, Thy servant my husband is dead; and thou knowest that [b]thy servant did fear the LORD: and [c]the creditor is come to take unto him my two sons to be bondmen.[1]

2 And Elisha said unto her, [d]What shall I do for thee? tell me, what hast thou in the house? And she said, Thine handmaid hath not any thing in the house, [e]save a pot of oil.

3 Then he said, Go, borrow thee vessels abroad of all thy neighbours, even [f]empty vessels; [*]borrow not a few.

4 And when thou art come in, [g]thou shalt shut the door upon thee and upon thy sons, [h]and shalt pour out into all those vessels, and thou shalt set aside that which is full.

5 So [i]she went from him, and shut the door upon her and upon her sons, who brought the vessels to her; and she poured out.

6 And it came to pass, when [j]the vessels were full, that she said unto her son, Bring me yet a vessel. And he said unto her, There is not a vessel more. [k]And the oil stayed.

7 Then she came and told the man of God. And he said, Go, sell the oil, and [l]pay thy [†]debt, and live thou and thy children of the rest.

8 ¶ And [‡]it fell on a day, that Elisha passed to [m]Shunem, where was [n]a great woman; and [o]she [§]constrained him to eat bread. And so it was, that as oft as he passed by, he turned in thither to eat bread.

9 And [p]she said unto her husband, Behold now, I perceive that [q]this is an holy [r]man of God, which passeth by us continually.

10 [s]Let us make [t]a little chamber,[2] I pray thee, on the wall; and let us set for him there a bed, and a table, and a stool, and a candlestick: and it shall be, when he cometh to us, that he shall turn in thither.

11 And it fell on a day, that he came thither, and he turned into the chamber, and lay there.

12 And he said to [u]Gehazi his [v]servant, Call this Shunammite. And when he had called her, she stood before him.

13 And he said unto him, Say now unto her, Behold, [x]thou hast been careful for us with all this care; what is to be done for thee? wouldest thou be spoken for [y]to the king, or [z]to the captain of the host? And she answered, [a]I dwell [b]among mine own people.[3]

14 And he said, What then is to be done for her? And Gehazi answered, Verily, [c]she hath no child, and her husband is old.

15 And he said, Call her. And when he had called her, she stood in the door.

16 And he said, [d]About [‡]this season, according to the time of life,[4] [e]thou shalt embrace a son. And she said, Nay, [f]my lord, thou man of God, [g]do not lie unto thine handmaid.

17 And [h]the woman conceived, and bare a son at that season that Elisha had said unto her, according to the time of life.

18 ¶ And when the child was grown, it fell on a day, that he went out to his father [i]to the reapers.

19 And he said unto his father, [j]My head, my head. And he said to a lad, Carry him to his mother.

20 And when he had taken him, and brought him to [k]his mother, he sat on her knees till noon, [l]and then died.

21 And she went up, and laid him on [m]the bed of the man of God, and shut the door upon him, and went out.

22 And she called unto her husband, and said, Send me, I pray thee, one of the young men, and one of the asses, that [n]I may run to the man of God, and come again.

23 And he said, Wherefore wilt thou go to him to-day? it is neither [o]new moon nor sabbath. And she said, It shall be [*]well.

24 Then [p]she saddled an ass,[5] and said to her servant, [q]Drive, and go forward; [†]slack not thy riding for me, except I bid thee.

25 So she went and came unto the man of God [r]to mount Carmel. And it came to pass, when the man of God saw her afar off, that he said to Gehazi his servant, Behold, yonder is that Shunammite:

26 [s]Run now, I pray thee, to meet her, and say unto her, [t]Is it well with thee? is it well with thy husband? is it well with the child? And she answered, [u]It is well.[6]

27 And when she came to the man of God to the hill, she caught [‡]him [v]by the feet: but Gehazi came near to [x]thrust her away. And the man of God said, [y]Let her alone; for her soul is [§]vexed within her: [z]and the LORD hath hid it from me, and hath not told me.

28 Then she said, [a]Did I desire a son of my lord? did I not say, [b]Do not deceive me?

29 Then he said to Gehazi, [c]Gird up thy loins, and [d]take my staff in thine hand, and go thy way: if thou meet any man, [e]salute him not; [f]and if any salute thee, answer him not again: and [g]lay my staff upon the face of the child.

30 And the mother of the child said, [h]As the LORD liveth, and as thy soul liveth, [i]I will ciple, that the more costly, painful, unnatural, and cruel the oblation is, the more acceptable the sacrifice; because it best gratified his pride, envy, and malice. This horrid sacrifice the king of Moab offered in the sight of the combined armies, that they might see his desperate determination to endure and inflict all extremities, rather than be reduced: his remaining forces were thus fired with indignation against Israel; and perhaps Jehoshaphat and the king of Edom expressed their disapprobation of those severities which occasioned the dreadful deed. Thus the minds of the assailants being filled with horror, and their measures disconcerted, they retired without completing their design.—Scott.

CHAP. IV. THE POOR WIDOW.—Ver. 1. She was a prophet's widow; to whom, therefore, should she apply herself, but to him that was a father to the sons of the prophets, and concerned himself in the welfare of their families? It seems the prophets had wives, as well as the priests, though prophecy went not by entail, as the priesthood did. Marriage is honourable in all, and not inconsistent with the most sacred professions. Now, by the complaint of this poor woman, ver. 1, we are given to understand, 1. That her husband, being "one of the sons of the prophets," was well known to Elisha. Ministers of eminent gifts and stations should make themselves familiar with those that are, every way, their inferiors, and know their character and state. 2. That he had the reputation of a godly man. Elisha knew him to be one that feared the Lord, else he had been unworthy of the honour, and unfit for the work, of a prophet. He was one that kept his integrity in a time of general apostacy; one of the 7000 that had not bowed the knee to Baal. 3. That he was dead, though a good man, a good minister. The prophets—do they live for ever? They that were clothed with the Spirit of prophecy, were not thereby armed against the stroke of death. 4. That he died poor, and in debt more than he was worth. He did not contract his debts by prodigality, and luxury, and riotous living, for he was one that feared the Lord, and therefore durst not allow himself in such courses: nay, religion obliges men not to live above what they have, nor to spend more than what God gives them, no not in expenses otherwise lawful; for thereby, of necessity, they must disable themselves, at last, to give every one his own, and so prove guilty of a continued act of injustice all along: yet it may be the lot of those that fear God to be in debt, and insolvent, through afflictive providences, losses by sea, or bad debts, or their own imprudence, for the "children of light" are not always "wise for this world." Perhaps this prophet was impoverished by persecution: when Jezebel ruled, prophets had much ado to live, and especially if they had families. 5. That the creditors were very severe to her. Two sons she had, to be the support of her widowed state, and their labour is reckoned assets in her hand, that must go therefore, and they must be bondmen for seven years, Exod. xxi. 2, to work out this debt. Those that leave their families under a load of debt disproportionable to their estates, know not what trouble they entail. In this distress the poor widow goes to Elisha, in dependence upon the promise, that the seed of the righteous shall not be forsaken. The generation of the upright may expect help from God's providence, and countenance from his prophets. He effectually relieves this poor widow's distress, and puts her in a way both to pay her debt, and to maintain herself and her family. He did not say, "Be warmed, be filled;" but gave her real help. He did not give her some small matter for her present provision, but set her up in the world to sell oil, and put a stock into her hand to begin with. This was done by miracle, but it is an indication to us what is the best method of charity, and the greatest kindness one can do to poor people, which is, if possible, to help them into a way of improving what little they have, by their own industry and ingenuity.—Henry.

THE PROPHET'S CHAMBER.—Ver. 8—10. Elisha seems to have generally resided at or near mount Carmel: but he went his circuits through the land, to visit the seminaries of the prophets, and to instruct the people, which probably was his stated employment, when not sent on some special service. At Shunem there lived a woman of wealth and piety, who invited him to come to her house, and with some difficulty prevailed on him. But when he became acquainted with her character, he never failed to call upon her when he journeyed that way. Her husband seems to have been a pious person, but not so zealous and active as she was: and, as he confided his domestic affairs to her care, she is chiefly noticed. By his approbation she prepared for the prophet a retired lodging; perhaps perceiving that the hurry of a large family did not suit his contemplative mind.—The plain simple manner in which the prophet's chamber was furnished, (though he was the patriarch, if I may so speak, of the whole church of Israel,) is worthy of our notice. There was nothing provided for ornament or indulgence, but merely for necessity, for study, and for devotion.—Scott.

THE CHILD'S DEATH.—Here is the sudden death of the child, though so much a darling; he is so far past the perils of infancy, that he is able to go to the field to his father, who, no doubt, is pleased with his engaging talk, and his joy of his son is greater than the joy of his harvest; but either the cold or the heat of the open field overcame the child, that was bred tenderly; and he complains to the father that he had headaches, ver. 19. Whither should we go with our complaints, but to our heavenly Father? Thither the Spirit of adoption brings believers with all their grievances, all their desires, teaching them to cry, with groanings that cannot be uttered, "My head, not leave thee. And he arose, and followed her.

31 And Gehazi passed on before them, and laid the staff upon the face of the child: but there was [l]neither voice, nor [l]hearing. Wherefore he went again to meet him, and told him, saying, The child is [k]not awaked.

32 And when Elisha was come into the house, behold, [l]the child was dead, and laid upon his bed.

33 He went in therefore, and [m]shut the door upon them twain, and [n]prayed unto the LORD.

34 And he went up, and [o]lay upon the child, and put his mouth upon his mouth, and his eyes upon his eyes, and his hands upon his hands: and he stretched himself upon the child; and the flesh of the child waxed warm.

35 Then he returned,[s] and walked in the house [*]to and fro; and went up, and stretched himself upon him: and the child sneezed seven times, [p]and the child opened his eyes.

36 And he called Gehazi, and said, [q]Call this Shunammite. So he called her: and when she was come in unto him, he said, [r]Take up thy son.

37 Then she went in, and [s]fell at his feet, and bowed herself to the ground, and took up her son, and went out.

38 ¶ And Elisha [t]came again to Gilgal: and there was [u]a dearth in the land; and [x]the sons of the prophets [y]were sitting before him: and he said unto his servant, [z]Set on the great pot, and seethe pottage for the sons of the prophets.

39 And one went out into the field to gather herbs, and found [a]a wild vine,[9] and gathered thereof wild gourds his lap full, and came and shred them into the pot of pottage: for they knew them not.

40 So they poured out for the men to eat: and it came to pass, as they were eating of the pottage, that they cried out, and said, [b]O thou man of God, there is [c]death in the pot. And they could not eat thereof.

41 But he said, Then bring meal: [d]and he cast it into the pot; and he said, Pour out for the people, that they may eat. And [e]there was no [†]harm in the pot.

42 ¶ And there came a man from [f]Baal-shalisha, and brought the man of God [g]bread of the first-fruits, twenty loaves [h]of barley, and full ears of corn in [‡]the husk thereof. And he said, Give unto the people, that they may eat.

43 And [i]his servitor said, [k]What, should I set this before an hundred men?[10] He said again, Give the people, that they may eat: for thus saith the LORD, [l]They shall eat, and shall leave thereof.

44 So he set it before them, and they did eat, and left thereof, according to the word of the LORD.

NOW []Naaman, captain of the host of the king of Syria, was [b]a great man []with his master, and [†]honourable, because [c]by him the LORD had given [‡]deliverance unto Syria: he was also a mighty man in valour, but he was [d]a leper.

2 And the Syrians had gone out [*]by companies, and had brought away captive out of the land of Israel a little maid;[1] and [f]she [§]waited on Naaman's wife.

3 And she said unto her mistress, [g]Would God my lord were [l]with the prophet that is in Samaria! for [h]he would [*]recover him of his leprosy.

4 And one went in, [l]and told his lord, saying, Thus and thus said the maid that is of the land of Israel.

5 And the king of Syria said, [j]Go to, go, and I will send a letter unto the king of Israel. And he departed, [k]and took [†]with him ten talents of silver,[2] and six thousand pieces of gold, and [l]ten changes of raiment.

6 And he brought the letter to the king of Israel, saying, Now when this letter is come unto thee, behold, I have therewith sent Naaman my servant to thee, that thou mayest recover him of his leprosy.

7 And it came to pass, when the king of Israel had read the letter, [m]that he rent his clothes, and said, [n]Am I God, to kill and to make alive, that this man doth send unto me to recover a man of his leprosy? wherefore consider, I pray you, and [o]see how he seeketh a quarrel against me.

8 ¶ And it was so, when Elisha the man of God had heard that the king of Israel had [p]rent his clothes, that he sent to the king, saying, Wherefore hast thou rent thy clothes? [q]let him come now to me, [r]and he shall know that there is a prophet in Israel.

9 So [s]Naaman came with his horses and with his chariot, and stood at the door of the house of Elisha.

10 And Elisha [t]sent a messenger unto him, saying, Go and [u]wash in Jordan [x]seven times,[3] and [y]thy flesh shall come again to thee, and thou shalt be clean.

11 But [z]Naaman was wroth, and [a]went away, and said, [b]Behold, [‡]I thought, He will surely come out to me, and stand, and call on the name of the LORD his God, and [§]strike his hand over the place, and recover the leper.

my head;' my heart, my heart." The father sends him to his mother's arms, his mother's lap, little suspecting any danger in his indisposition, but hoping he will drop asleep in his mother's bosom, and awake well; but it proves fatal, he sleeps the sleep of death, ver. 20, well in the morning, and dead by noon, all the mother's care and tenderness cannot keep him alive; a child of promise, a child of prayer, and given in love, yet taken away: little children lie open to the arrests of sickness and death. But how admirably does the prudent pious mother guard her lips, under this surprising affliction! Not one peevish indecent word comes from her; she has a strong belief that the child will be raised to life again: like a genuine daughter of Abraham's faith, as well as loins, she accounts that God is able to raise him from the dead, for thence she "received him in a figure," Heb. xi. 19. She had heard of the raising of the widow's son of Sarepta, and that the spirit of Elijah rested on Elisha; and such confidence had she of God's goodness, that she was very ready to believe that he who so soon took away what he had given, would restore what he had now taken away; by this faith, "women received their dead raised to life," Heb. xi. 35. In this faith, she makes no preparation for the burial of her dead child, but for its resurrection; for she "lays him on the prophet's bed," ver. 21, expecting that he would stand her friend; "O woman, great is thy faith!" He that wrought it, would not frustrate it.—Henry.

ITS RESTORATION.—Ver. 33—35. It is instructive to compare the manner in which Elijah and Elisha wrought their miracles, especially in raising the dead, with that of Jesus Christ. Every part of their conduct expressed a consciousness of inability in themselves, and an entire dependence on another, and earnest application to him for his interposition: but Jesus wrought by his own power; he spake, and it was done; "Young man, I say unto thee, arise:" "Talitha cumi;" "Lazarus, come forth." On this occasion, Elisha, by his great attention, showed his earnest desire of restoring the child to his afflicted mother: and the actions which he employed were significant expressions of his expectation, that God, by communicating life to the body, would enable each part to perform its proper office. The recovery of the child was gradual: life was communicated, and then one symptom and another of it appeared. As his disorder had been in his head, it has been observed that his sneezing might remove the cause of it, and restore him to health also.—Scott.

POISON RENDERED HARMLESS.—Ver. 40. The guests complained to Elisha of the unwholesomeness of their food. Nature has given man the sense of tasting, not only that wholesome food may be pleasant, but that that which is unwholesome may be discovered before it comes to the stomach; the mouth tries meat by tasting it, Job xii. 11. This pottage was soon found, by the taste of it, to be dangerous, so that they cried out, "There is death in the pot," ver. 40. The table often becomes a snare, and that which should be for our welfare proves a trap, which is a good reason why we should not feed ourselves without fear; when we are receiving the supports and comforts of life, we must keep up an expectation of death, and a fear of sin. Elisha immediately cured the bad taste, and prevented the bad consequences, of this unwholesome pottage; as, before, he had healed the bitter waters with salt, so, now, the bitter broth with meal, ver. 41. It is probable that there was meal in it before, but that was put in by a common hand, only to thicken the pottage; this was the same thing, but cast in by Elisha's hand, and with intent to heal the pottage; by which it appears that the change was not owing to the meal, (that was the sign only, not the means,) but to the divine power. Now all was well, not only no death, but no harm, in the pot; we must acknowledge God's goodness in making our food wholesome and nourishing; "I am the Lord that healeth thee."—Henry.

CHAP. V. THE HEBREW CAPTIVE.—Ver. 3, 4. This young damsel, though a captive, and a slave to Naaman, having, it is likely, been treated with kindness, entertained a cordial affection for her master, and earnestly desired the removal of his affliction. She had heard of the piety and miracles of Elisha; and, though he had not cleansed any lepers, she was persuaded he would be inclined to show kindness even to a heathen, and be enabled to effect his cure. Nor did Naaman despise the information as coming from such a quarter. He had doubtless tried to the utmost what the physicians could do for him, but in vain; and his earnest desire of a cure prevented him from disdaining an application to the prophet of Israel. Either the prophet was at Samaria when the damsel was taken captive, or the adjacent district is meant.—Scott.

THE SIMPLE REMEDY.—We have here the cure of Naaman's leprosy. 1. The short and plain direction which the prophet gave him, with assurance of success. Naaman designed to do honour to Elisha, when he came in his chariot, and with all his retinue, to Elisha's door, ver. 9. They that showed little respect to prophets at other times, when they needed them, were very complaisant to them; he attended at Elisha's door as a beggar for an alms. They that would be cleansed from their spiritual leprosy must wait at "wisdom's gate, and watch at the posts of her doors." Naaman expected to have his compliment returned, but Elisha gave him his answer without any formality, would not go to the door to him, lest he should seem too much pleased with the honour done him, but sent a messenger to him, saying, "Go, wash in Jordan seven times," and promising him that if he did so, his disease should be cured. The promise was express, "Thou shalt be clean;" the method prescribed was plain, "Go, wash in Jordan;" this 14 Then [g]went he down, and dipped himself seven times in Jordan, [h]according to the saying of the man of God; and [i]his flesh came again like unto the flesh of a little child, [k]and he was clean.

15 ¶ And [l]he returned to the man of God, he and all his company, and came, and stood before him: and he said, Behold, [m]now I know that there is no God in all the earth, but in Israel: now therefore, I pray thee, take [n]a blessing of thy servant.

16 But he said, [o]As the LORD liveth, before whom I stand, [p]I will receive none. And he urged him to take it; but he refused.

17 And Naaman said, Shall there not then, I pray thee, be given to thy servant two mules' burden [q]of earth? [4] for thy servant [r]will henceforth offer neither burnt-offering, nor sacrifice, unto other gods, but unto the LORD.

18 In this thing the LORD pardon thy servant, that when my master goeth into the house of Rimmon to worship there, and he [s]leaneth on my hand, [t]and I bow myself in the house of Rimmon: when I bow down myself in the house of Rimmon, [u]the LORD pardon thy servant in this thing.

19 And [x]he said unto him, [y]Go in peace. So he departed from him a *little way.

20 ¶ But [z]Gehazi, the servant of Elisha the man of God, said, Behold, [a]my master hath spared Naaman this Syrian, in not receiving at his hands that which he brought; but, [b]as the LORD liveth, I will run after him, [c]and take somewhat of him.

21 So Gehazi followed after Naaman: and when Naaman saw him running after him, [d]he lighted down from the chariot to meet him, and said, †Is all well?

22 And he said, All is well. [e]My master hath sent me, saying, Behold, even now there be come to me from mount Ephraim two young men of [f]the sons of the prophets: [5] [g]give them, I pray thee, [h]a talent of silver, and two changes of garments.

23 And Naaman said, Be content, take two talents. [i]And he urged him, and [k]bound two talents of silver in two bags, with two changes of garments, and laid them upon two of his servants, [l]and they bare them before him.

24 And when he came to the ‡tower, he took them from their hand, [m]and bestowed them in the house: and he let the men go, and they departed.

25 But he went in, and [n]stood before his master. And Elisha said unto him, [o]Whence comest thou, Gehazi? And he said, [p]Thy servant went [3]no whither.

26 And [q]he said unto him, [r]Went not mine heart with thee, when the man turned again from his chariot to meet thee? [s]Is it a time to receive money, [6] and to receive garments, and oliveyards, and vineyards, and sheep, and oxen, and menservants, and maidservants?

27 The [t]leprosy therefore of Naaman shall cleave unto thee, and [u]unto thy seed for ever. And he went out from his presence [x]a leper as white as snow. [7]

CHAP. VI.

Elisha causeth iron to swim, 1; he discloseth the king of Syria's counsel, 8; and smiteth his army with blindness, 18.

AND [a]the sons of the prophets said unto Elisha, Behold now, [b]the place where we dwell with thee [1] is [c]too strait for us.

2 Let us go, we pray thee, unto Jordan, [d]and take thence every man a beam, and let us make us a place there, where we may dwell. And he answered, Go ye.

3 And one said, [e]Be content, I pray thee, and [f]go with thy servants. And he answered, I will go.

4 So he went with them. And when they came to Jordan, [g]they cut down wood.

5 But as one was felling a beam, the *axe head fell into the water: and he cried and said, [h]Alas, master! [i]for it was borrowed. [2]

6 And the man of God said, Where fell it? And he shewed him the place. And he [k]cut down a stick, and cast it in thither; and the iron did swim.

7 Therefore said he, [l]Take it up to thee. And he [m]put out his hand, and took it.

8 ¶ Then [n]the king of Syria warred against Israel, and [o]took counsel with his servants, saying, In such and such a place shall be my †camp.

9 And the man of God sent unto the king of Israel, saying, [p]Beware that thou pass not such a place; for [q]thither the Syrians are come down.

10 And the king of Israel [r]sent to the place, which the man of God told him and [s]warned him of, and [t]saved himself there, not once nor twice.

11 ¶ Therefore [u]the heart of the king of Syria was sore troubled for this thing; and he called his servants, and said unto them, [x]Will ye not shew me which of us is for the king of Israel?

was not intended as any means of the cure; though cold bathing is recommended by many as a very wholesome thing; yet some think that in the case of a leprosy it was rather hurtful; but it was intended as a sign of the cure, and a trial of his obedience; they that will be helped of God must do as they are bidden. But why did Elisha send a messenger to him with these directions? 1. Because he was retired at this time for devotion, was intent upon his prayers for the cure and would not be diverted; or, 2. Because he knew Naaman to be a proud man, and he would let him know that before the great God all men stand upon the same level.—Henry.

NAAMAN'S PRIDE.—Ver. 13, 14. This Syrian was favoured with very prudent, respectful, and affectionate servants; and probably he was in general a kind and considerate master, who could bear to be reasoned with by his inferiors. They had, it may be supposed, heard a great deal from the Israelitish maid of Elisha's miracles; and were very desirous that Naaman should make the trial. Being more calm and impartial than he, they perceived that the prophet's directions were simple, easy, and safe. Had the prophet prescribed nauseous medicines, a tedious regimen, or some painful operations, or even some burdensome religious observances; or had he demanded a large sum of money as the price of the cure; they knew that Naaman would have complied without hesitation: how much more then ought he, in reason to go to Jordan, and wash seven times in its waters? This remonstrance was "a word spoken in due season," and had its full effect: and his cure immediately followed on his obedience; so that the decayed and loathsome parts of his skin and flesh became perfectly sound, and assumed the healthful appearance of the flesh of a child.—"This is the only cure of a leprosy that we read of till Christ came into the world."—Scott.

HIS SUPERSTITION.—In one instance he overdid it, that he would not only worship the God of Israel, but he would have clods of earth out of the prophet's garden, or at least of the prophet's ordering, to "make an altar of," ver. 17. He that, a while ago, had spoken very slightly of the "waters" of Israel, ver. 12, now is in another extreme, and overvalues the "earth" of Israel, supposing (since God appointed "altars of earth," Exod. xx. 24,) an altar of that earth would be most acceptable to him; not considering that all "the earth is the Lord's, and the fulness thereof." Or, perhaps, the transport of his affection and veneration for the prophet, not only upon the account of his power, but of his virtue and generosity, made him, as we say, love the very ground he went upon, and desire to have some of it home with him. The modern compliment equivalent to this would be, "Pray, sir, let me have your picture." 2. In another instance he underdid it, that he reserved to himself a liberty to bow in the house of Rimmon, in complaisance to the king his master, and according to the duty of his place at court, ver. 18, "in this thing" he must be excused. He owns he ought not to do it, but that he cannot otherwise keep his place; protests his bowing is not, nor ever shall be as it had been, in honour to the idol, but only in honour to the king; and therefore he hopes God will forgive him. Perhaps, all things considered, this might admit of some apology, though it was not altogether justifiable.—Henry.

GEHAZI.—Ver. 20. Gehazi deemed Elisha foolish to miss so fair an opportunity of enriching himself, having a right to Naaman's money in return for the cure. But he would not be so scrupulous; and with a solemn oath—even when speaking to himself, which in this case was peculiarly profane—he declared that he would take somewhat of him. To accomplish his covetous purpose, he soon devised a plausible lie: and Naaman's heart was so affected, by the benefit which he had obtained, that he treated even the prophet's servant with the greatest respect, and pressed his acceptance of a larger sum than he petitioned for. In this manner Gehazi appropriated above seven hundred pounds sterling in silver, which he secreted in some convenient place; and he then returned to Elisha with another direct falsehood, as if he could have deceived God, as well as his prophet. His whole conduct was wicked in a most aggravated degree: he did what he could to disgrace the God of Israel, and to misrepresent his religion: he behaved in a manner most injurious to his master's character: and he not only robbed Naaman of his property, but he took the most effectual method imaginable to prejudice him against the prophet, and to induce him to return to idolatry. Ver. 26, 27. The Spirit of God showed Elisha what had passed, as plainly as if he had witnessed the whole transaction.—We may suppose that Gehazi was scheming how to lay out his money, in purchasing an oliveyard, or vineyard, that he might exchange the service of Elisha for a more profitable occupation. And so he might: but it would be under the stigma and misery of a rooted leprosy, entailed upon his posterity in perpetuity, or as long as one of them remained.—Scott.

CHAP. VI. IRON FLOATING MIRACULOUSLY.—Ver. 1—7. Probably, this event occurred either at Gilgal or Jericho, both of which were near Jordan.—Under Elisha's superintendency the schools of the prophets flourished, and doubtless true religion revived and spread in proportion: but it is not certain whether the building intended was a place of assembly, where the prophets met for religious exercises with other pious Israelites; or whether they purposed to live together in it, with their families, as a collected body separate from others. When, however, they were straitened for room, they did not depend on others to prepare them a more convenient or spacious building; but they proposed to fill up the intervals of their time in manual labour, and prepare one 12 And one of his servants said, ‡None, my lord, O king: but ʸElisha, the prophet that is in Israel, ᶻtelleth the king of Israel the words that thou speakest in ᵃthy bedchamber.

13 ¶ And he said, Go and ᵇspy where he is, that I may send and fetch him. And it was told him, saying, Behold, he is in ᶜDothan.[3]

14 Therefore ᵈsent he thither horses, and chariots, and a §great host: and they came by night, and compassed the city about.

15 ¶ And when the ǁservant of the man of God was risen early, and gone forth, behold, an host compassed the city, both with horses and chariots: and his servant said unto him, ᵉAlas, my master! how shall we do?

16 And he answered, ᶠFear not: for ᵍthey that be with us are more than they that be with them.

17 And Elisha ʰprayed, and said, LORD, I pray thee, ⁱopen his eyes, that he may see.[4] And the LORD opened the eyes of the young man; and he saw: and, behold, the mountain was ᵏfull of horses and chariots of fire round about Elisha.

18 ¶ And when they came down to him, Elisha prayed unto the LORD, and said, ˡSmite this people, I pray thee, with blindness.[5] And he smote them with blindness according to the word of Elisha.

19 And Elisha said unto them, This is not the way, neither is this the city: *follow me, and ᵐI will bring you to the man whom ye seek. But he led them to Samaria.

20 And it came to pass, when they were come into Samaria, that Elisha said, LORD, ⁿopen the eyes of these men, that they may see. And the LORD ᵒopened their eyes, and they saw; and, behold, they were in the midst of Samaria.

21 And the king of Israel said unto Elisha, when he saw them, ᵖMy father, ᵠshall I smite them? shall I smite them?

22 And he answered, Thou shalt not smite them: ʳwouldest thou smite those whom thou hast taken captive with ˢthy sword, and with thy bow? ᵗSet bread and water before them, that they may eat and drink, and go to their master.

23 And ᵘhe prepared great provision for them, and when they had eaten and drunk, he sent them away, and they went to their master. ᵛSo the bands of Syria came no more into the land of Israel.[6]

24 ¶ And it came to pass after this, that Ben-hadad king of Syria ˣgathered all his host, and went up, and besieged Samaria.

25 And there was ʸa great famine in Samaria: and, behold, they besieged it, until ᶻan ass's head was sold for fourscore pieces of silver, and the fourth part of a cab of dove's dung[7] for five pieces of silver.

26 ¶ And as the king of Israel was passing by upon the wall, there cried a woman unto him, saying, *Help, my lord, O king.

27 And he said, †If the LORD do not help thee, ᵇwhence shall I help thee? out of the barnfloor, or out of the winepress?

28 And the king said unto her, ᶜWhat aileth thee? And she answered, This woman said unto me, ᵈGive thy son that we may eat him to-day, and we will eat my son tomorrow.

29 So we boiled my son, and did eat him: and I said unto her on the ‡next day, Give thy son, that we may eat him; and ᵉshe hath hid her son.

30 ¶ And it came to pass, when the king heard the words of the woman, that ᶠhe rent his clothes; and he passed by upon the wall, and the people looked, and behold he had sackcloth within upon his flesh.

31 Then he said, ᵍGod do so, and more also to me, ʰif the head of Elisha the son of Shaphat shall stand on him this day.

32 But Elisha sat in his house,[8] and ⁱthe elders sat with him; and the king sent a man from before him: but ᵏere the messenger came to him, he said to the elders, ˡSee ye how this ᵐson of a murderer hath sent to take away mine head? look when the messenger cometh, shut the door, and hold him fast at the door: is not ⁿthe sound of his master's feet behind him?

33 And while he yet talked with them, behold, the messenger came down unto him: and he said, Behold, ᵒthis evil is of the LORD; what should I ᵖwait for the LORD any longer?

for themselves; and probably they were accustomed to work at other times, that the people might not be burdened. But they would not go to hew timber for this purpose without Elisha's permission; and they desired his company, to sanction their attempt, and to solace their toil by his edifying conversation; to which he willingly consented. —Perhaps they were not very skilful about their work, and some of their tools were borrowed; so that an axe-head falling into the water, proved a cause of anxiety to one of them; as it seems he was not well able to make it good, and the owner could not afford to lose it. In so small a matter, the Lord was pleased to work a miracle, to compose the young prophet's mind, to put honour upon Elisha, to enable the company to proceed with their work, and to encourage their faith and hope!—The stick cast into the water was the token of the Lord's operation; and it is useless to inquire in what way he made the iron to swim.—Scott.

ELISHA'S PROTECTION.—Ver. 17. We are here told of the grievous fright which the prophet's servant was in when he perceived the city surrounded by the Syrians, and the effectual course which the prophet took to pacify him, and free him from his fears. It seems Elisha used his servant to rise early, that is the way to bring something to pass, and to do the work of a day in its day. Being up, we may suppose he heard the noise of soldiers, and thereupon looked out, and was aware of an army compassing the city, ver. 15, with great assurance, no doubt, of success; and that they should have this troublesome prophet in their hands presently. Now observe, 1. What a consternation he was in; he runs straight to Elisha to bring him an account of it, "'Alas, master,'" (said he,) "'what shall we do?' We are undone; it is to no purpose to think either of fighting or flying, but we must unavoidably fall into their hands." Had he but studied David's Psalms, which were then extant, he might have learnt "not to be afraid of ten thousands of people," Ps. iii. 6, no, not of "an host encamped against him," Ps. xxvii. 3. Had he considered that he was embarked with his master, by whom God had done great things, and whom he would not now leave to "fall into the hands of the uncircumcised," and who, having saved others, no doubt would save himself, he had not been thus at a loss. If he had only said, "What shall I do?" it had been the more excusable, and like that of the disciples, "Lord, save us, we perish;" but he needed not to put his master in, as in [illegible] to say, "What shall we do?" 2. How his master quieted him, (1.) By [illegible] he said to him, ver. 16, in answer to all the faithful servants of God, when [illegible] "Fear not,' with that fear which has [illegible] (2.) By [illegible] the causes of our fear, we ought to possess ourselves with clear, and great, and high thoughts of God, and the invisible world. "If God be for us," we know what follows, Rom. viii. 31. (2.) By vision, ver. 17. [1.] It seems Elisha was much concerned for the satisfaction of his servant. Good men desire, not only to be easy themselves, but to have those about them easy. Elisha had lately parted with his old man, and this, being newly come into his service, had not the advantage of experience; his master was therefore desirous to give him other convincing proofs of that Omnipotence which employed him, and was therefore employed for him. Note, They whose faith is strong, ought tenderly to consider and compassionate those who are weak, and of a timorous spirit, and to do what they can to strengthen their hands. [2.] He saw himself safe, and wished no more than that his servant might see what he saw, a guard of angels round about him; such as were his master's convoy to the gates of heaven were his protectors against the gates of hell; "chariots of fire, and horses of fire." Fire is both dreadful and devouring; that power which was engaged for Elisha's protection could both terrify and consume the assailants. As angels are God's messengers, so they are his soldiers, his hosts, Gen. xxxii. 2, his legions, or regiments, Matt. xxvi. 53, for the good of his people.—Henry.

JEHORAM'S HOSTILITY TO ELISHA.—Ver. 32. Either Elisha had denounced this judgment upon Jehoram for his sins, or Jehoram supposed that it was sent in answer to his prayers; or he thought the prophet could help him if he would; or he blamed him for inducing him to dismiss the Syrian army when in his power; or perhaps Elisha had counselled him in the name of the Lord to hold out the siege, and that he should be delivered. His rage, however, against God, vented itself in [illegible] violence to his faithful servant. Ver. 32, 33. Elisha lodged at Samaria at that time, probably in the school of the prophets, sharing the hardships of that city; and the elders had resorted to him to entreat his prayers, or to desire his counsel, [illegible] revealed to him Jehoram's intentions: and Elisha called him, "the son of a murderer," as proving himself the genuine offspring of Ahab and Jezebel, who slew the [illegible] prophets, and murdered Naboth. At his desire the messenger of Jehoram [illegible] out, till his master, who followed him, perhaps to countermand his order. [illegible] And when he was entered, and perhaps exhorted to hope for deliverance, [illegible] blasphemous manner answered, that the calamity was from the Lord, [illegible] deliver them, and that it was vain to wait for him any longer. [illegible] to infer, that he might as well put Elisha to death, and [illegible] out further [illegible] that [illegible] Scott.

4 If we say, [k]We will enter into the city, then the famine is in the city, and we shall die there: and if we sit still here, we die also. Now therefore come, and [l]let us fall unto the host of the Syrians: [m]if they save us alive, we shall live; and if they kill us, [n]we shall but die.

5 And they rose up [o]in the twilight, to go unto the camp of the Syrians: and when they were come to the uttermost part of the camp of Syria, [p]behold, there was no man there.

6 For [q]the LORD had made the host of the Syrians to hear a noise of chariots, and a noise of horses, even the noise of a great host: and they said one to another, Lo, the king of Israel hath hired against us [r]the kings of the Hittites,[1] and [s]the kings of the Egyptians, to come upon us.

7 Wherefore [t]they arose and fled in the twilight, and left their tents, and [u]their horses, and their asses, even the camp as it was, [x]and fled for their life.[2]

8 And when these lepers came to the uttermost part of the camp, they went into one tent, and did eat and drink, and carried thence silver, and gold, and raiment, and went and [y]hid it; and came again, and entered into another tent, and carried thence also, and went and hid it.

9 Then [z]they said one to another, We do not well; [a]this day is a day of good tidings, and we hold our peace: if we tarry till the morning light, [†]some [b]mischief will come upon us: now therefore come, that we may go and tell the king's household.

10 So they came and called unto [c]the porter of the city: and they told them, saying, We came to the camp of the Syrians, and, behold, there was [d]no man there, neither voice of man, but horses tied, and asses tied, and the tents as they were.

11 And he called the porters; and they told it to the king's house within.

12 ¶ And the king arose in the night, and said [e]unto his servants, [f]I will now shew you what the Syrians have done to us. They know [g]that we be hungry; therefore are they gone out of the camp to [h]hide themselves in the field, saying, When they come out of the city, we shall catch them alive, and get into the city.

13 And [i]one of his servants answered and said, Let some take, I pray thee, five of the horses that remain, which are left [‡]in the city, (behold, they are as all the multitude of Israel[3] that are left in it: behold, I say, [k]they are even as all the multitude of the Israelites that are consumed:) and let us send and see.

14 They took therefore two chariot horses; and the king sent after the host of the Syrians, saying, Go and see.

15 And they went after them unto Jordan: and, lo, all the way was full of garments and [l]vessels, which the Syrians [m]had cast away in their haste. And the messengers returned and told the king.

16 And the people went out, and [n]spoiled the tents of the Syrians. So a measure of fine flour was sold for a shekel, and two measures of barley for a shekel, [o]according to the word of the LORD.

17 ¶ And the king appointed [p]the lord on whose hand he leaned to have the charge of the gate: and [q]the people trode upon him[4] in the gate, and he died, as the man of God had said, who spake when the king came down to him.

18 And it came to pass [r]as the man of God had spoken to the king, saying, Two measures of barley for a shekel, and a measure of fine flour for a shekel, shall be to-morrow about this time in the gate of Samaria:

19 And that lord answered the man of God, and said, Now, behold, if the LORD should make windows in heaven, might such a thing be? And he said, Behold, thou shalt see it with thine eyes, but shalt not eat thereof.

20 And [s]so it fell out unto him: for the people trode upon him in the gate, and he died.

2 And the woman arose, and did after the saying of the man of God: and she went [f]with her household, and sojourned in [g]the land of the Philistines seven years.

3 And it came to pass, at the seven years' end, that the woman returned out of the land of the Philistines: and [h]she went forth to cry[2] unto the king for her house and for her land.

CHAP. VII. THE LEPERS.—These lepers reasoned themselves into a resolution to make a visit in the night to the camp of the Syrians, ver. 3, 4. They were ready to perish for hunger, none passed through the gate to relieve them; should they go into the city, there was nothing to be had there, they must die in the streets; should they sit still, they must pine to death in their cottage; they therefore determine to go over to the enemy, and throw themselves upon their mercy; if they killed them, better die by the sword than by famine, one death than a thousand: but perhaps they would save them alive, as objects of compassion: common prudence will put us upon that method which may mend our condition, but cannot make it worse. The prodigal son resolves to return to his father, whose displeasure he had reason to fear, rather than perish with hunger in the far country. These lepers conclude, "If they kill us, we shall but die;" and happy they who, in another sense, can thus speak of dying; "We shall but die, that is the worst of it, not die and be damned, not be hurt of the second death." According to this resolution, they went, in the beginning of the night, to the camp of the Syrians, and, to their great surprise, found it wholly deserted, not a man to be seen or heard in it, ver. 5. Providence ordered it, that these lepers came as soon as ever the Syrians were fled, for they fled in the twilight, (the evening twilight,) ver. 7, and in the twilight the lepers came, ver. 5, and so no time was lost. How they reasoned themselves into a resolution to bring tidings of this to the city; they feasted in the first tent they came to, ver. 8, and then began to think of enriching themselves with the plunder; but they correct themselves, ver. 9, "'We do not do well,' to conceal those good tidings from the community we are members of, under colour of being avenged upon them, for excluding us their society; it was the law that did it, not they, and therefore let us bring them the news; though it awake them from sleep, it will be "life from the dead" to them.

THE PROMISED PLENTY.—Plenty was in Samaria from the plunder of the camp of the Syrians, ver. 16. Had the Syrians been governed by the modern policies of war, when they could not take their baggage and their tents with them, they would rather have burnt them, (as it is common to do with the forage of a country,) than let them fall into their enemies' hands; but God intended that the besieging of Samaria, which was intended for its ruin, should turn to its advantage, and that Israel should now be enriched with the spoil of the Syrians, as of old with those of the Egyptians. Here see, 1. The "wealth of the sinner laid up for the just," Job xxvii. 16, 17, and the spoilers spoiled, Isa. xxxiii. 1. 2. The wants of Israel supplied in a way that they little thought of, which should encourage us to depend upon the power and goodness of God in our greatest straits. 3. The word of Elisha fulfilled, to a tittle, "a measure of fine flour was sold for a shekel;" they that spoiled the camp had not only enough to supply themselves with, but an overplus to sell at an easy rate for the benefit of others; and so even "they that tarried at home did divide the spoil," Ps. lxi. 12; Isa. xxxiii. 23. God's promise may be safely relied on, for no word of his shall fall to the ground.

DEATH OF THE SCOFFER.—This lord, 1. Was preferred by the king to the "charge of the gate," ver. 17, to keep the peace, and to see that there was no tumult or disorder in dividing and disposing of the spoil: so much trust did the king repose in him, and in his prudence and gravity, and so much did he delight to honour him; he that will be great, let him serve the public. 2. Was trodden to death by the people in the gate, either by accident, the crowd being exceedingly great, and he in the thickest of it, or perhaps designedly, because he abused his power, and was imperious, in restraining the people from satisfying their hunger: however it was, God's justice was glorified, and the word of Elisha was fulfilled; he saw the plenty, for the silencing and shaming of his unbelief, corn cheap, without "opening windows in heaven," and therein saw his own folly in prescribing to God: but he did not eat of the plenty he saw; "when he was about to fill his belly," God "cast the fury of his wrath upon him," Job xx. 23, and it came between the cup and the lip. Justly are those thus tantalized with the world's promises that think themselves tantalized with the promises of God; if believing shall not be seeing, seeing shall not be enjoying.—Henry.

CHAP. VIII. HAZAEL.—Ver. 8. What passed between Hazael and Elisha is especially remarkable. 1. Elisha answered his inquiry concerning the king, that he might recover, the disease was not mortal, but that he should die another way, ver. 10, not a natural, but a violent death; there are many ways out of the world, and sometimes, when men think to avoid one, they fall by another. 2. He looked Hazael in the face with an unusual concern, till he made Hazael blush, and himself weep, ver. 11. The man of God could outface the man of war. It was not in Hazael's countenance that Elisha read what he would do, but God did, at this time, reveal it to him, and it fetched tears from his eyes: the more foresight men have, the more grief they are liable to. 3. When Hazael asked him why he wept, he told him what a great deal of mischief he foresaw he would do the Israel of God, ver. 12, what desolations he would make of their strong-holds, and barbarous destruction of their men, women, and children. The sins of Israel provoked God to give them up into the hands of their cruel enemies, yet Elisha wept to think that ever Israelites should be thus abused; for though he foretold, he did not desire, the woful day. See what havock war makes, what havock sin makes, and how the nature of man is changed by the fall, and stript even of humanity itself.

had restored to life, cried to the king for her house and for her land. And Gehazi said, [o]My lord, O king, this is the woman, and this is her son, whom Elisha restored to life.

6 And when the king asked the woman, she told him. So the king appointed unto her a certain *officer, saying, [p]Restore all that was hers, and all the fruits of the field since the day that she left the land, even until now.

7 ¶ And Elisha came to [q]Damascus; and [r]Ben-hadad the king of Syria was sick; and it was told him, saying, [s]The man of God [t]is come hither.

8 And the king said unto Hazael, [u]Take a present in thine hand,[4] and go, meet the man of God, and [x]enquire of the LORD by him, saying, Shall I recover of this disease?

9 So [y]Hazael went to meet him, and took a present [†]with him, even of every good thing of Damascus, forty camels' burden, and came and stood before him, and said, [a]Thy son Ben-hadad king of Syria hath sent me to thee, saying, Shall I recover of this disease?

10 And Elisha said unto him, Go, say unto him, Thou mayest certainly recover:[5] howbeit [b]the LORD hath shewed me that [c]he shall surely die.

11 And he settled his countenance[6] [‡]stedfastly, until he was ashamed: and the man of God [d]wept.

12 And Hazael said, Why weepeth [e]my lord? And he answered, Because I know [f]the evil that thou wilt do unto the children of Israel: their strongholds wilt thou set on fire, and their young men wilt thou slay with the sword, and wilt [g]dash their children, and rip up their women with child.

13 And Hazael said, But what, is thy servant [h]a dog, that [i]he should do this great thing? And Elisha answered, [k]The LORD hath shewed me that thou shalt be king over Syria.

14 So he departed from Elisha, and came to his master; who said to him, What said Elisha to thee? And he answered, [l]He told me that thou shouldest surely recover.

15 And [m]it came to pass [n]on the morrow, that he took a thick cloth,[7] and dipped it in water, and spread it on his face, [o]so that he died: and [p]Hazael reigned in his stead.

16 ¶ And in the fifth year of Joram the son of Ahab king of Israel, Jehoshaphat being then king of Judah, [q]Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat king of Judah [§]began to reign.

17 Thirty and two years old was he when he began to reign; and he reigned eight years in Jerusalem.

18 And he walked [r]in the way of the kings of Israel, as did [s]the house of Ahab: for [t]the daughter of Ahab was [u]his wife: and he did evil in the sight of the LORD.

19 Yet the LORD would not destroy Judah [x]for David his servant's sake, as he promised him to give him alway [‖]a light, and to his children.

20 ¶ In his days [y]Edom revolted from under the hand of Judah, and [z]made a king over themselves.

21 So Joram went over to Zair,[8] and all the chariots with him: and he rose by night, and smote the Edomites which compassed him about, and the captains of the chariots: and the people fled into their tents.

22 Yet [a]Edom revolted from under the hand of Judah unto this day. Then [b]Libnah[9] revolted at the same time.

23 ¶ And the [c]rest of the acts of Joram, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

24 And Joram [d]slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David: and [e]Ahaziah his son reigned in his stead.

25 ¶ In the [f]twelfth year of Joram the son of Ahab king of Israel did Ahaziah the son of Jehoram king of Judah begin to reign.

26 [g]Two and twenty years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign; and he reigned [h]one year in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was [i]Athaliah,[10] the *daughter of Omri king of Israel.

27 And [k]he walked in the way of the house of Ahab, and did evil in the sight of the LORD, as did the house of Ahab: for he was [l]the son-in-law of the house of Ahab.

28 ¶ And [m]he went with Joram the son of Ahab to the war against [n]Hazael king of Syria in [o]Ramoth-gilead; and the Syrians wounded Joram.

29 And king [p]Joram went back to be healed in Jezreel of the wounds [†]which the Syrians had given him at [‡]Ramah, when he fought against Hazael king of Syria. And [q]Ahaziah, the son of Jehoram king of Judah, went down to see Joram the son of Ahab in Jezreel, because he was [§]sick.

4. Hazael is greatly surprised at this prediction, ver. 13, "What," says he, "is thy servant a dog, that he should do this great thing?" This great thing he looks upon to be, (1.) An act of great power, not to be done but by a crowned head; it must be some mighty potentate that can think to prevail thus against Israel, and therefore not I; many are raised to that dominion which they never thought of, and it often proves "to their own hurt," Eccl. viii. 9. (2.) An act of great barbarity, which could not be done but by one lost to all honour and virtue: "Therefore," says he, "it is what I shall never find in my heart to be guilty of; 'Is thy servant a dog,' to rend, and tear, and devour? Unless I were a dog, I could not do it."

HIS TREACHERY.—1. He basely cheated his master, and belied the prophet, ver. 14. "He told me thou shouldest certainly recover;" this was abominably false, he told him he should die, ver. 10, but he unfairly and unfaithfully concealed that, either because he was loath to put the king out of humour with bad news, or because hereby he might the more effectually carry that bloody design, which he conceived when he was told he should be his successor. The devil ruins men, by telling they shall certainly recover and do well, so rocking them asleep in security, than which nothing is more fatal; this was an injury to the king, who lost the benefit of this warning to prepare for death, and an injury to Elisha, who would be counted a false prophet, 2. He barbarously murdered his master, and so made good the prophet's word, ver. 15. He dipped a thick cloth in cold water, and spread that upon his face, under pretence of cooling and refreshing him, but so that it stopped his breath, and stifled him presently, he being weak, (and not able to help himself,) or perhaps asleep; such a bubble is the life of the greatest of men, and so much exposed are princes to violence. Hazael, who was Ben-hadad's confidant, is his murderer, and, some think, was not suspected, nor did it ever come out but by the pen of this inspired historian. We found this haughty monarch, 1 Kings xx. "the terror of the mighty in the land of the living," but he "goes down slain to the pit" with "his iniquity upon his bones," Ezek. xxxii. 27.

PROVIDENCE.—We see here the gracious care of Providence for the keeping up of the kingdom of Judah and the house of David, notwithstanding the apostacies and calamities of Jehoram's reign, ver. 19. "Yet the Lord would not destroy Judah;" he could easily have done it, he might justly have done it, it would have been no loss to him to have done it; yet he would not do it, for David's sake, not for the sake of any merit of his which could challenge this favour to his family as a debt, but for the sake of a promise made to him, that he should always have a lamp, that is, a succession of kings from one generation to another; by which his name should be kept bright and illustrious, as a lamp is kept burning by a constant fresh supply of oil; thus his family was not to be extinct, till it terminated in the Messiah, that Son of David on whom was to be "hung all the glory of his Father's house," and in whose everlasting kingdom that promise to David is fulfilled, Ps. cxxxii. 17, "I have ordained a lamp for mine anointed." Ver. 23, 24. Nothing peculiar is here said of him; but we are told, 2 Chron. xxi. 19, 20, that he "died of sore diseases," and "died without being desired."

AHAZIAH, KING OF JUDAH.—Ahaziah, king of Israel had reigned but two years. Ahaziah king of Judah reigned but one. We are here told that his relation to Ahab's family was the occasion. 1. Of his wickedness, ver. 27. "He walked in the way of the house of Ahab," that idolatrous bloody house; for his mother was Ahab's daughter, ver. 26. So that he sucked in wickedness with his milk. Partus sequitur ventrem—The child may be expected to resemble the mother. When men choose wives for themselves, they must remember they are choosing mothers for their children, and are concerned to choose accordingly. 2. Of his fall; Joram, his mother's brother, courted him to join with him for the recovery of Ramoth-Gilead, an attempt fatal to Ahab; so it was to Joram his son, for in that expedition he was wounded, ver. 28, and returned to Jezreel to be cured, leaving his army there in possession of the place. Ahaziah was likewise returned, but went to Jezreel, to see how Jehoram did, ver. 29. Providence so ordered it, that he who had been debauched by the house of Ahab, might be cut off with them, when the measure of their iniquity was full, as we shall find in the next chapter. They who partake with sinners in their sin, must expect to partake with them in their plagues.—Henry.

CHAP. IX. JEHU.—Ver. 5—10. Jehu was engaged in converse or consultation with the other captains, when thus addressed by a person, it is probable, of mean appearance: yet he readily complied with his desire, and went aside with him to learn his errand. And immediately the prophet anointed him, explaining the meaning of that transaction, and gave him an express commission from God. In all this, no doubt, he exactly adhered to his instructions.—Israel, though generally idolatrous, was still "the people of the LORD." They were called by his name, and had a remnant of his worshippers among them: and Jehu was thus warned to use his authority in obedience to God, and to promote true religion. The family and adherents of Ahab were criminals condemned by the supreme Judge; Jehu was appointed to execute the sentence; the kingdom was his recompense for the service: and, as far as he acted according to the instructions given him, he needed not fear contracting guilt, or regard any reproach or opposition to which he might be exposed. The murder of the prophets and worshippers of God was more insisted upon, in this indictment, than even

3 Then take the box of oil,[1] and [s]pour it on his head, and say, Thus saith the LORD, [a]I have anointed thee king over Israel. Then open the door, [t]and flee, and tarry not.

4 ¶ So the young man, even the young man the prophet, went to Ramoth-gilead.

5 And when he came, behold, the captains of the host were sitting; and he said, [j]I have an errand to thee, O captain. And Jehu said, Unto which of all us? And he said, To thee, O captain.

6 And [k]he arose, and went into the house; and he poured the oil on his head, and said unto him, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, [l]I have anointed thee king [m]over the people of the LORD, even over Israel.

7 And thou shalt smite the house of Ahab thy master, that [n]I may avenge the blood of my servants the prophets, and the blood of all the servants of the LORD, [o]at the hand of Jezebel.

8 For the whole house of Ahab shall perish: and [p]I will cut off from Ahab him that pisseth against the wall, and [q]him that is shut up and left in Israel:

9 And I will make the house of Ahab [r]like the house of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, and like [s]the house of Baasha the son of Ahijah:

10 And [t]the dogs shall eat Jezebel in the portion of Jezreel, and there shall be none to bury her. And [u]he opened the door, and fled.

11 ¶ Then Jehu came forth to the servants of his lord: and one said unto him, [x]Is all well? wherefore came this [y]mad fellow[2] to thee? And he said unto them, Ye know the man, and his communication.

12 And they said, It is false; tell us now. And he said, [z]Thus and thus spake he to me, saying, Thus saith the LORD, I have anointed thee king over Israel.

13 Then they hasted, [a]and took every man his garment,[3] and put it under him on the top of the stairs, and [b]blew with trumpets, saying, Jehu [†]is king.

14 So Jehu the son of Jehoshaphat the son of Nimshi [c]conspired against Joram. (Now Joram had [d]kept Ramoth-gilead, he and all Israel, because of Hazael king of Syria.

15 But king [‡]Joram was [•]returned to be healed in Jezreel of the wounds which the Syrians [§]had given him, when he fought with Hazael king of Syria.) And Jehu said, If it be your minds, then let [‖]none go forth nor escape out of the city to go to tell it in Jezreel.

16 ¶ So Jehu rode in a chariot, and went to Jezreel; for Joram lay there. And [f]Ahaziah king of Judah was come down to see Joram.

[1] The Jews think that none of the kings of Israel were anointed, excepting at the first promotion of a family to the throne, or when there was a question about the succession. The reason why Jehu was anointed at this time was, because the succession was to be transferred out of the right line.—PATRICK.

[c] xii. 21; xiv. 19, 20; xxiii. 30.

17 And there stood [s]a watchman on the tower in Jezreel, and he spied the company of Jehu as he came, and said, I see a company. And Joram said, [h]Take an horseman, and send to meet them, and let him say, [i]Is it peace?

18 So there went one on horseback to meet him, and said, Thus saith the king, Is it peace? And Jehu said, [k]What hast thou to do with peace?[4] turn thee behind me. And the watchman told, saying, The messenger came to them, but he cometh not again.

19 Then he sent out a second on horseback, which came to them, and said, Thus saith the king, Is it peace? And Jehu answered, What hast thou to do with peace? turn thee behind me.

20 And the watchman told, saying, He came even unto them, and cometh not again: and the [•]driving is like the driving of Jehu the son of Nimshi; [l]for he driveth [†]furiously.

21 And Joram said, [‡]Make ready. And his chariot was made ready. And [m]Joram king of Israel and Ahaziah king of Judah went out, each in his chariot, and they went out against Jehu, and [§]met him in [n]the portion of Naboth the Jezreelite.

22 And it came to pass, when Joram saw Jehu, that he said, [o]Is it peace, Jehu? And he answered, [p]What peace, so long as [q]the whoredoms of thy mother Jezebel,[5] and her witchcrafts, are so many?

23 And Joram turned his hands, and fled, and said to Ahaziah, [r]There is treachery, O Ahaziah.

24 And Jehu [‖]drew a bow with his full strength, and [s]smote Jehoram between his arms, and the arrow went out at his heart, and he [•]sunk down in his chariot.

25 Then said Jehu to Bidkar his captain, Take up, and cast him in the portion of the field of Naboth the Jezreelite:[6] for remember how that when I and thou rode together after Ahab his father, [t]the LORD laid this burden upon him;

26 Surely I have seen yesterday the [†]blood of Naboth, and the blood [u]of his sons, saith the LORD; and [x]I will requite thee in this [‡]plat, saith the LORD. Now therefore take and cast him into the plat of ground, according to the word of the LORD.

27 ¶ But when [y]Ahaziah the king of Judah saw this, he fled by the way of the [z]garden house. And Jehu followed after him, and said, Smite him also in the chariot. And they did so at the going up to Gur, which is by [a]Ibleam. And he fled to [b]Megiddo,[7] and died there.

28 And [c]his servants carried him in a chariot to Jerusalem, and buried him in his sepulchre with his fathers in the city of David.

the worship of Baal. Jehoram had been spared many years, but he continued impenitent; though not so vile as Ahab, who was punished in his posterity. Jezebel had retained her authority, and persisted in idolatry, and her enmity to JEHOVAH and his servants; though less spoken of in the reigns of her sons, than in that of her husband. Long space had been given her, but she had not repented; and her measure of iniquity was now full.—Scott.

INSOLENT IMPIETY.—With what contempt the captains speak of the young prophet, ver. 11. "'Wherefore came this mad fellow to thee?' What business has he with thee? And why wouldst thou humour him so far as to retire for conversation with him? Are prophets company for captains?" They call him "a mad fellow," because he was one of those that would not "run with them to an excess of riot," 1 Pet. iv. 4, but that lived a life of self-denial, mortification, and contempt of the world, and spent their time in devotion; for these things they thought the prophets were fools, and "the spiritual men were mad," Hos. ix. 7. Note, Those that have no religion commonly speak with disdain of those that are religious, and look upon them as mad. They said to our Saviour, "He is beside himself," of John Baptist, "He has a devil," is a poor melancholy man; of St. Paul, "Much learning has made him mad." The highest wisdom is thus represented as folly, and those that best understand themselves are looked upon as beside themselves. Perhaps Jehu intended it for a rebuke to his friends, when he said, "'Ye know the man' to be a prophet, why then do ye call him a mad fellow? Ye know the way of his communication to be not from madness, but inspiration." Or, "Being a prophet, you may guess what his business is, to tell me of my faults, and to teach me my duty; I need not inform you concerning it." Thus he thought to have put them off, but they urged him to tell them. "It is false," say they, "we cannot conjecture what was his errand, and therefore tell us." Being thus pressed to it, he told them that the prophet had "anointed him king," and, it is probable, showed them the oil upon his head, ver. 12. He knew not but some of them, either out of loyalty to Joram, or envy of him, might oppose him, and go near to crush his interest in its infancy; but he relied in the divine appointment, and was not afraid to own it, knowing whom he had trusted: he that raised him would stand by him.

JEHU'S ZEAL.—1. The place where Joram met Jehu was ominous, "in the portion of Naboth the Jezreelite," ver. 21. The very sight of that ground was enough to make Joram tremble, and Jehu triumph; for Joram had the guilt of Naboth's blood fighting against him, and Jehu had the force of Elijah's curse fighting for him. The circumstances of events are sometimes so ordered by Divine Providence, as to point the punishment directly to the sin, as face answers to face in a glass. 2. Joram's demand was still the same, "'Is it peace, Jehu?' Is all well? Dost thou come home thus, flying from the Syrians? or more than a conqueror over them?" It seems he looked for peace, and could not entertain any other thought. Note, It is very common for great sinners, even when they are upon the brink of ruin, to flatter themselves with an opinion that all is well with them, and to cry peace to themselves. 3. Jehu's reply was very startling; he answered him with a question, "What peace" canst thou expect, "so long as the whoredoms of thy mother Jezebel," (who, though queen-dowager, was, in effect, queen-regent,) "and her witchcrafts, are so many?" See how plainly Jehu deals with him. Formerly he durst not do so, but now he had another spirit. Note, Sinners will not always be flattered; one time or other they will have their own given them, Ps. xxxvi. 2. Observe, (1.) He charges upon him his mother's wickedness, because he had at first learned it, and then with his kingly power protected it. She stands impeached for whoredom, corporal and spiritual, serving idols, and serving them with the very acts of lewdness; for witchcraft likewise, enchantments and divinations, used in honour of her idols; and these multiplied, the whoredoms and the witchcrafts many; for those that abandon themselves to wicked courses know not where they will stop. One sin begets another. (2.) Upon that account, he throws him off from all pretensions to peace; "What peace can come to that house in which there is so much wickedness unrepented of?" Note, The way of sin can never be the way of peace, Isa. lvii. 21. What peace can sinners have with God, what peace with their own consciences, what good, what comfort can they expect in life, in death, or after death, who go on still in their trespasses? 4. Joram king of Israel was slain presently, ver. 24. Jehu despatched him with his own hands. The bow was not drawn at a venture, as that which sent the fatal arrow through the joints of his father's harness, but Jehu directed the arrow between his shoulders as he fled, (it was one of God's arrows which he "has ordained against the persecutor," Ps. vii. 13,) and it reached to his heart, so that he died upon the spot. He was now the top-branch of Ahab's house, and therefore was first cut off. He died a criminal, under the sentence of the law, which Jehu, the executioner, pursues in the disposal of the dead body. Naboth's vineyard was hard by, which put him in mind of that circumstance of the doom Elijah passed upon Ahab, "I will requite thee in this plat, said the Lord," ver. 25, 26, "for the blood of Naboth" himself, and "for the blood of his sons:" for this, the house of Ahab must be reckoned with; and that very piece of ground, which he with so much pride and pleasure, had made himself master of, as the [illegible] guilt of innocent [illegible] now became the [illegible] Thus "the Lord is known by [illegible]

6 Then he wrote a letter the second time to them, saying, If ye be [†]mine, and if ye will hearken unto my voice, [k]take ye the heads of the men [l]your master's sons, and come to me to Jezreel by to-morrow this time. Now the king's sons being seventy persons, were with the great men of the city, which brought them up.

7 And it came to pass, when the letter came to them, that they took the king's sons, and [m]slew seventy persons, and put their heads in baskets, and sent him them to Jezreel.

8 ¶ And [n]there came a messenger, and told him, saying, They have brought the heads of the king's sons. And he said, Lay ye them in two heaps at the entering in of the gate [o]until the morning.

9 And it came to pass in the morning, that he went out, and stood, and said to all the people, [p]Ye be righteous: behold, [q]I conspired against my master, and slew him: but who slew all these?

10 Know now, that there shall [r]fall unto the[2] earth nothing of the word of the LORD, which the LORD spake concerning the house of Ahab: for [s]the LORD hath done that which he spake [‡]by his servant Elijah.

11 So Jehu slew all that remained of the house of Ahab in Jezreel, and all his great men, and his [§]kinsfolks, and [t]his priests, until [u]he left him none remaining.

12 ¶ And he arose and departed, and came to Samaria. And as he was at the [‖]shearing house in the way,

13 Jehu [*]met with [x]the brethren[3] of Ahaziah king of Judah, and said, Who are ye? And they answered, We are the brethren of Ahaziah; and we go down to [†]salute the children of the king, and the children of the queen.

14 And he said, [y]Take them alive. And they took them alive, and slew them at the pit of the shearing house, even two and forty men: [z]neither left he any of them.

15 ¶ And when he was departed thence, he [‡]lighted on [a]Jehonadab the son of [b]Rehab[4] coming to meet him: and he [§]saluted him, and said to him, [c]Is thine heart right, as my heart is with thy heart? And Jehonadab answered, It is. If it be, [d]give me thine hand. And he gave him his hand; and [e]he took him up to him into the chariot.

16 And he said, [f]Come with me, and see my zeal for the LORD. So they made him[5] ride in his chariot.

17 And when he came to Samaria, he slew all that remained unto Ahab in Samaria, [g]till he had destroyed him, [h]according to the saying of the LORD, which he spake to Elijah.

JEZEBEL'S DEATH.—Ver. 30—37. Jezebel had no way of escaping or resisting Jehu: she therefore aimed to outbrave and intimidate him. Instead of assuming the habit of a mourner, or a suppliant, she arrayed herself in all the magnificence of royalty, and stationed herself in a conspicuous place to wait his arrival. She used the method, customary in the East, of giving herself a majestic appearance, by a kind of paint which dilates the eyebrows, and makes the eyes look large and bright. And when Jehu approached the place, she accosted him by saying, "Had Zimri peace, who slew his master?" Zimri had destroyed the house of Baasha, and had soon after fallen before Omri the father of Ahab; but he had had no commission for what he did; and Jehu was expressly ordered to take vengeance on the house of Ahab. He was not therefore to be thus intimidated; for finding, upon inquiry, that her chamberlains were ready to join him, (being either mercenary men who were willing to purchase his favour, or being weary of Jezebel's imperious and haughty disposition,) he ordered her to be thrown from the window, and thus she was dashed to pieces, and trodden underfoot by the horses.—Afterwards, when he thought of burying her, in honour of her royal extraction, he found himself disappointed; for her mangled body, (having probably been plundered of its costly attire,) was entirely torn in pieces and devoured by dogs. This reminded him of the word of the Lord by Elijah, which he had before forgotten; and he observed that her carcass was to become as dung upon the face of the earth.—This was a dreadful and most ignominious end, worthy of one who had been such a curse to Israel and Judah, but had brought the heaviest curses upon herself; and who was a specimen and a sort of type of all ringleaders in idolatry, and tempters to that crime. Yet "this cursed woman," the daughter of a king, was also the wife of a king, the mother of two kings, the mother-in-law of a king, and the grandmother of a king, all in her own life! So vain are all earthly honours and distinctions!—Scott.

CHAP. X. AHAB'S SONS.—Ver. 1—10. These seventy persons were Ahab's descendants by several wives, probably including the sons of Jehoram. They resided at Samaria, as a more secure situation than Jezreel: or, as some think, they fled thither from Jezreel, when Jehoram was slain: attended by the rulers or elders of Jezreel, who might be supposed most attached to the interests of the family; and by those who had superintended their education. Doubtless, many of the elders were the same persons who had put Naboth and his sons to death in obedience to Jezebel; and their consciences and principles having been debauched by such services, they were equally ready to murder the family of Ahab at Jehu's command. Jehu seems to have been aware of their base disposition; and he wrote letters to them that, by killing the young princes by their hands, he might save trouble, avoid odium, and prevent further bloodshed. He was commissioned to destroy all the house of Ahab, and he was not at all scrupulous about the means of doing it: otherwise he would have hesitated at employing men to serve him, with such base treachery and murder. But regardless of this, he, by an intimidating challenge, assured them that if they attempted to protect their royal charge, the matter must be decided by the sword. He knew their strength, and he would have them to be aware of his resolution. As, however, they did not fear the vengeance and power of God, but the courage and success of Jehu, whom they despaired of resisting, they unreservedly submitted to him. Nor did they, when they received his second letter, so much as beg that others might be appointed to slay the young princes; but, as it seems, without reluctancy, at the first word, beheaded them all. Doubtless they had brought them up delicately, repeatedly avowed their attachment to them, and bestowed many flattering encomiums upon them. They probably expected a reward from Jehu, but they seem to have been slain among the other adherents of Ahab's family, ver. 17.—Most of these princes must have been grown men, though some might be minors or children. The heads of Ahab's sons, having been laid in a place of public concourse, would occasion much amazement and many inquiries; which gave Jehu an opportunity of addressing the multitude on the subject. He meant to abate the odium of his own conduct towards the family of Ahab, by contrasting it with the atrocious treachery and cruelty of these professed friends. At the same time he reminded them that the whole was a performance of the word of the Lord by Elijah, which would receive a still more exact completion: instead, therefore, of condemning the persons employed in this bloody work, they ought to adore the truth and justice, and submit to the will of God in it. Thus he likewise avowed his purpose of going on with what he had begun.—Scott.

JEHONADAB.—Jehu, pushing on his work, is here courting the friendship of a good man, "Jehonadab the son of Rechab," ver. 15, 16. This Jehonadab, though mortified to the world, and meddling little with the business of it, (as appears by his charge to his posterity, which they religiously observed 300 years after, not to drink wine, nor dwell in cities, Jer. xxxv. 6, &c.,) yet upon this occasion went to meet Jehu, that he might encourage him in the work to which God had called him. The countenance of good men is a thing which great men, if they be wise, will value, and value themselves by. David prayed, "Let those that fear thee turn to me," Ps. cxix. 79. This Jehonadab, though no prophet, priest, or Levite, no prince, or ruler, was, we may suppose, very eminent for prudence and piety, and generally respected for that life of self-denial and devotion which he lived: Jehu, though a soldier, knew him and honoured him. He did not indeed think of sending for him, but when he met him, (though it is likely he drove together, and said unto them, [l]Ahab served Baal a little; but [k]Jehu shall serve him much.

19 Now therefore call unto me [l]all the prophets of Baal, [m]all his servants, and [n]all his priests; let none be wanting: for I have a great sacrifice to do to Baal; whosoever shall be wanting, he shall not live. [o]But Jehu did it in subtlety, to the intent that he might destroy the worshippers of Baal.

20 And Jehu said, [l]Proclaim a solemn assembly for Baal. And they proclaimed it.

21 And Jehu sent through all Israel: and all the worshippers of Baal came, so that there was not a man left that came not. [p]And they came into [q]the house of Baal; and the house of Baal [r]was *full from one end to another.

22 And he said unto him that was over the vestry, Bring forth [s]vestments[6] for all the worshippers of Baal. And he brought them forth vestments.

23 And Jehu went, and Jehonadab the son of Rechab, into the house of Baal, and said unto the worshippers of Baal, Search, and look that there be here with you none of the servants of the LORD, but the worshippers of Baal only.

24 And when they went in to offer sacrifices and burnt-offerings, Jehu appointed fourscore men[7] without, and said, [t]If any of the men whom I have brought into your hands escape, he that letteth him go, his life shall be for the life of him.

25 And it came to pass, as soon as he had made an end of offering the burnt-offering, that Jehu said to the guard, and to the captains, [u]Go in, and slay them; [v]let none come forth. And they smote them with the [†]edge of the sword; and the guard and the captains cast them out, and went to the city of the house of Baal.

26 And they brought forth the [‡]images out of the house of Baal, [x]and burned them.

27 And they [y]brake down the image of Baal, and brake down the house of Baal, and made it [z]a draught house unto this day.

28 Thus Jehu destroyed Baal out of Israel.

29 ¶ Howbeit from [a]the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who [b]made Israel to sin, Jehu departed not from after them, to wit, [c]the golden calves that were [d]in Beth-el, and that were in Dan.[8]

30 And the LORD said unto Jehu, [e]Because thou hast done well in executing that which is right in mine eyes, and hast done unto the house of Ahab [f]according to all that was in mine heart, [g]thy children of the fourth generation shall sit on the throne of Israel.

31 But Jehu [§]took [h]no heed to [i]walk in the law of the LORD God of Israel with all his heart: for [k]he departed not from the [l]sins of Jeroboam, which made Israel to sin.

32 ¶ In those days the LORD began to [l]cut Israel short: and [m]Hazael smote them in all the coasts of Israel;

33 From Jordan *eastward, all [n]the land of Gilead, the Gadites, and the Reubenites, and the Manassites, from Aroer, which is by the river Arnon, [†]even Gilead and Bashan.[9]

34 ¶ Now [o]the rest of the acts of Jehu, and all that he did, and all his might, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

35 And Jehu [p]slept with his fathers: and they buried him in Samaria. And [q]Jehoahaz his son reigned in his stead.

36 And [‡]the time that Jehu reigned over Israel in Samaria was twenty and eight years.

2 But [d]Jehosheba, the daughter of king [e]Joram, sister of Ahaziah, took [f]Joash the son of Ahaziah, and stole him from among the king's sons which were slain; and [g]they hid him, even him and his nurse, [h]in the bedchamber[1] from Athaliah, so that he was not slain.

3 And he was with her hid in the house of the LORD six years. [i]And Athaliah did reign over the land.

4 ¶ And [k]the seventh year Jehoiada sent and fetched the [l]rulers over hundreds, with [m]the captains and the guard, and brought them to him into the house of the LORD, and [n]made a covenant with them, and [o]took an oath of them in the house of the LORD, and shewed them the king's son.

5 And he commanded them, saying, This is the thing that ye shall do: A third part of you [p]that enter in on the sabbath, shall even be keepers of [q]the watch of the king's house;

6 And a third part shall be at [r]the gate of Sur; and a third part at the gate behind the guard: so shall ye keep the watch of the house, [†]that it be not broken down.[2]

now as furiously as ever,) he stopt to speak to him; and we are here told what passed between them. 1. Jehu saluted him; he "blessed him," so the word is; paid him the respect, and showed him the good will, that were owing to so great an example of serious godliness. 2. Jehonadab assured him that he was sincere in his interest, and a hearty wellwisher to his cause. Jehu professed that "his heart was right with him;" that he had a true affection for his person, and a veneration for the crown of his Nazariteship, and desired to know whether he had the same affection for him, and satisfaction in that crown of royal dignity which God had put upon his head, "Is thine heart right?" A question we should often put to ourselves: "I make a plausible profession, have gained a reputation among men, but 'is my heart right?' Am I sincere and inward with God?" Jehonadab gave him his word, "It is," and gave him his hand as a pledge of his heart, "yielded to him," (so giving the hand is reckoned, 2 Chron. xxx. 8,) concurred and covenanted with him, and owned him in the work both of revenge and of reformation he was now about. 3. Jehu took him up into his chariot, and took him along with him to Samaria. He "put some honour upon him" by taking him into the chariot with him; (Jehonadab was not often in a chariot, especially with a king;) but he received more honour from him, and from the countenance he gave to his present work. All sober people would think the better of Jehu when they saw Jehonadab in the chariot with him. This was not the only time that the piety of some has been made to serve the policy of others, and that designing men have strengthened themselves by drawing good men into their interests. Jehonadab was a stranger to the arts of fleshly wisdom, and has his "conversation in simplicity and godly sincerity;" and therefore, if Jehu be a servant of God, and an enemy to Baal, he will be his faithful friend. "Come, then," says Jehu, "come with me, 'and see my zeal for the Lord;' and then thou wilt see reason to espouse my cause." This is commonly taken as not well said by Jehu, and as giving cause to suspect that his heart was not right with God in what he did, and that the zeal he pretended for the Lord was really zeal for himself and his own advancement. For, (1.) He boasted of it, and spake as if God and man were mightily indebted to him for it. (2.) He desired it might be seen and taken notice of like the Pharisees, who did all to be seen of men. An upright heart approves itself to God, and covets no more than his acceptance. If we aim at the applause of men, and make their praise our highest end, we are upon a false bottom. Whether Jehu looked any further, we cannot judge; however Jehonadab went with him, and, it is likely, animated and assisted him in the further execution of his commission, ver. 17, destroying all Ahab's friends in Samaria. A man may hate cruelty, and yet love justice; may be far from thirsting after blood, and yet may "wash his feet in the blood of the wicked." Ps. lviii. 10.—Henry.

BAAL'S DEVOTEES DESTROYED.—Ver. 21. Numbers, doubtless, had been drawn in to bow the knee to Baal, in order to obtain the favour, or escape the displeasure of their rulers, who did not cordially approve of that idolatry, though indifferent about the worship of JEHOVAH. And these would keep away till Jehu's intentions were more manifest: but the zealous idolaters were judicially infatuated, and universally attended. Their number must have been small, compared with the state of things in the first days of Elijah: but Jehoram was not so zealous for the worship of Baal as Ahab had been; and the incessant labours of Elisha and the sons of the prophets must have produced very great effects.—Some expositors, however, think that by the servants of Baal, (as in the original,) his worshippers are not meant, but the persons who ministered to the prophets and priests, as the Levites and Nethinims did to the sons of Aaron. Ver. 22. Vestments. The prophets, priests, and servants of Baal wore distinguishing garments, in which they were accustomed to perform their religious services. Ver. 23. None of, &c. This was spoken in a dissembled zeal to preserve the purity of the worship of Baal: but had not the idolaters been infatuated, they must have suspected some design concealed under such a precaution. Ver. 24, 25. Perhaps all the servants of Baal were not collected, nor all others separated, till the sacrifice was placed upon the altar: and therefore they were permitted to go through with their worship. We may suppose that Jehonadab so much approved the substance of Jehu's service, that he was willing to allow for the informality with which it was performed: otherwise he certainly could not approve of his dissimulation, or his attendance on an idolatrous sacrifice, with apparent satisfaction.—It seems that the buildings around the temple of Baal, for the accommodation of his priests and their attendants, were so numerous as to form a kind of city by themselves. Ver. 27. A Draught-house. The citizens thencefore made a practice of carrying all the filth and rubbish of Samaria to that place, in contempt and abhorrence of the idolatry which had been there committed.

JEHU'S CHARACTER AND DEATH.—Ver. 29—31. Had Jehu acted from genuine zeal for the honour of God, in destroying the worship of Baal, he would also have put down the worship of the golden calves; that idolatry being as expressly forbidden by the second, as the other was by the first commandment. But that was a politic and profitable sin, and it appeared dangerous to attempt any thing against it. In his general conduct "he took no heed to walk in the law of the LORD,—with all his heart;" and his partiality proved his hypocrisy. The Lord, however, sent a prophet to assure him that he had done right in executing vengeance on Ahab's family, as well as in destroying the worship of Baal; and to promise him a suitable recompense. Accordingly, his family sat on the throne of Israel longer than any other family did, either before or after; as the fourth 9 And [u]the captains over the hundreds did according to all things that Jehoiada the priest commanded: and they took every man his men that were to come in on the sabbath, with them that should go out on the sabbath, and came to Jehoiada the priest.

10 And to the captains over hundreds did the priest give [x]king David's spears and shields, that were in the temple of the LORD.

11 And the guard stood, [y]every man with his weapons in his hand, round about the king, from the right [§]corner of the temple to the left corner of the temple, along [z]by the altar and the temple.

12 And [a]he brought forth the king's son, and [b]put the crown upon him, and gave him [c]the testimony;[4] and they made him king, and [d]anointed him; and they [e]clapped their hands, [f]and said, [l]God save the king!

13 ¶ And [g]when Athaliah heard the noise of the guard, and of the people, she came to the people into the temple of the LORD.

14 And when she looked, behold, the king stood by [h]a pillar, as the manner was, and [i]the princes and the trumpeters by the king; and [k]all the people of the land rejoiced, and blew with trumpets: and Athaliah rent her clothes, and cried, [l]Treason, Treason!

15 But Jehoiada the priest commanded the [m]captains of the hundreds, the officers of the host, and said unto them, Have her forth without the ranges: and him that [n]followeth her kill with the sword. For the priest had said, [o]Let her not be slain in the house of the LORD.[5]

16 And they laid hands on her; and she went by the way [p]by the which the horses came into the king's house: and [q]there was she slain.[6]

17 ¶ And Jehoiada [r]made a covenant between the LORD and the king and the people, that they should be the LORD'S people; [s]between the king also and the people.

18 And all the people of the land [t]went into the house of Baal, and brake it down; his altars and his images [u]brake they in pieces thoroughly, and [x]slew Mattan the priest of Baal before the altars. And the priest [y]appointed [*]officers over the house of the LORD.

19 And he [z]took the rulers over hundreds, and the captains, and the guard, and all the people of the land; and they brought down the king from the house of the LORD, and came [a]by the way of the gate of the guard to the king's house. And [b]he sat on the throne of the kings.

20 And all the people of the land [c]rejoiced, and the city was in quiet: and they [d]slew Athaliah with the sword beside the king's house.

21 Seven years old was Jehoash when he began to reign.

CHAP. XII.

Jehoash reigneth well all the days of Jehoiada, 1. He is slain by his servants, 19.

IN [a]the seventh year of Jehu [b]Jehoash began to reign; and forty years reigned he in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Zibiah of Beer-sheba.

2 And [c]Jehoash did that which was right in the sight of the LORD all his days wherein Jehoiada the priest instructed him.[1]

3 But [d]the high places were not taken away: the people still sacrificed and burnt incense in the high places.

4 ¶ And Jehoash [e]said to the priests, All [f]the money of the [*]dedicated things that is brought into the house of the LORD,[2] even [g]the money of every one that passeth the account, the money [†]that every man is set at, [h]and all the money that [‡]cometh into any man's heart to bring into the house of the LORD,

5 Let [i]the priests take it to them, every man of his acquaintance: and [k]let them repair the breaches of the house, wheresoever any breach shall be found.

6 But it was so, that in the [§]three and twentieth year of king Jehoash [l]the priests had not repaired the breaches of the house.

7 Then [m]king Jehoash called for [n]Jehoiada the priest, and the other priests, and said unto them, [o]Why repair ye not the breaches of the house? now therefore receive no more money of your acquaintance, but deliver it for the breaches of the house.

8 And the priests consented to receive no more money of the people, neither to repair the breaches of the house.

9 But Jehoiada the priest [p]took a chest, and bored a hole in the lid of it, and set it [q]beside the altar, on the right side as one cometh into the house of the LORD: and [r]the priests that kept the [l]door put therein all the money that was brought into the house of the LORD.

10 And it was so, when they saw that there was much money in the chest, that [s]the king's [*]scribe and the high priest came up, and they [†]put up in bags,[3] and told the money that was found in the house of the LORD.

11 And they [t]gave the money, being told, into the hands of them that did the work, that had the oversight of the house of the LORD: and they [‡]laid it out to the carpenters and builders, that wrought upon the house of the LORD,

There has existed a doubt, however, respecting the meaning of the Hebrew word translated "testimony." generation reached to above one hundred years from the time when Jehu ascended the throne. Yet in other respects these very actions of Jehu were deemed deserving of punishment.—Scott.

CHAP. XI. ATHALIAH.—Ver. 1, 2. It is probable that Athaliah was left in authority, when Ahaziah went to visit Jehoram; and, being informed that he was slain, she proceeded to destroy "all the royal seed," or the "seed of the kingdom;" that is, all who could claim the kingdom, as descended from David's royal race. This seems to include all, whom Athaliah knew to belong to that family, especially in the line of Solomon and Rehoboam, without even excepting her own grandchildren by Ahaziah. Some think, an impious revenge actuated her; and that, as God had ordered the family of Ahab, (whose daughter she was,) to be destroyed, so she was determined to extirpate that family which he especially favoured. But it is more certain that she was influenced by ambition, and desired to reign without a competitor; and to be able to defend herself against Jehu, by whom she must think herself marked for destruction. By this concurrence of events, Jehoshaphat's alliance with the house of Ahab proved almost the total ruin of his family; and of the house of David, from whence the Messiah was to descend! To appearance, and in Athaliah's intention, it was exterminated; and indeed that branch, which descended from Jehoshaphat, was so interwoven with Ahab's devoted family, that without a favourable construction of the sentence, none of them could have been spared: for Jehoshaphat's other sons had been slain by Jehoram, as soon as he had gotten possession of the throne, so that all who survived were the descendants of Ahab as well as of Jehoshaphat. But by an act of grace, as it were, Joash, being both a branch of the house of David, and of that of Ahab, was considered as belonging to the former family, and snatched as "a brand from the burning."—Scott.

JEHOIADA'S LOYALTY.—Ver. 11. The manager of this great affair was Jehoiada the priest, probably the high priest, or, at least, the Sagan, (as the Jews called him,) or suffragan to the high priest; by his birth and office he was a man in authority, whom the people were bound by the law to observe and obey, especially when there was no rightful king upon the throne, Deut. xvii. 12. By marriage he was allied to the royal family, and if all the seed-royal were destroyed, his wife, as daughter to Joram, had a better title to the crown than Athaliah had. By his eminent gifts and graces, he was fitted to serve his country, and better service he could not do it, than to free it from Athaliah's usurpation; and we have reason to think he did not make this attempt till he had first asked counsel of God, and known his mind, either by prophets, or Urim, or both. The management was very discreet, and as became so wise and good a man as Jehoiada was. He concerted the matter with the "rulers of hundreds and the captains," the men in office, ecclesiastical, civil, and military; he got them to him to the temple, consulted with them, laid before them the grievances they at present laboured under, gave them an oath of secrecy, and, finding them free and forward to join with him, "showed them the king's son," ver. 4, and so well satisfied were they with his fidelity, that they saw no reason to suspect an imposition. We may well think what a pleasing surprise it was to the good people among them, who feared that the house and lineage of David were quite cut off, to find such a spark as this in the embers. He posted the priests and Levites, who were more immediately under his direction, in the several avenues to the temple, to keep the guards, putting them under the command of the "rulers of hundreds," ver. 9.

CORONATION OF JOASH.—Jehoiada, without delay, proceeded to the coronation of this young king; for, though he was not yet capable of despatching business, he would be growing up towards it by degrees; this was done with great solemnity, ver. 12. 1. In token of his being invested with kingly power, he "put the crown upon him," though it was yet too large and heavy for his head; the regalia, it is probable, were kept in the temple, and so the crown was ready at hand. 2. In token of his obligation to govern by law, and to make the word of God his rule, he gave him the testimony, put a Bible into his hand, which he must "read in, all the days of his life," Deut. xvii. 18, 19. 3. In token of his receiving the Spirit, to qualify him for this great work to which he before was called, he anointed him; though notice is taken of the anointing of their kings only in case of interruption, as here, and in Solomon's case, yet I know not but the ceremony might be used to all their kings, at least those of the house of David, because their royalty was typical of Christ's, who was to be anointed above his fellows, above all the sons of David. 4. In token of the people's acceptance of him and subjection to his government, they clapped their hands for joy, and expressed their hearty good wishes to him, "Let the king live;" and thus they made him king, made him their king, consented to, and concurred with, the divine appointment.—Henry.

DEATH OF ATHALIAH.—Ver. 13—16. Athaliah, after the manner of her mother Jezebel, instead of fleeing with feminine timidity, when she heard the noise, and suspected the occasion, went directly into the temple, unattended by a guard, as if she could by her presence overawe and confound the conspirators: but by this rashness she rushed upon her death. The people, it seems, were assembled, perhaps to celebrate some of their solemn feasts, and they, with their princes or magistrates, cordially united with Jehoiada, and the priests and Levites. When Athaliah saw Joash stand in the place appropriated to the king's use, she was aware of what had taken place; and expressed her abhorrence of the supposed treason by word and deed, in hopes of inducing the

CHAP. XIII.

Jehoahaz's wicked reign, 1. Elisha's death, 20; his bones revive a dead man, 21.

IN the [*]three and twentieth year of Joash the son of Ahaziah king of Judah, [a]Jehoahaz the son of Jehu began to reign over Israel in Samaria, and reigned seventeen years.

2 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, [b]and [†]followed the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, which made Israel to sin: he departed not therefrom.

3 ¶ And [c]the anger of the LORD was kindled against Israel, and he delivered them into the hand of [d]Hazael king of Syria, and into the hand of [e]Bed-hadad the son of Hazael, all their days.

4 And [f]Jehoahaz besought the LORD, and [g]the LORD hearkened unto him: for he [h]saw the oppression of Israel, [i]because the king of Syria oppressed them.

5 (And the LORD gave Israel [k]a saviour, so that they went out from under the hand of the Syrians: and the children of Israel dwelt in their tents, as [‡]beforetime.

6 Nevertheless they [l]departed not from the sins of the house of Jeroboam, who made Israel sin, but [§]walked therein: [m]and there [l]remained the grove also in Samaria.)

7 Neither did he leave of the people to Jehoahaz but [n]fifty horsemen, and ten chariots, and ten thousand footmen; for [o]the king of Syria had destroyed them, and had made them [p]like the dust by thrashing.[1]

8 ¶ Now [q]the rest of the acts of Jehoahaz, and all that he did, and his might, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

9 And Jehoahaz slept with his fathers; and they [r]buried him in Samaria: and [s]Joash his son [*]reigned in his stead.

10 ¶ In the thirty and seventh year of Joash king of Judah [†]began Jehoash the son of Jehoahaz to reign over Israel in Samaria, and reigned sixteen years.

11 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD; [t]he departed not from all the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel sin: but he walked therein.

12 And [u]the rest of the acts of Joash,[2] and all that he did, and [x]his might wherewith he fought against Amaziah king of Judah, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

13 And Joash [y]slept with his fathers; and [z]Jeroboam sat upon his throne: and Joash [a]was buried in Samaria with the kings of Israel.

14 ¶ Now Elisha was [b]fallen sick of his sickness whereof [c]he died. And Joash the king of Israel came down unto him, and wept over his face,[3] and said, [d]O my father, my father, the chariot of Israel, and the horsemen thereof.[4]

15 And Elisha said unto him, Take bow and arrows. And he took unto him bow and arrows.

16 And he said to the king of Israel, [‡]Put thine hand upon the bow. And he put his hand upon it: and [e]Elisha put his hands upon the king's hands.

17 And he said, [f]Open the window eastward. And he opened it. Then Elisha said, Shoot. And he shot. And he said, [g]The arrow of the LORD's deliverance, and the arrow of deliverance from Syria: for thou shalt smite the Syrians in [h]Aphek, till thou have consumed them.

18 And he said, Take the arrows. And people to take her part. But her conduct had been so odious and unnatural, that none favoured her; and at the word of Jehoiada she suffered the punishment due to her complicated crimes. Doubtless Jehoiada acted, in all this business, by the direction and according to the will of God. The Levites seem to have executed the sentence, and great care was taken not to pollute with blood the court of the temple.—Scott.

CHAP. XII. CONTRIBUTIONS FOR THE REPAIRS OF THE TEMPLE.—When public distributions are made faithfully, public contributions will be made cheerfully. The money that was given, 1. Was dropt into the chest through a hole in the lid, past recall, to intimate, that what has been once resigned to God must never be resumed; "every man, as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give." 2. The chest was put on the right hand as they went in, which, some think, is alluded to in that rule of charity which our Saviour gives, "Let not thy left hand know what thy right hand doeth." But, while they were getting all they could for the repair of the temple, they did not break in upon that which was the stated maintenance of the priests, ver. 16, the trespass-money and the sin-money which were given to them by that law, Lev. v. 15, 16, were reserved to them; let not the servants of the temple be starved, under colour of repairing the breaches of it. 2. For laying out the money that was raised. (1.) They did not put it into the hands of the priests, who were not versed in affairs of this nature, having other work to mind, but "into the hands of those that did the work," or, at least, "had the oversight of it," ver. 11. They were fittest to be intrusted with this business, whose employment lay that way, Tractant fabrilia fabri—Every artist has his trade assigned; but let not those who are called to war the holy warfare, entangle themselves in the affairs of this life. They that were thus intrusted, did the business, [1.] Carefully; purchasing materials, and paying workmen, ver. 12. Business is done with expedition, when those are employed in it, that understand it, and know which way to go about it. [2.] Faithfully; such a reputation they got for honesty, that there was no occasion to examine their bills, or audit their accounts; let all that are intrusted with public money, or public work, learn hence to deal faithfully, as those that know God will reckon with them, whether men do or no; those that think it is no sin to cheat the government, cheat the country, or cheat the church, will be of another mind, when God shall set their sins in order before them. (2.) They did not lay it out in ornaments for the temple, in vessels of gold or silver, but in necessary repairs first, ver. 13, whence we may learn, in all our expenses, to give that the preference which is most needful, and, in dealing for the public, to deal as we would for ourselves.

ASSASSINATION OF JOASH.—Ver. 20. The life of Joash became an easy prey to his own servants. They conspired against him, and slew him, ver. 20, 21, not aiming at his kingdom, for they opposed not his son's succeeding him, but to be avenged on him for some crime he had committed; and we are told in Chronicles, that his murdering of the prophet, Jehoiada's son, was the provocation. In this, how unrighteous soever they were, (vengeance was not theirs, nor did it belong to them to repay,) God was righteous; and this was not the only time that he let even kings know that it was at their peril if they touched his anointed, and did his prophets any harm; and that, when he comes to make inquisition for blood, the blood of prophets will run the account very high. Thus fell Joash, who began in the spirit, and ended in the flesh. God usually sets marks of his displeasure upon apostates, even in this life; for they, of all sinners, do most "reproach the Lord."—Henry.

CHAP. XIII. STATE OF ISRAEL UNDER JEHOAHAZ.—Ver. 1. This general account of the reign of Jehoahaz, and of the state of Israel during his seventeen years, though short, is long enough to let us see two things which are very affecting and instructive. 1. The glory of Israel raked up in the ashes, buried, and lost, and turned into shame. How unlike does Israel appear here to what it had been, and might have been! How is its crown profaned, and its honour laid in the dust! 2. It was the honour of Israel, that they were taken under the special protection of heaven: God himself was their Defence, the Shield of their help, and the Sword of their excellency. Happy wast thou, O Israel, upon this account. But here, as often before, we find them stript of this glory, and exposed to the insults of all their neighbours. They, by their sins, provoked God to anger, and then he "delivered them into the hands of Hazael and Ben-hadad," ver. 3. "Hazael oppressed Israel," ver. 22. Surely never was any nation so often plucked and pillaged by their neighbours as Israel was. This they brought upon themselves, by sin; when they had provoked God to pluck up their hedge, the goodness of their land did but tempt their neighbours to prey upon them. So low was Israel brought in this reign, by the many depredations which the Syrians made upon them, that the militia of the kingdom, and all the force they could bring into the field, were but "fifty horsemen, ten chariots, and ten thousand footmen," a despicable muster, ver. 7. Are the thousands of Israel come to this? "How is the gold become dim!" The debauching of a nation will certainly be the debasing of it. 3. Some sparks of Israel's ancient honour appearing in these ashes. For, (1.) It was the ancient honour of Israel, that they were a praying people; and here we find somewhat of that honour revived; for Jehoahaz their king, in his distress, "besought the Lord," ver. 4, applied himself for help, not to the calves, (what help could they give him?) but to the Lord. It becomes kings to be beggars at God's door, he took them. And he said unto the king of Israel, [i]Smite upon the ground. And [k]he smote thrice, and stayed.

19 And [l]the man of God [m]was wroth with him, and said, Thou shouldest have smitten five or six times; then hadst thou smitten Syria till thou hadst consumed it:[5] whereas [n]now thou shalt smite Syria but thrice.

20 ¶ And Elisha died, and they [o]buried him. And [p]the bands of [q]the Moabites invaded the land at the coming in of the year.[6]

21 And it came to pass, as they were burying a man, that, behold, they spied a band of men; and they cast the man into the sepulchre of Elisha: and when the man [s]was let down, and [r]touched the bones of Elisha, he revived, and stood up on his feet.

22 ¶ But [t]Hazael king of Syria oppressed Israel all the days of Jehoahaz.

23 And [u]the LORD was gracious unto them, and had compassion on them, and [v]had respect unto them, [x]because of his covenant with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and would not destroy them, [y]neither cast he them from his [z]presence as yet.

24 So [a]Hazael king of Syria died; and Ben-hadad his son reigned in his stead.

25 And Jehoash the son of Jehoahaz *took again out of the hand of Ben-hadad the son of Hazael, the cities which he had taken out of the hand of Jehoahaz his father by war. [b]Three times did Joash beat him, and recovered the cities of Israel.

CHAP. XIV.

Amaziah's good reign, 1. He is slain by a conspiracy, 17. Azariah succeedeth him, 21.

IN the second year of [a]Joash son of Jehoahaz king of Israel [b]reigned Amaziah the son of Joash king of Judah.

2 He was twenty and five years old when he began to reign, and reigned twenty and nine years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jehoaddan of Jerusalem.

3 And [c]he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, yet not like David his father: [d]he did according to all things as Joash his father did.

4 Howbeit [e]the high places were not taken away: as yet the people did sacrifice and burnt incense on the high places.

5 ¶ And it came to pass, as soon as the kingdom was confirmed in his hand, [f]that he slew [g]his servants[1] which had slain the king his father.

6 But the children of the murderers he slew not: according unto that which is written in the book of the law of Moses, wherein the LORD commanded, saying, [h]The fathers shall not be put to death for the children, nor the children be put to death for the fathers; but every man shall be put to death for his own sin.

7 ¶ He [i]slew of Edom in [j]the valley of Salt ten thousand, and took *Selah[2] by war, and called the name of it [k]Joktheel unto this day.

8 ¶ Then [l]Amaziah sent messengers to Jehoash, the son of Jehoahaz son of Jehu, king of Israel, saying, [m]Come, let us look one another in the face.[3]

9 And Jehoash the king of Israel sent to Amaziah king of Judah, saying, [n]The thistle that was in Lebanon sent to the cedar that was in Lebanon, saying, Give thy daughter to my son to wife: and there passed by a wild beast that was in Lebanon, and trode down the thistle.

10 Thou hast indeed smitten Edom, and [o]thine heart hath lifted thee up: [p]glory of this, and tarry at [†]home: for [q]why shouldest thou meddle to thy hurt, that thou shouldest fall, even thou, and Judah with thee?

11 But [r]Amaziah would not hear. Therefore Jehoash king of Israel went up; and he and Amaziah king of Judah looked one another in the face at [s]Beth-shemesh, which belongeth to Judah.

12 And Judah was [‡]put to the worse before Israel; and [t]they fled every man to their tents.

13 And Jehoash king of Israel [u]took Amaziah king of Judah, the son of Jehoash the son of Ahaziah, at Beth-shemesh, and came to Jerusalem, and brake down the wall of Jerusalem from [x]the gate of Ephraim unto [y]the corner gate, four hundred cubits.

14 And he took [z]all the gold and silver, and all the vessels that were found in the house of the LORD, and in the treasures of the king's house, [a]and hostages, and returned to Samaria.

15 ¶ Now [b]the rest of the acts of Jehoash[4] which he did, and his might, and how he fought with Amaziah king of Judah, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

16 And [c]Jehoash slept with his fathers, and [d]was buried in Samaria with the kings of Israel; and [e]Jeroboam his son reigned in his stead.

17 ¶ And [f]Amaziah the son of Joash king of Judah lived after the death of Jehoash son of Jehoahaz king of Israel fifteen years.

18 And [g]the rest of the acts of Amaziah, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

19 Now [h]they made a conspiracy against him[5] in Jerusalem: and he fled to [i]Lachish; but they sent after him to Lachish, and slew him there.

and the greatest of men to be humble petitioners at the footstool of his throne. Need will drive them to it. (2.) It was the ancient honour of Israel, that they had "God nigh unto them in all that which they called upon him for," Deut. iv. 7, and so he was here. —Henry.

VISIT OF JOASH TO THE DYING PROPHET.—Ver. 14. If Elisha was called to follow Elijah, no more than seven years before the death of Ahab, and if he died as soon as Joash mounted the throne, he prophesied at least sixty-six years! From the beginning of the reign of Jehu to Elisha's sickness and death, (that is, for more than forty-five years,) his name is never once mentioned: but without doubt he was very usefully employed, especially in superintending the schools of the prophets. There is ground to conclude, that great numbers were converted to God by his labours; though the bulk of the nation conformed to the idolatry established by authority. Neither Jehu nor Jehoahaz paid any attention to the prophet; yet they were not persecutors, and probably they respected his character. Being, however, employed in state affairs, and determined to maintain the idolatry of the golden calves, they were not disposed to hearken to his admonitions: and he expressed his disapprobation of their conduct by keeping at a distance. But when Joash heard that he was apparently near death, at a time when Israel was brought very low by iniquity, he seems to have considered the dispensation as a divine rebuke; and, under the prevalency of present convictions, he visited and lamented over him, in the very words which Elisha had used when Elijah was removed, acknowledging him to be the chief defence of Israel, whose death would more expose them to ruin, than all Hazael's successes. Yet we read of nothing, in the character or conduct of Joash, to warrant a conclusion, that this was more than a transient impression upon his mind, which soon wore off without producing any abiding good effect.

TEACHING BY SYMBOL.—Ver. 15—19. In this prophetical transaction, the use of the "bow and arrows" denoted that Joash was to be the instrument of Israel's deliverance, by military valour and enterprise: the prophet's directing the king in shooting, and laying his hands upon his, implied that he was to follow the direction of the prophet, and that God would give him success. The arrow shot eastward, marked the situation of the place where the deliverance was to be wrought, and intimated that the eastern coasts of the land of Israel would be rescued from the king of Syria; though his dominions, which lay chiefly to the north of Canaan, would not be taken from him: and the smiting of the arrows upon the ground was significant of the use that Joash would make of his first victory, by which his enemies were cast down to the ground before him; whether he would effectually crush their power, or imitate the impolitic lenity of Ahab. Probably Joash was not informed that his victories would equal the times which he smote with the arrows: and perhaps considering the action as trivial and unmeaning, he smote but thrice, which displeased the prophet, and, as it were, limited the king's successes. His conduct expressed the state of his mind, as not firmly believing the words of the prophet, or not duly valuing the promised deliverance.

PECULIAR MIRACLE.—Ver. 20, 21. "They laid the body by Elisha's, for fear, if they proceeded to the sepulchre prepared for this man, they should fall into the hands of the Moabites. God restored him, in an instant, to perfect health: for he stood upon his feet; and, it is likely, walked home with those who brought him to be buried." This extraordinary miracle, wrought by the touch of the dead body of Elisha, (which by the ritual law could only render a man unclean,) declared that he was as much beloved as Elijah, though he had not been translated, and that the Lord was his God, after death as well as before; and thus intimated both the immortality of the soul, and the final resurrection of the body. It might also intimate, that many mercies were reserved for Israel, in answer to Elisha's prayers, and in consequence of his labours for them in his lifetime.—Scott.

CHAP. XIV. AMAZIAH.—Ver. 1. Amaziah is the king whom here we have an account of, the son and successor of Joash: let us take a view of him, I. In the temple; and there he acted in some measure well, like Joash but not like David, ver. 3. He began well, but did not persevere. He "did that which was right in the sight of the Lord," kept up his attendance on God's altars, and his attention to God's word, yet not like David. It is not enough to do that which our pious predecessors did, merely to keep up the usage, but we must do it as they did it, from the same principle of faith and devotion, and with the same sincerity and resolution. It is here taken notice of, as before, that "the high places were not taken away," ver. 4. It is hard to get clear of those corruptions which, by long usage, have gained both prescription and a favourable opinion. 2. On the bench; and there we have him doing justice on the traitors that murdered his father; not as soon as ever he came to the crown, lest it should have occasioned some disturbance, but he prudently deferred it till "the kingdom was confirmed in his hand," ver. 5. To weaken a factious party gradually, when it is not safe to provoke, often proves the way to ruin it effectually. Justice strikes surely by striking slowly, and is often executed most prudently when it is not executed presently. Wisdom is here profitable to direct. 3. In the field; and there we find him triumphing over the Edomites, ver. 7. Edom had "revolted from under the hand of Judah" in Joram's time, chap. viii. 22, now he makes war upon them to bring them back to their allegiance, kills ten thousand, and takes the chief city of Arabia the stony, called Selah, a rock, and gave it

22 He built [n]Elath,[o] and restored it to Judah, after that the king slept with his fathers.

23 ¶ In [p]the fifteenth year of Amaziah the son of Joash king of Judah, [q]Jeroboam the son of Joash king of Israel [s]began to reign in Samaria, and reigned forty and one years.

24 And he did that which was evil [t]in the sight of the LORD: [r]he departed not from all the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.

25 He restored the coast of Israel[7] [u]from the entering of Hamath [v]unto the sea of the plain, according to the word of the LORD God of Israel, which he spake by the hand of his servant [w]Jonah, the son of Amittai, the prophet, which was of [x]Gath-hepher.

26 For the LORD [y]saw the affliction of Israel, that it was very bitter: for there was [z]not any shut up, nor any left, nor any helper for Israel.

27 And the LORD [a]said not that he would [b]blot out the name of Israel from under heaven; but [c]he saved them by the hand of Jeroboam the son of Joash.

28 ¶ Now [d]the rest of the acts of Jeroboam, and all that he did, and his might, how he warred, and how he recovered [e]Damascus, and Hamath, which belonged[8] to Judah, for Israel, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

Azariah's good reign, 1. Jotham and other kings, 5. Jotham's good reign, 32.

IN [a]the [1]twenty and seventh year of Jeroboam king of Israel began Azariah son of Amaziah king of Judah to reign.

2 [b]Sixteen years old was he when he began to reign, and he reigned two and fifty years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jecholiah of Jerusalem.

3 And [c]he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, according to all that his father Amaziah had done;

4 Save that [d]the high places were not removed: the people sacrificed and burnt incense still on the high places.

5 ¶ And [e]the LORD smote the king,[2] [f]so that he was a leper unto the day of his death, [g]and dwelt in a several house. And [h]Jotham the king's son was over the house, [i]judging the people of the land.

6 And the rest of the acts of Azariah, and all that he did, are [k]they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

7 So [l]Azariah slept with his fathers; and they buried him with his fathers in the city of David: and Jotham his son reigned in his stead.

8 ¶ In [m]the [1]thirty and eighth year of Azariah king of Judah did [n]Zachariah the son of Jeroboam reign over Israel in Samaria six months.

9 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, [o]as his fathers had done: he departed not from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.

10 And Shallum the son of Jabesh conspired against him, and [p]smote him before the people, and [q]slew him, and reigned in his stead.

11 And [r]the rest of the acts of Zachariah, behold, they are written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel.

12 This was [s]the word[3] of the LORD which he spake unto Jehu, saying, [t]Thy sons shall sit on the throne of Israel unto the fourth generation. [u]And so it came to pass.

13 ¶ Shallum the son of Jabesh began to reign in the nine and thirtieth year of [v]Uzziah king of Judah; and he reigned [*]a full [w]month in Samaria.

14 For Menahem the son of Gadi went up from [y]Tirzah,[3] and came to Samaria, [z]and smote Shallum the son of Jabesh in Samaria, and slew him, and reigned in his stead.

15 And [a]the rest of the acts of Shallum, and his conspiracy which he made, behold, they are written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel.

16 ¶ Then Menahem smote [b]Tiphsah,[4] and all that were therein, and the coasts thereof from Tirzah: because they opened not to him, therefore he smote it; and [c]all the women therein that were with child he ripped up.

17 ¶ In [d]the nine and thirtieth year of Azariah king of Judah began Menahem the son of Gadi to reign over Israel, and reigned ten years in Samaria.

18 And he did that which was [e]evil in the sight of the LORD: he departed not all his days from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.

19 ¶ And [f]Pul the king of Assyria came[5] against the land: and [g]Menahem gave Pul a thousand talents of silver, that his hand might be with him [h]to confirm the kingdom in his hand.

THE CHALLENGE AND THE REPLY.—Ver. 9, 10. Joash rebuked Amaziah's pride, with an arrogance equally unreasonable. The thistle, an useless weed, which may by chance wound the foot of the incautious passenger, was made the emblem of the kingdom of Judah, and of the ancient and honourable house of David: whilst the house of Jehu was represented as a stately cedar! Joash intimated, that if Amaziah, upon his casual success against the Edomites had presumed to solicit an alliance with him, he would have considered his proposals in the same light as if the thistle should aspire to unite families with the cedar; and the meanest of his soldiers should have chastised his insolence, and crushed him, as easily as a wild beast of the forest could trample down the thistle: how much more then, when Amaziah dared to challenge him to battle, would he bring destruction upon himself! There was, however, much good sense in Joash's counsel: Let Amaziah rest satisfied with the reputation which he had acquired, and not meddle without occasion with his neighbour, who was disposed to peace, lest it should terminate in the ruin and disgrace of himself and his kingdom. Ver. 11—14. As Amaziah prepared for war, it became necessary for Joash to oppose him: in consequence, Amaziah's army was completely routed, many lives were thrown away, Amaziah was made prisoner, Jerusalem was taken, and its fortifications demolished, and the very temple plundered by the rapacious and profane conqueror. Ver. 17—20. Joash, it seems, set Amaziah at liberty; and he survived Joash fifteen years: but the ill success of his rash expedition rendered his people disaffected to him, which at length produced a conspiracy, or open revolt; so that when the insurgents had slain him, either they brought him themselves, or suffered him to be brought to Jerusalem to be buried.—Scott.

JEROBOAM THE SECOND.—Ver. 23. Here is an account of the reign of Jeroboam the second; I doubt it is an indication of the affection and adherence of the house of Jehu to the sins of "Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin," that they called an heir-apparent to the crown by his name, thinking that an honourable name, which in the book of God is infamous, and stigmatized as much as any other. 1. His reign was long, the longest of all the reigns of the kings of Israel, he reigned 41 years; yet his contemporary, Azariah, the king of Judah, reigned longer, even 52 years; this Jeroboam reigned just as long as Asa had done, 1 Kings xv. 10; yet one did that which was good, and the other that which was evil. We cannot measure men's characters by the length of their lives, or of their outward prosperity; "there is one event to the righteous and to the wicked." 2. His character was the same with that of the rest of those kings: "he did that which was evil," ver. 24, for "he departed not from the sins of Jeroboam," he kept up the worship of the calves, and never left that, thinking there was no harm in it, because it had been the way of all his ancestors and predecessors: but a sin is never the less evil in God's sight, whatever it is in ours, for its being an ancient usage; and a frivolous plea it will be against doing good, that we have been accustomed to do evil. 3. Yet he prospered more than most of them; for though, in that one thing he did evil in the sight of the Lord, yet it is likely, in other respects, there was some good found in him, and therefore God owned him. 4. Here is the conclusion of Jeroboam's reign; we read, ver. 28, of his might, and how he warred; but, ver. 29, "he slept with his fathers;" for the mightiest must yield to death, and there is no discharge in that war.—Henry.

CHAP. XV. AZARIAH.—Ver. 1. This is a short account of the reign of Azariah. 1. Most of it is general, and the same that has been given of others; he began young, and reigned long, ver. 2, did for the most part that which was right, ver. 3. It was happy for the kingdom that a good reign was a long one; only he had not zeal and courage enough to take away the high places, ver. 4. 2. That which is peculiar, ver. 5, (that God smote him with a leprosy,) is more largely related with the occasion of it, 2 Chron. xxvi. 16, &c., where we have also a fuller account of the glories of the former part of his reign, as well as of the disgraces of the latter part of it. He did that which was right, as Amaziah had done; like him, he began well, but failed before he finished. Here we are told, (1.) That he was a leper; the greatest of men are not only subject to the common calamities, but also to the common infirmities of the human nature; and if they be guilty of any heinous sin, they lie as open as the meanest to the most grievous strokes of divine vengeance. (2.) God smote him with this leprosy, to chastise him for his presumptuous invasion of the priest's office; if great men be proud men, some way or other, God will humble them, and make them know he is both above them and against them, for he resisteth the proud. (3.) That he was a leper "to the day of his death;" though we have reason to think he repented, and the sin was pardoned; yet, for warning to others, he was continued under this mark of God's displeasure as long as he lived, and perhaps it was for the good of his soul that he was so. (4.) That he "dwelt in a several house," as being made ceremonially unclean by the law, to the discipline of which, though a king, he must submit; he that presumptuously intruded into God's temple, and pretended to be a priest, is justly shut out from his own palace, and shut up as a prisoner or a recluse ever after.

Israel, even of all [k]the mighty men of wealth, of each man fifty shekels[6] of silver, to give to the king of Assyria. So the king of Assyria turned back, and [l]stayed not there in the land.

21 ¶ And [m]the rest of the acts of Menahem, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel?

22 And Menahem slept with his fathers; and Pekahiah his son reigned in his stead.

23 ¶ In the fiftieth year of Azariah king of Judah, Pekahiah the son of Menahem began to reign over Israel in Samaria, [n]and reigned two years.

24 And he did that which was [o]evil in the sight of the LORD: he departed not from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.

25 But [p]Pekah the son of Remaliah, [q]a captain of his, [r]conspired against him, and smote him in Samaria, in the palace of the king's house, with Argob and Arieh, and with him fifty men of the Gileadites: and he killed him, and reigned in his room.

26 And [s]the rest of the acts of Pekahiah, and all that he did, behold, they are written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel.

27 ¶ In [t]the two and fiftieth year of Azariah king of Judah, [u]Pekah the son of Remaliah began to reign over Israel in Samaria, and reigned twenty years.

28 And he did that which was [x]evil in the sight of the LORD: he departed not from the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin.

29 ¶ In the days of Pekah king of Israel came [y]Tiglath-pileser[7] king of Assyria, and took [z]Ijon, [a]and Abel-beth-maachah, and Janoah, and [b]Kedesh, and [c]Hazor, and [d]Gilead, and [e]Galilee, all the land of Naphtali, and [f]carried them captive to Assyria.

30 ¶ And Hoshea the son of Elah [g]made a conspiracy against Pekah the son of Remaliah, [h]and smote him, and slew him, and [‡]reigned in his stead, [l]in [§]the twentieth year of Jotham[8] the son of Uzziah.

31 And the rest of the acts of Pekah, and all that he did, behold, they are written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel.

32 ¶ In the second year of Pekah the son of Remaliah king of Israel began [k]Jotham the son of [l]Uzziah king of Judah to reign.

33 Five and twenty years old was he when he began to reign, and he reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was [m]Jerusha, the daughter of Zadok.

34 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD: he did [n]according to all that his father Uzziah had done.

35 Howbeit [o]the high places were not removed: the people sacrificed and burnt incense still in the high places. He built [p]the higher gate[9] of the house of the LORD.

36 ¶ Now [q]the rest of the acts of Jotham, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

37 In those days the LORD [r]began [s]to send against Judah [t]Rezin the king of Syria, and [u]Pekah the son of Remaliah.

38 And [x]Jotham slept with his fathers, and was buried with his fathers in the city of David his father: and [y]Ahaz his son reigned in his stead.

Ahaz's wicked reign, 1; he spoileth the temple, 17. Hezekiah succeedeth him, 20.

IN the [a]seventeenth year of Pekah the son of Remaliah [b]Ahaz the son of Jotham king of Judah began to reign.

2 Twenty years old was Ahaz when he began to reign, and reigned sixteen years in Jerusalem, and [c]did not that which was right in the sight of the LORD his God, like David his father.

3 But [d]he walked in the way of the kings of Israel; yea, and [e]made his son to pass through the fire, [f]according to the abominations of the heathen, whom the LORD cast out from before the children of Israel.

4 And he sacrificed and burnt incense in the high places, and [g]on the hills, and under every green tree.

5 ¶ Then [h]Rezin king of Syria and Pekah son of Remaliah king of Israel came up to Jerusalem to war: and they besieged Ahaz, [i]but could not overcome him.

6 At that time Rezin king of Syria [k]recovered Elath to Syria, and drave the Jews[1] from *Elath: and the Syrians came to Elath, and dwelt there unto this day.

7 ¶ So Ahaz sent messengers [l]to [†]Tiglath-pileser king of Assyria, saying, [m]I am thy servant and thy son:[2] come up, [n]and save me out of the hand of the king of Syria, and out of the hand of the king of Israel, which rise up against me.

8 And Ahaz took [o]the silver and gold that was found in the house of the LORD, and in the treasures of the king's house, and sent it for a present [p]to the king of Assyria.

9 And the king of Assyria hearkened unto him: for the king of Assyria [q]went up against [‡]Damascus, and took it, and carried the people of it captive to [r]Kir,[3] [s]and slew Rezin.

thirty-eighth year of Azariah, or Uzziah, king of Judah, ver. 8. Some of the most critical chronologers reckon that, between Jeroboam and his son Zachariah, the throne was vacant 22 years; others, 11 years, through the disturbances and dissensions that were in the kingdom; and then it was not strange that Zachariah was deposed before he was well seated on the throne; he reigned but six months, and then Shallum "slew him before the people," perhaps as Cæsar was slain in the senate, or he put him to death publicly as a criminal, with the approbation of the people, to whom he had some way or other made himself odious; so ended the line of Jehu. 2. But had Shallum peace, who slew his master? No, he had not, ver. 13, one month of days measured his reign, and then he was cut off; perhaps to this the prophet, who then lived, refers, Hos. v. 1. "Now shall a month devour them with their portions." That dominion seldom lasts long which is founded in blood and falsehood. Menahem, either provoked by his crime, or animated by his example, soon served him as he had served his master, "slew him, and reigned in his stead," ver. 14. 3. Menahem held the kingdom ten years, ver. 17. But whereas we have heard that the "kings of the house of Israel were merciful kings," 1 Kings xx. 31, this Menahem (the scandal of his country) was so prodigiously cruel to those of his own nation, which hesitated a little at submitting to him, that he not only ruined a city, and the coasts thereof, but, forgetting that he himself was born of a woman, "ripped up all the women with child," ver. 16. We may well wonder that it should ever enter into the heart of any man to be so barbarous, and to be so perfectly lost to humanity itself. 4. Pekahiah, the son of Menahem, succeeded his father, but reigned only two years, and then was treacherously slain by Pekah, falling under the load both of his own and of his father's wickedness. It is repeated concerning him, as before, that he "departed not from the sins of Jeroboam." (5.) Pekah, though he got the kingdom by treason, kept it 20 years, ver. 27, so long it was before his violent dealing returned upon his own head; but it returned at last. This Pekah, son of Remaliah, (1.) Made himself more considerable abroad than any of these usurpers, for he was, even in the latter end of his time, (in the reign of Ahaz, which began in his 17th year,) a great terror to the kingdom of Judah, as we find, Isa. vii. 1, &c. (2.) He lost a great part of his kingdom to the king of Assyria. By this judgment God punished him for his attempt upon Judah and Jerusalem; it was then foretold, that within two or three years after he made that attempt, before a child then born should be able to cry, "My father and my mother," the riches of Samaria should be "taken away before the king of Assyria," Isa. viii. 4; and here we have the accomplishment of that prediction. (3.) Soon after this he left his life to the resentments of his countrymen, who, it is probable, were disgusted at him for leaving them exposed to a foreign enemy, while he was invading Judah; this Hoshea took advantage of, and to gain his crown, seized his life, "slew him, and reigned in his stead." Surely he was fond of a crown, indeed, who at this time would run such a hazard as a traitor did: for the crown of Israel, now that it had lost the choicest of its flowers and jewels was lined more than ever with thorns, had of late been fatal to all the heads that had worn it, was forfeited to divine justice, and now ready to be laid in the dust; a crown which a wise man would not have taken up in the street; yet Hoshea not only ventures upon it, but ventures for it, and it cost him dear.——Henry.

CHAP. XVI. AHAZ—HIS GENERAL CHARACTER.—Ver. 1. We have here a general character of the reign of Ahaz, few and evil were his days; few, for he died at thirty-six; evil, for we are here told, 1. That he "did not that which was right, like David," ver. 2, that is, he had none of that concern and affection for the instituted service and worship of God, which David was famous for. He had no love for the temple, made no conscience of his duty to God, nor had any regard to his law. 2. That he walked "in the way of the kings of Israel," ver. 3, who all worshipped the calves. He was not joined in any affinity with them, as Jehoram and Ahaziah were with the house of Ahab, but ex mero motu—without any instigation, walked in their way. The kings of Israel pleaded policy and reasons of state for their idolatry, but Ahaz had no such pretence, in him it was the most unreasonable impolitic thing that could be. They were his enemies, and had proved enemies to themselves too by their idolatry, yet he walked in their way. 3. That he "made his sons to pass through the fire," to the honour of his dunghill deities. He burnt them, so it is expressly said of him, 2 Chron. xxviii. 3, burnt some of them, and perhaps made others of them (Hezekiah himself not excepted, though afterward he was never the worse for it) to pass between two fires, or to be drawn through a flame, in token of their dedication to the idol. 4. That he did "according to the abomination of the heathen whom the Lord had cast out." It was an instance of his great folly, that he would be guided by those in his religion, and follow them, whom he saw fallen into the ditch before his eyes; and of his great impiety, that he would conform to those usages which God had declared to be abominable to him; and set himself to write after the copy of those whom God had cast out, thus walking directly contrary to God. 5. That he "sacrificed in the high places," ver. 4. If his father had but had zeal enough to take them away, it might have prevented the debauching of his sons: but they that connive at sin know not what dangerous snares they lay for those that come after them. —Henry.

10 ¶ And king Ahaz went to Damascus to meet Tiglath-pileser king of Assyria, and saw an altar that was at Damascus: and king Ahaz sent to Urijah the priest the fashion of the altar, and [u]the pattern of it, according to all the workmanship thereof.

11 And Urijah the priest [x]built an altar according to all that king Ahaz had sent from Damascus: so [y]Urijah the priest made it against king Ahaz came from Damascus.[z]

12 And when the king was come from Damascus, the king saw the altar: and the king [a]approached to the altar, and [b]offered thereon.

13 And [b]he burnt his burnt-offering and his meat-offering, and poured his drink-offering, and sprinkled the blood [g]of his peace-offerings, upon the altar.

14 And he brought also [c]the brasen altar, which was before the LORD, from the fore-front of the house, from between the altar and the house of the LORD, and put it on the north side of [d]the altar.

15 And king Ahaz commanded Urijah the priest, saying, Upon the great altar burn [e]the morning burnt-offering, and the evening meat-offering, and [f]the king's burnt-sacrifice, and his meat-offering, with the burnt-offering of all the people of the land, and their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings; and sprinkle upon it all the blood of the burnt-offering, and all the blood of the sacrifice: and the brasen altar[5] shall be [5]for me to enquire by.

16 Thus did [h]Urijah the priest, according to all that king Ahaz commanded.

17 ¶ And king Ahaz [i]cut off [k]the borders of the bases, and removed the laver from off them: and took down [l]the sea from off the brasen oxen that were under it, and put it upon a pavement of stones.

18 And [m]the covert for the sabbath[6] that they had built in the house, and the king's entry without, turned he from the house of the LORD for the king of Assyria.

19 ¶ Now [n]the rest of the acts of Ahaz which he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

20 And Ahaz slept with his fathers, and [o]was buried with his fathers in the city of David: and [p]Hezekiah his son reigned in his stead.

2 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, [b]but not as the kings of Israel that were before him.

3 ¶ Against him came up [c]Shalmaneser [d]king of Assyria; [e]and Hoshea became his servant, and [e]gave him [f]presents.

4 And the king of Assyria [f]found conspiracy in Hoshea: for he had sent messengers to So [g]king of Egypt, and [h]brought no present to the king of Assyria, as he had done year by year: therefore the king of Assyria shut him up, and [i]bound him in prison.

5 ¶ Then [k]the king of Assyria came up throughout all the land, and went up to Samaria, and besieged it [l]three years.

6 In the ninth year of Hoshea [m]the king of Assyria took Samaria, and [n]carried Israel away into Assyria, and placed them in [o]Halah and in Habor by the river of Gozan, and in the cities of [p]the Medes.[1]

7 For so it was, that the children of Israel had [q]sinned against [r]the LORD their God, [s]which had brought them up out of the land of Egypt, from under the hand of Pharaoh king of Egypt, [t]and had feared other gods,

8 And [u]walked in the statutes of the heathen, whom the LORD cast out from before the children of Israel, and [x]of the kings of Israel, which they had made.

9 And the children of Israel did [y]secretly those things that were not right against the LORD their God, and they built them high places in all their cities, [z]from the tower of the watchmen[2] to the fenced city.

10 And [a]they set them up [t]images and [b]groves[3] [c]in every high hill, and under every green tree:

11 And there they [d]burnt incense in all the high places, as did the heathen whom the LORD carried away before them; and wrought wicked things [e]to provoke the LORD to anger:

12 For they served idols, [f]whereof the LORD had said unto them, [g]Ye shall not do this thing.

13 Yet the LORD [h]testified against Israel,[4] [i]and against Judah, [k]by [5]all the prophets, and by all the [l]seers, saying, [m]Turn ye from your evil ways, and [n]keep my commandments and my statutes, according to all the law which I commanded your fathers, and which I sent to you by my servants the prophets.

Syrians, perhaps when he went to Damascus to congratulate Tiglath-pileser on his success. There he saw an altar, in the temple of some of their idols, which appeared to him more magnificent, or convenient, than that which Solomon had made according to the will of God. At the command of Ahaz, with which he sent a model of the altar from Damascus, probably adorned by many figures of idols, the wretched high priest, Urijah, without scruple or hesitation, prepared one like it, with which he profaned the court of the temple; and when Ahaz returned, the altar of God was removed to make way for it. It is uncertain whether sacrifices were offered to the gods of Damascus on this altar, or whether the oblations were presented to JEHOVAH alone. It seems that Ahaz pretended to convert the former altar into an oracle, at which he might inquire: as the church of Rome, by adoring the host, has converted the Lord's supper into the most absurd and detestable idolatry, under the pretence of honouring it. Some, however, think that Ahaz only meant, that he would take advice what to do with the altar: and tradition reports that he demolished it, and made a sundial (called the sundial of Ahaz,) of the brass, chap. xx. 11. In the whole transaction the high priest was willing to oblige the king by servile compliances; and did not, as far as it appears, need either menaces, or promises, or even bribes, to procure his concurrence.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The word of God affords abundant encouragement to pious parents to give their children good instructions, enforced by good examples, and to pray for them; and these means are so generally made effectual, as sufficiently to verify the proverb, "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old, he will not depart from it." Yet there are exceptions recorded in the Scriptures, to remind us, that every man is born in sin, and that the grace of God alone can change the heart; in order that we may expect the blessing from him only. On the other hand, some who have been, as it were, early dedicated to Satan, and initiated into his service, have, by the victorious grace of God, been made eminent examples of faith and piety: and every accurate observer of mankind, in places favoured with the light of the gospel, has remarked instances of both.—The infatuated slaves of sin heedlessly proceed in those paths, whence others have been hurried into destruction. But we need not wonder that men violate the law of God, in the indulgence of their natural passions, when they cannot be restrained from disobeying him, in the most unnatural cruelty to themselves and their own children.—Scott.

CHAP. XVII. RUIN OF HOSHEA AND HIS KINGDOM.—Ver. 3. We have here the reign and ruin of Hoshea, the last of the kings of Israel, concerning whom observe, that though he forced his way to the crown by treason and murder, as we read, chap. xv. 30, yet he gained not the possession of it till seven or eight years after; for it was in the fourth year of Ahaz that he slew Pekah, but did not himself begin to reign till the twelfth year of Ahaz, ver. 1. Whether by the king of Assyria, or by the king of Judah, or by some of his own people, does not appear, but, it seems, so long he was kept out of the throne he aimed at. Justly were his bad practices thus chastised, and the word of the prophet was thus fulfilled, Hos. x. 3: "Now they shall say, We have no king, because we feared not the Lord." 1. The king of Israel was made a prisoner: he was shut up and bound; being, it is probable, taken by surprise, before Samaria was besieged. 2. The land of Israel was made a prey. The army of the king of Assyria came up throughout all the land, and made themselves masters of it, ver. 5, and used them as traitors punished with the sword of justice, rather than as fair enemies. 3. The royal city of Israel was besieged, and at length taken. Three years it held out after the country was conquered, and no doubt a great deal of misery they endured in that time, which is not particularly recorded; but the very brevity of the story, and the passing of this matter over lightly, methinks, intimate that they were abandoned of God, and he did not now regard the affliction of Israel, as sometimes he had done. 4. The people of Israel were carried captives into Assyria, ver. 6. The generality of the people, those that were of any note, were forced away into the conqueror's country, to be slaves and beggars there. (1.) Thus he was pleased to exercise a dominion over them, and to show that they were entirely at his disposal. (2.) By depriving them of their possessions and estates, real and personal, and exposing them to all the hardships and reproaches of a removal to a strange country, under the power of an imperious army, he chastised them for their rebellion, and their endeavour to shake off his yoke. (3.) Thus he effectually prevented all such attempts for the future, and secured their own country to himself. (4.) Thus he got the benefit of their service in his own country, as Pharaoh did that of their fathers, and so this unworthy people were lost, as they were found, and ended, as they began, in servitude, and under oppression. (5.) Thus he made room for those of his own country, that had little, and little to do, at home, to settle in a good land, a land flowing with milk and honey. All these several ways he served himself by this captivity of the ten tribes. We are here told in what places of his kingdom he disposed of them; in Halah and Habor, in places, we may suppose, far distant from each other, lest they should keep up a correspondence, incorporate again, and become formidable. There, we have reason think, after some time, they were so mingled with the nations, that they were lost, and "the name of Israel was no more in remembrance."—Henry.

IMPORTATION OF THE NEW COLONISTS AND THEIR RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTIONS.—Ver. 26, 26. These colonists had met with no remarkable judgments when they served their came vain, and went after the heathen that were round about them, concerning [u]whom the LORD had charged them, that they should not do like them.

16 And they left all the commandments of the LORD their God, and made them [x]molten images, even two calves, and made [y]a grove, and [z]worshipped all the host of heaven, and served [a]Baal.

17 And [b]they caused their sons and their daughters to pass through the fire, and [c]used divination and enchantments, and [d]sold themselves to do evil [e]in the sight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger.

18 Therefore the LORD was very angry with Israel, and [f]removed them out of his sight:[5] there was none left but [g]the tribe of Judah only.

19 Also [h]Judah kept not the commandments of the LORD their God, but [i]walked in the statutes of Israel which they made.

20 And the LORD [k]rejected [l]all the seed of Israel, and afflicted them, and [m]delivered them into the hand of spoilers, [n]until he had cast them out of his sight.

21 For [o]he rent Israel from the house of [p]David; and they made Jeroboam the son of Nebat king: and [q]Jeroboam drave Israel from following the LORD, and made them sin [r]a great sin.

22 For the children of Israel [s]walked in all the sins of Jeroboam which he did; they departed not from them;

23 Until [t]the LORD removed Israel out of his sight, [u]as he had said by all his servants the prophets. [x]So was Israel carried away out of their own land to Assyria unto this day.

24 ¶ And [y]the king of Assyria brought men from [z]Babylon, and from Cuthah,[6] and from [a]Ava, and from [b]Hamath, and from Sepharvaim, and placed them in the cities of Samaria instead of the children of Israel: and they possessed Samaria, and dwelt [c]in the cities thereof.

25 And so it was at the beginning of their dwelling there, that [d]they feared not the LORD: therefore [e]the LORD sent lions among them, which slew some of them.

26 Wherefore they spake to the king of Assyria, saying, The nations which thou hast removed, [f]and placed in the cities of Samaria, [g]know not the manner of the God of the land: therefore he hath sent lions among them, and, behold, they slay them, because they know not the manner of the God of the land.

27 Then the king of Assyria commanded, saying, Carry thither[7] [h]one of the priests whom ye brought from thence; and let them go and dwell there, and let him teach them the manner of the God of the land.

28 Then one of the priests whom they had carried away from Samaria came and dwelt [i]in Beth-el, and [k]taught them how they should fear the LORD.

29 Howbeit every nation [l]made gods of their own, and put them in the houses of the high places which the Samaritans had made, every nation in their cities wherein they dwelt.

30 And the men of Babylon made Succothbenoth, and the men of Cuth made Nergal, and the men of Hamath [8]made Ashima, 31 And [m]the Avites made Nibhaz and Tartak, and the Sepharvites [n]burnt their children in fire to Adrammelech and Anammelech, the gods of Sepharvaim.

32 So they feared the LORD, and [o]made unto themselves of the lowest of them priests of the high places, which sacrificed for them in [p]the houses of the high places.

33 They [q]feared the LORD, and served their own gods,[9] after the manner of the nations [‡]whom they carried away from thence.

34 Unto this day they do after the former manners: they [r]fear not the LORD, neither do they after their statutes, or after their ordinances, or after the law and commandment which the LORD commanded the children of Jacob, [s]whom he named Israel;

35 With [t]whom the LORD had made a covenant, and [u]charged them, saying, Ye shall not [x]fear other gods, nor bow yourselves to them, nor serve them, nor sacrifice to them:

36 But the LORD, who brought you up out of the land of Egypt with great power and [y]a stretched-out arm, [z]him shall ye fear, and him shall ye worship, and to him shall ye do sacrifice.

37 And [a]the statutes, and the ordinances, and the law, and the commandment, which he [b]wrote for you, ye shall observe to do for evermore; [c]and ye shall not fear other gods.

38 And the covenant that I have made with you [d]ye shall not forget; neither shall ye fear other gods.

39 But [e]the LORD your God ye shall fear; and [f]he shall deliver you out of the hand of all your enemies.

40 Howbeit they did not hearken, [g]but they did after their former manner.

41 So [h]these nations feared the LORD, and served their graven images, both their children and their children's children: as did their fathers, so do they [i]unto this day.[10] their own countries: but they now possessed the land which JEHOVAH had called by his own name; and he was pleased to show them, that Israel had not been dispossessed because he was not able to defend them, but because he had given them up to ruin for their sins. It was also proper that they should be convinced they had no right to their new possessions, except by JEHOVAH'S allowance; and that he expected that they should do him homage for their estates: and therefore a number of lions were let loose upon them as soon as they entered the land. The desolations of war would naturally make way for the increase of wild beasts; but these lions assaulted the people after so remarkable a manner, that they concluded, according to truth, that they were sent by "the God of the land," to punish them for not serving him. Ver. 27, 28. It is not probable that this instructor was a priest of the family of Aaron, or that he taught the people from the book of the Divine law: as some have thought. He had, most likely, been one of the priests, either of the golden calf at Beth-el, or of some high place in that neighbourhood: accordingly he resorted to Beth-el as his residence, when sent to teach the people to worship the God of the land, having doubtless assistants in the business.—It is, however, probable, that he did not teach them to worship JEHOVAH by images; though we can only know what he taught by the result: but it is evident they were led to consider JEHOVAH as the local tutelary god of the land, one among a group of other deities; instead of worshipping him as the one, true, eternal, almighty, and glorious Creator, Governor, and Judge of the world. They probably learned to offer sacrifices, with some external regard to the Mosaic law, but without understanding the meaning and use of that sacred ordinance. Along with these, and such like observances, they were allowed, or they assumed, the liberty of serving their own idols, according to the customs of their several tribes.—Scott.

THEIR MONGREL RELIGION.—The king of Assyria took care to have them taught "the manner of the God of the land," ver. 27, 28, not out of any affection to that God, but to save his subjects from the lions. On this errand he sent back one of the priests whom he had carried away captive: a prophet would have done them more good, for this was but one of the priests of the calves, and therefore chose to dwell at Beth-el for old acquaintance' sake; and, though he might teach them to do better than they did, he was not likely to teach them to do well, unless he had taught his own people better; however, he came and dwelt among them, to teach them how they should "fear the Lord," whether he taught them out of the book of the law, or only by word of mouth, is uncertain. Being thus taught, they made a mongrel religion of it, worshipped the God of Israel for fear, and their own idols for love, ver. 33, "They feared the Lord," but they served their own gods; they all agreed to worship the God of the land, according to the manner, to observe the Jewish festivals and rites of sacrificing, but every nation made gods of their own besides, not only for their private use in their own families, but to be put "in the houses of their high places," ver. 29. The idols of each country are here named, ver. 30, 31. The learned are at a loss for the signification of several of these names, and cannot agree by what representations these gods were worshipped. If we may credit the traditions of the Jewish doctors, they tell us that Succoth-benoth was worshipped in a hen and chickens, Nergal in a cock, Ashima in a smooth goat, Nibhaz in a dog, Tartak in an ass, Adrammelech in a peacock, Anammelech in a pheasant. Our own tell us, more probably, that Succoth-benoth, signifying the tents of the daughters, was Venus; Nergal, being worshipped by the Cuthites or Persians, was the fire; Adrammelech and Anammelech were only distinctions of Moloch; see how vain idolaters were in their imaginations, and wonder at their sottishness. This medley superstition is here said to "continue unto this day," ver. 41, till the time when this book was written, and long after, above 300 years in all, till the time of Alexander the Great, when Manasseh, brother to Jaddus the high priest of the Jews, having married the daughter of Sanballat, governor of the Samaritans, went over to them, got leave of Alexander to build a temple in mount Gerizzim, drew over many of the Jews to him, and prevailed with the Samaritans to cast away all their idols, and to worship the God of Israel only.—Henry.

ORIGIN OF THE SAMARITANS.—Ver. 41. Some ascribe these words to Jeremiah, the supposed penman of this part of the history, others to Ezra after the captivity. However, these Cutheans, (as the Jews call them from Cuthah, ver. 24,) maintained this mongrel religion till after that latter period, and so were proper successors of idolatrous Israel, the professed people of God. About four hundred years before Christ, a temple was built by them in competition with the temple at Jerusalem: for, having been joined by a number of apostate Jews, they renounced gross idolatry, and became schismatical worshippers of JEHOVAH, receiving some parts and rejecting others of the Jewish Scriptures. We need not decide whether there were any true godliness among them: but, as a people, "they knew not what they worshipped, for salvation was of the Jews." Christ commanded his disciples, whom he sent forth in his lifetime, not to enter into any city of the Samaritans: yet he himself spent two days at Sychar, one of their cities; and the apostles after the day of Pentecost, do not seem to have regarded the Samaritans as Gentiles; for they preached in their cities before the conversion of Cornelius.—Scott.

[b] Hezekiah the son of Ahaz king of Judah began to reign.

2 Twenty and five years old was he when he began to reign; and he reigned twenty and nine years in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was [c]Abi, the daughter of Zachariah.

3 And he did that which was [d]right in the sight of the LORD, [e]according to all that David his father did.

4 ¶ He [f]removed the high places, and [g]brake the [*]images, and cut down the groves, and brake in pieces [h]the brasen serpent that Moses had made: for [i]unto those days the children of Israel did burn incense to it: and he called it [†]Nehushtan.

5 He [j]trusted in the LORD God of Israel; so that [k]after him was none like him among all the kings of Judah, nor any that were before him.

6 For [l]he clave to the LORD, and departed not [‡]from following him, but [m]kept his commandments, which the LORD commanded Moses.

7 And [n]the LORD was with him; and [o]he prospered whithersoever he went forth: and he [p]rebelled against the king of Assyria, and served him not.

8 He smote [q]the Philistines, even unto [§]Gaza, and the borders thereof, [r]from the tower of the watchmen to the fenced city.

9 ¶ And it came to pass in [s]the fourth year of king Hezekiah, which was the seventh year of Hoshea son of Elah king of Israel, that [t]Shalmaneser king of Assyria came up against Samaria, and besieged it.

10 And at the end of three years [u]they took it: even in the sixth year of Hezekiah, that is the ninth year of Hoshea king of Israel, Samaria was taken.

11 And [v]the king of Assyria did carry away Israel unto Assyria, and put them in Halah and in Habor by the river of Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes:

12 Because [x]they obeyed not the voice of the LORD their God, but transgressed his covenant, and all that [y]Moses the servant of the LORD commanded, and would not hear them, nor do them.

13 ¶ Now in [z]the fourteenth year of king Hezekiah did [a]Sennacherib king of Assyria [b]come up against all the fenced cities of Judah, and took them.

14 And Hezekiah king of Judah sent to the king of Assyria to Lachish, saying, [c]I have offended; return from me: that which thou puttest on me will I bear. And the king of Assyria appointed unto Hezekiah king of Judah three hundred talents of silver and thirty talents of gold.

15 And Hezekiah [d]gave him all the silver that was found in the house of the LORD,[1] and in the treasures of the king's house.

16 At that time did Hezekiah cut off the [e]gold from the doors of the temple of the LORD, and from the pillars which Hezekiah king of Judah had overlaid, and gave [*]it to the king of Assyria.

17 ¶ And [f]the king of Assyria sent Tartan and Rabsaris and Rab-shakeh from Lachish to king Hezekiah with a [†]great host against Jerusalem. And they went up and came to Jerusalem. And when they were come up, they came and stood by [g]the conduit of the upper pool, which is in the highway of the fuller's field.

18 And when they had called to the king, there came out to them [‡]Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, which was over the household, and [h]Shebna the [‡]scribe, and Joah the son of Asaph [i]the recorder.

19 And Rab-shakeh said unto them, Speak ye now to Hezekiah, [j]Thus saith the great king, the king of Assyria, [k]What confidence is this wherein thou trustest?

20 Thou [§]sayest, (but they are but [l]vain words,) [*]I have counsel and strength for the war. Now on whom dost thou trust, that thou [l]rebellest against me?

21 Now, behold, thou [†]trustest upon [m]the staff of this bruised reed, even [n]upon Egypt, on which if a man lean, it will go into his hand, and pierce it: [o]so is Pharaoh king of Egypt unto all that trust on him.

22 But if ye say unto me, [p]We trust in the LORD our God: is not that he, [q]whose high places and whose altars Hezekiah hath taken away, and hath said to Judah and Jerusalem, Ye shall worship before this altar in Jerusalem?

23 Now therefore, I pray thee, [‡]give pledges[2] to my lord the king of Assyria, and [r]I will deliver thee two thousand horses, if thou be able on thy part to set riders upon them.

24 How then [s]wilt thou turn away the face of one captain of the least of my master's servants, and put [t]thy trust on Egypt for [u]chariots and for horsemen?

25 Am [v]I now come up without the LORD against this place to destroy it? The LORD said to me, Go up against this land, and destroy it.

26 Then said Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, and Shebna, and Joah, unto Rab-shakeh, Speak, I pray thee, to thy servants [x]in the Syrian language; for we understand it: and talk not with us in the Jews' language in the ears of the people that are on the wall.

27 But Rab-shakeh said unto them, Hath my master sent me to thy master, and to thee, to speak these words? hath he not sent the reign of Hezekiah; it appears, by comparing his age with his father's, that he was born when his father was about eleven or twelve years old, Divine Providence so ordering that he might be of full age, and fit for business then when the measure of his father's iniquity should be full. Here is, 1. His great piety, which was the more wonderful, because his father was very wicked and vile, one of the worst of the kings, yet he one of the best, which may intimate to us, (1.) That what good there is in any, is not of nature, but of grace, free grace, sovereign grace, which, contrary to nature, grafts into the good olive that which was wild by nature, Rom. xi. 24. (2.) That that grace gets over the greatest difficulties and disadvantages: Ahaz, it is likely, gave his son a bad education as well as a bad example; Urijah, his priest, perhaps, had the tuition of him; his attendants and companions, we may suppose, were such as were addicted to idolatry; and yet Hezekiah became eminently good: when God's grace will work what can hinder it? 2. He was a genuine son of David, who had a great many degenerate ones, ver. 3. He "did that which was right, according to all that David his father did," with whom the covenant was made, and therefore he was entitled to the benefit of it. We have read of some of them who did that which was right, "but not like David," chap. xiv. 3, they did not love God's ordinances, nor cleave to them, so as he did; but Hezekiah was a second David, had such a love for God's word, and God's house, as he had. Let us not be frightened with an apprehension of the continual decay of virtue, as if, when times and men are bad, they must needs, of course, grow worse and worse; that does not follow, for, after many bad kings, God raised up one that was like David himself. 3. He was a zealous reformer of his kingdom, and, as we find, 2 Chron. xxix. 3, he began betimes to be so, fell to work as soon as ever he came to the crown, and lost no time; he found his kingdom very corrupt, the people in all things too superstitious; they had always been so, but in the last reign worse than ever; by the influence of his wicked father, a deluge of idolatry had overspread the land; his spirit was stirred against it, we may suppose, as Paul at Athens, while his father lived, and therefore, as soon as ever he had power in his hands, he set himself to abolish it, ver. 4, though, considering how the people were wedded to it, he might think it could not be done without opposition.—Henry.

EARLY WORSHIP OF RELICS.—Ver. 4. In this reformation Hezekiah not only removed the monuments of idolatry which abounded through the wickedness of Ahaz, his predecessor; but he suppressed the irregular worship upon the high places, which had subsisted for many ages: and in doing this he must have risked much opposition even from his own subjects.—One instance of Judah's idolatry, and of Hezekiah's reformation is mentioned in this place alone. The brazen serpent had been preserved by Israel, as a monument of the miracles wrought by means of it in behalf of their forefathers, in order to excite their gratitude, and encourage their faith and hope. We are not informed where it was placed; but it seems that after a time the people, stupidly and wickedly, made an idol of it, and burnt incense to it; as if it had wrought the cures, instead of being the external sign of God's operation! Hezekiah finding this idolatry deeply rooted, destroyed the brazen serpent, and called it Nehushtan, or the piece of brass; by way of exposing the folly of those who worshipped it, when it was of no more value or efficacy than any other piece of brass. The superstitious veneration paid to sacred relics in the Christian church, and especially the adoration paid to the form of the cross, and even in express words to the wood and nails of it, with all the impostures which have arisen from that absurd idolatry, have been exactly parallel to the worship of the brazen serpent; and Hezekiah's example fully authorizes the total abolition, or disuse, of every thing of that kind in religious worship. There were no relics under the Old Testament church, except the pot of manna, Aaron's rod, and this brazen serpent. The two former were preserved by God's own appointment, but they were concealed in the holy of holies from popular inspection: the other was preserved by human contrivance, and became an occasion of idolatry, until a pious king who doubtless recollected with reverence and gratitude the event commemorated by it, destroyed it with decided abhorrence. And there never were any relics preserved in the Christian church, however good the intention of the preserver might be, which have not issued in such abuses, superstitions and impositions, as must cause all judicious friends to the gospel to unite in wishing for their extirpation.—Scott.

RAB-SHAKEH THE RAILER.—Hezekiah, and his princes and people, were railed upon by Rab-shakeh, the chief speaker of the three generals, and that had the most satirical genius; he was instructed, no doubt, by Sennacherib, what to say, who intended hereby to pick a new quarrel with Hezekiah; he had promised, upon the receipt of Hezekiah's money, to withdraw his army, and therefore cannot for shame make a forcible attack upon Jerusalem immediately, but he sends Rab-shakeh to persuade Hezekiah to surrender it, and if he refuse, that shall serve him for a pretence (and a very poor one) to besiege it, and if it hold out to take it by storm. Rab-shakeh has the impudence to desire audience of the king himself at the conduit of the upper pool, without the walls; but Hezekiah has the prudence to decline a personal treaty, and sends three commissioners (the prime ministers of state) to hear what he had to say, but with a charge to them not to answer that fool "according to his folly," ver. 36, for they could not convince him, but would certainly provoke him, and Hezekiah had learned of his father David to believe that then God would hear, when he, "as a deaf man, heard not,"

28 ¶ Then [a] Rab-shakeh stood and cried with a loud voice in the Jews' language, and spake, saying, Hear the word of [b] the great king, the king of Assyria;

29 Thus saith the king, [b] Let not Hezekiah deceive you: for he shall not be able to deliver you out of his hand:

31 Hearken not to Hezekiah: for thus saith the king of Assyria, Make an agreement with me by a present, and come out to me, and then [e] eat ye every man of his own vine, and every one of his fig-tree, and drink ye every one the waters of his [*] cistern:

32 Until [f] I come and take you away to a land [g] like your own land, a land of corn and wine, a land of bread and vineyards, a land of oil olive and of honey, that ye may live, and not die: and hearken not unto Hezekiah, when he [†] persuadeth you, saying, The LORD will deliver us.

35 Who are they among all the gods of the countries, that have delivered their country out of mine hand, [m] that the LORD should deliver Jerusalem out of mine hand? [s]

36 But the people [n] held their peace, and answered him not a word: for the king's commandment was, saying, Answer him not.

37 Then came Eliakim the son of Hilkiah, which was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and Joah the son of Asaph the recorder, to Hezekiah [o] with their clothes rent, and told him the words of Rab-shakeh.

3 And they said unto him, Thus saith Hezekiah, [h] This day is a day of trouble, and of rebuke, and [*] blasphemy: [i] for the children are come to the birth, and there is not strength to bring forth.[2]

4 It may be [k] the LORD thy God will hear all the words of Rab-shakeh, [l] whom the king of Assyria his master hath sent to reproach the living God; and will [m] reprove the words which the LORD thy God hath heard: wherefore [n] lift up thy prayer for [o] the remnant that are [†] left.

5 So the servants of king Hezekiah came to Isaiah.

6 ¶ And [p] Isaiah said unto them, Thus shall ye say to your master, Thus saith the LORD, [q] Be not afraid of the words which thou hast heard, with which [r] the servants of the king of Assyria have blasphemed me.

7 Behold, I will send [s] a blast upon him,[3] and he shall [t] hear a rumour, and shall return to his own land; and [u] I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own land.

8 ¶ So Rab-shakeh returned, and found the king of Assyria warring against [x] Libnah: for he had heard that he was departed [y] from Lachish.

9 And [z] when he heard say of Tirhakah king of Ethiopia, Behold, he is come out to fight against thee: [a] he sent messengers again unto Hezekiah, saying,

10 Thus shall ye speak to Hezekiah king of Judah, saying, [b] Let not thy God in whom thou trustest deceive thee, saying, Jerusalem shall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Assyria.

11 Behold, [c] thou hast heard what the kings of Assyria have done to all lands, by destroying them utterly: and shalt thou be delivered?

12 Have the gods of the nations delivered them which my fathers have destroyed: as [d] Gozan, and [e] Haran, and Rezeph, and the children of [f] Eden which were in Thelasar?

13 Where is [g] the king of Hamath, and the king of [h] Arpad, and the king of the city of Sepharvaim, of Hena, and Ivah?

14 ¶ And [i] Hezekiah received the letter of the hand of the messengers, and read it: and Hezekiah went up into the house of the LORD, and [k] spread it before the LORD.

15 And Hezekiah [l] prayed before the LORD, and said, [m] O LORD God of Israel, which [n] dwellest between the cherubims, [o] thou art the God, even thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth; [p] thou hast made heaven and earth.

16 LORD, [q] bow down thine ear, and hear: [r] open, LORD, thine eyes, and see: and hear the words of Sennacherib, [s] which hath sent him to reproach the living God.

Ps. xxxviii. 13—15. One interruption they gave him in his discourse, which was only to desire him that he would speak to them now in the Syrian language, and they would consider of what he said, and report it to the king, and if they did not give him a satisfactory answer, then he might appeal to the people, by speaking "in the Jews' language," ver. 26. This was a reasonable request, and agreeable to the custom of treaties, which is, that the plenipotentiaries should settle matters between themselves, before any thing be made public; but Hezekiah did not consider what an unreasonable man he had to deal with, else he would not have made this request, for it did but exasperate Rab-shakeh, and make him the more rude and boisterous, ver. 27. Against all the rules of decency and honour, instead of treating with the commissioners, he menaces the soldiery, persuades them to desert or mutiny, threatens, if they held out, to reduce them to the last extremities of famine, and then goes on with his discourse, the scope of which is, to persuade Hezekiah, and his princes, and people, to surrender the city. Observe how, in order to this, 1. He magnifies his master the king of Assyria; once and again he calls him, "That great king, the king of Assyria," ver. 19, 28. What an idol did he make of that prince whose creature he was! God is the great King, but Sennacherib was, in his eye, a little god, and he would possess them with the same veneration for him that he had, and thereby frighten them into a submission to him; but, to those who by faith see the King of kings in his power and glory, even the king of Assyria looks mean and little. What are the greatest of men, when either they come to compare with God, or God comes to contend with them? Ps. lxxxii. 6, 7. 2. He endeavours to make them believe that it would be much for their advantage to surrender; if they held out, they must expect no other than to eat the refuse of all herbs, by reason of the want of provisions, which would be entirely cut off from them by the besiegers; but if they would capitulate, seek his favour with a present, and cast themselves upon his mercy, he would give them very good treatment, ver. 31. I wonder with what face Rab-shakeh could speak of making an agreement with a present, when his master had so lately broken the agreement Hezekiah made with him, with that great present, ver. 14. Can those expect to be trusted, that have been so grossly perfidious? But, Ad populum phaleras—But gild the chain, and the vulgar will let you bind them. He thinks to soothe up all with a promise, that, if they would surrender upon discretion, though they must expect to be prisoners and captives, yet it would really be happy for them to be so.

Ver. 2. Isaiah had at this time [illegible] office only [illegible] of life, "the God of Israel only," and confined to the [illegible]

Uzziah: for he prophesied, in the days of Uzziah, who died about 758 before Christ; and these transactions occurred about 710. It must be supposed that Hezekiah had often consulted him: and the nature of this message implies a previous acquaintance, and a mutual confidence. Isaiah's visits to Hezekiah, at and after his sickness, are thought by some to have taken place before this, though recorded afterwards, (chap. xx.) and many parts of his prophecy evidently refer to these events.—In this emergency, therefore, Hezekiah sent to Isaiah the prophet, rather than to the high priest; though he had employed the priests and Levites in his reformation. Perhaps Urijah was still living, or some other high priest too much resembling him in character; there seems, however, to have been an intended slight upon the high priest. Some learned men indeed think, that the appointed method of inquiring of God by the high priest, was disused from the time that the temple was built: but this can only be collected from the silence of Scripture, as no express declaration to that effect is recorded.—Shebna, who was employed on this occasion, as well as in receiving the message of Rab-shakeh, is elsewhere represented in an unfavourable light. For pious persons cannot always employ such persons, and such only, as they approve. The elders of the priests accompanied the chief officers of the king, in going to the prophet.

DIVINE PROMISE OF RELIEF.—Ver. 7. "A blast," &c. Some have supposed that this expression related to the manner in which the Assyrian army was destroyed: viz. by exciting one of those scorching winds, which in those countries have been known to destroy great multitudes in a moment. But this is uncertain: and perhaps it only means, that the Lord would destroy all his prosperity, as easily as the pinching gale of wind blasts the tender vegetables; whilst the death of his numerous forces, probably attended by a report, that Tirhakah and the Ethiopians were marching to assault him, as a terrifying rumour in his ears, would hurry him home with dismay and disgrace. As the word, rendered blast, is often translated spirit, some explain the expression to mean, that God would send an angel, or spirit, to destroy Sennacherib's army; but others think it signifies, that God would fill his heart with terror by some supernatural agent. "I will infuse a spirit into him." The words never signify any thing but putting a spirit into a person. This was a spirit of fear.—Scott.

HEZEKIAH'S PRAYER.—In the prayer which Hezekiah prayed over this letter, see, 1. He adores the God whom Sennacherib had blasphemed, ver. 15. calls him "the God of Israel," because Israel was his peculiar people; and "the God that dwell[illegible] cherubims," because there was the peculiar residence of his glory [illegible] glory to him as "the God of the whole earth," and not [illegible]

17 Of a truth, LORD, the kings of Assyria have destroyed the nations and their lands,

18 And have [z]cast their gods into the fire: [x]for they were no gods, but the work of men's hands, wood and stone: therefore have they destroyed them.

19 Now therefore, [y]O LORD our God, I beseech thee, save thou us out of his hand, that all the kingdoms of the earth may know that thou art the LORD God, even thou only.

20 ¶ Then Isaiah the son of Amoz sent to Hezekiah, saying, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, That [z]which thou hast prayed to me against Sennacherib king of Assyria [a]I have heard.

21 This is the word that the LORD hath spoken concerning him; [b]The virgin [c]the daughter of Zion[4] hath despised thee, and laughed thee to scorn; the daughter of Jerusalem hath [d]shaken her head at thee.

22 [e]Whom hast thou reproached and blasphemed? and against whom hast thou [f]exalted thy voice, and lifted up thine eyes on high? even against [g]the Holy One of Israel.

23 By [5]thy [h]messengers thou hast reproached the LORD, and hast said, [i]With the multitude of my chariots I am come up to the height of the mountains, to the sides of Lebanon, and will cut down the [l]tall cedar trees thereof, and the choice fir trees thereof: and I will enter into the lodgings of his borders, and into [6]the forest of his Carmel.

24 I have digged and drunk strange waters,[5] and [k]with the sole of my feet have I dried up all the rivers of [7]besieged places.

25 [8]Hast thou not heard long ago how [l]I have done it, and of ancient times that I have formed it? now have I brought it to pass, that thou shouldest be to lay waste fenced cities into ruinous heaps.

26 Therefore their inhabitants [m]were [9]of small power, they were dismayed and confounded; [n]they were as the grass of the field, and as the green herb, as [o]the grass on the house tops, and as corn blasted before it be grown up.

27 But I know thy [l]abode, and [q]thy going out, and thy coming in, and thy rage against me.

28 Because [r]thy rage against me [s]and thy tumult is come up into mine ears, therefore I will put [t]my hook in thy nose, and my bridle in thy lips, and I will turn thee back by the way by which thou camest.

29 And this shall be [z]a sign unto thee, [y]Ye shall eat this year such things as grow of themselves, and in the second year that which springeth of the same; and in the third year sow ye, and reap, and plant vineyards, and eat the fruits thereof.

IN those days [a]was Hezekiah sick unto death.[1] And [b]the prophet Isaiah the son of Amoz came to him, and said unto him, Thus saith the LORD, [*]Set thine house in order; for [c]thou shalt die, and not live.

2 Then [d]he turned his face to the wall, and prayed unto the LORD, saying,

3 I beseech thee, O LORD, remember now how [f]I have walked before thee [g]in truth and with [h]a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy sight. And Hezekiah wept [12]sore.

4 And it came to pass, afore Isaiah was gone out into the middle [13]court, that the word of the LORD came to him, saying,

5 [k]Turn again, and tell Hezekiah [l]the captain of my people, Thus saith the LORD, [m]the God of David thy father, [n]I have heard thy prayer, [o]I have seen thy tears: behold, [p]I will heal thee: on the third day [q]thou shalt go up unto the house of the LORD.

will, thou art sovereign Lord, for thou art the God, the God of gods; sole Lord, even thou alone; universal Lord 'of all the kingdoms of the earth;' and rightful Lord, 'for thou hast made heaven and earth.' Being Creator of all, by an incontestable title, thou art Owner and Ruler of all." 2. He appeals to God concerning the insolence and profaneness of Sennacherib, ver. 16, "'Lord, hear; Lord, see.' Here it is under his own hand." Had Hezekiah only been abused, he would have passed it by; but it is God, the living God, that is reproached, the jealous God. "Lord, what wilt thou do for thy great name?" 3. He owns Sennacherib's triumphs over the gods of the heathen, but distinguishes between them and the God of Israel, ver. 17, 18. They have indeed "cast their gods into the fire;" for "they were no gods," unable either to help themselves, or their worshippers, and therefore no wonder that they have destroyed them; and, in destroying them, though they know it not, they really served the justice and jealousy of the God of Israel, who has determined to extirpate all the gods of the heathen. But they are deceived, who think they can therefore be too hard for him. He is none of the gods whom men's hands have made, he has himself made all things, Ps. cxv. 3, 4. 4. He prays that God would now glorify himself in the defeat of Sennacherib, and the deliverance of Jerusalem out of his hands, ver. 19. "'Now therefore save us;' for, if we be conquered, as other lands are, they will say that thou art conquered, as the gods of those lands were: but, Lord, distinguish thyself, by distinguishing us, and let all the world know, and be made to confess, that 'thou art the Lord God,' the self-existent, sovereign God, 'even thou only,' and that all pretenders are vanity and a lie." Note, The best pleas in prayer are those which are taken from God's honour; and therefore the Lord's prayer begins with "Hallowed by thy name," and concludes with "Thine is the glory."—Henry.

SAFETY OF JERUSALEM.—Ver. 21. "The Virgin," &c. The inhabitants of Jerusalem, as forming or representing the visible church of God, having his temple and instituted worship among them, are called in one body, "the daughter of Zion," or of Jerusalem. They were safe under his protection and care, as a virgin-daughter in the house of a wise and tender parent: and though now the Assyrian attempted brutal violence, they might treat his efforts with disdain and defiance; might despise them, and laugh them to scorn, and menace his destruction by shaking their heads at him. Perhaps the term, virgin, might refer to the state of Jerusalem, as free from idolatry, and reserved for the Lord alone, or as having never been exposed to the ravages of an enraged victor. The city of David or Zion seems never to have been taken by any assailant from the time when David got possession of it, till the Babylonish captivity.—The former part of this message is addressed, not to Hezekiah, but to Sennacherib, as if present; first by the daughter of Zion, and then by the Lord himself.—Scott.

GOD—THE AVENGER—PRIDE LAID LOW.—Ver. 35. Sometimes it was long ere prophecies were accomplished, and promises performed; but here the word was no sooner spoken than the work was done. 1. The army of Assyria was entirely routed. That night which immediately followed the sending of this message to Hezekiah, when the enemy was just set down before the city, and were preparing (as we now say) to open the trenches, that night was the main body of their army slain upon the spot by an angel, ver. 35. Hezekiah had not force sufficient to sally out upon them, and attack their camp, nor would God do it by sword or bow; but he sent his angel, a destroying angel, in the dead of the night, to make an assault upon them, which their sentinels, though never so wakeful, could neither discover nor resist. It was "not by the sword of a mighty man, or of a mean man," that is, not of any man at all, but of an angel, that the Assyrian army was to fall, Isa. xxxi. 8, such an angel as slew the first-born of Egypt. Josephus says it was done by a pestilential disease, which was instant death to them. The number slain was very great, 185,000 men, and Rab-shakeh, it is likely, among the rest. When the besieged "arose early in the morning, behold, they were all dead corpses," scarcely a living man among them. Some think the 76th psalm was penned on this occasion, where we read that the "stout-hearted were spoiled, and slept their sleep," their last, their long sleep, ver. 5. See how great, in power and might, the holy angels are, when one angel, in one night, could make so great a slaughter. See how weak the mightiest of men are before Almighty God: who ever hardened himself against him, and prospered? The pride and blasphemy of the king are punished by the destruction of his army. All these lives are sacrificed to God's glory, and Zion's safety. The prophet shows that therefore God suffered this vast rendezvous to be made, "that they might be gathered as sheaves into the floor," Mic. iv. 12, 13. 2. The king of Assyria was hereby put into the utmost confusion; ashamed to see himself, after all his proud boasts, thus defeated, and disabled to pursue his conquests, and secure what he had, (for this, we may suppose, was the flower of his army,) and continually afraid of falling under the like stroke himself. "He departed, and went, and returned:" the manner of the expression intimates the great disorder and distraction of mind he was in, ver. 36, and it was not long before God cut him off too, by the hands of "two of his own sons," ver. 37.—Henry.

CHAP. XX. HEZEKIAH'S EXERCISE UNDER AFFLICTION.—Ver. 3. Hezekiah evidently prayed that he might recover, though he expressed himself with submission to the will of God; and doubtless he was very unwilling to die at that time. To account for this, it has been said, that believers under the Old Testament, having dark views of the eternal world,

6 And [r]I will add unto thy days fifteen years; and I will deliver thee and this city out of the hand of the king of Assyria; and [s]I will defend this city for mine own sake, and for my servant David's sake.

7 And Isaiah said, [t]Take a lump of figs. And they took and laid it on the boil, and he recovered.[2]

8 ¶ And Hezekiah said unto Isaiah, [u]What shall be the sign that the LORD will heal me, and that I shall go up into the house of the LORD the third day?

9 And Isaiah said, [x]This sign shalt thou have of the LORD, that the LORD will do the thing that he hath spoken: shall the shadow go forward ten degrees, or go back ten degrees?

10 And Hezekiah answered, [y]It is a light thing for the shadow to go down ten degrees: nay, but let the shadow return backward ten degrees.

11 And Isaiah the prophet [z]cried unto the LORD: and [a]he brought the shadow ten degrees backward,[3] by which it had gone down in the [b]dial of Ahaz.

12 ¶ At that time [b]Berodach-baladan, the son of Baladan, [c]king of [d]Babylon, [e]sent letters and a present unto Hezekiah: [f]for he had heard that Hezekiah had been sick.

13 And Hezekiah hearkened unto them, and [g]shewed them all the house of his [h]precious things, the silver, and the gold, and the spices, and the precious ointment, and all the house of his [*]armour, and all that was found in his treasures: [h]there was nothing in his house, nor in all his dominion, that Hezekiah shewed them not.

14 ¶ Then [i]came Isaiah the prophet unto king Hezekiah, and said unto him, [k]What said these men? and from whence came they unto thee? And Hezekiah said, They are come from [l]a far country, even from Babylon.

15 And he said, What have they seen in thine house? And Hezekiah answered, [m]All the things that are in mine house have they seen: there is nothing among my treasures that I have not shewed them.

16 And Isaiah said unto Hezekiah, [n]Hear the word of the LORD:

17 Behold, the days come, that all that is in thine house, and that which thy fathers have laid up in store unto this day, [o]shall be carried into Babylon: nothing shall be left, saith the LORD.

18 And of [p]thy sons that shall issue from thee, which thou shalt beget, shall they take away; and [q]they shall be eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon.

19 Then said Hezekiah unto Isaiah, [r]Good is the word of the LORD which thou hast spoken. And he said, [t]Is it not good, if [s]peace and truth be in my days?[4]

20 ¶ And the rest of the acts of Hezekiah, and all his might, and how [t]he made a pool, and a conduit, and brought water into the city, are they not written in [u]the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

21 And Hezekiah [x]slept with his fathers: and [y]Manasseh his son reigned in his stead.

CHAP. XXI.

Manasseh's reign, 1; his great idolatry, 3. Amon's wicked reign, 19; he being slain, Josiah is made king, 23.

MANASSEH was twelve years old[1] when he began to reign, and reigned fifty and five years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was [b]Hephzibah.

2 And [c]he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, [d]after the abominations of the heathen, whom the LORD cast out before the children of Israel.

3 For he built up again [e]the high places which Hezekiah his father had destroyed; and [f]he reared up altars for Baal, and made a grove, as did [g]Ahab king of Israel; [h]and worshipped all the host of heaven, and served them.

4 And he built altars in the house of the LORD,[2] of which the LORD said, [i]In Jerusalem will I put my name.

5 And he built altars for all the host of heaven [k]in the two courts of the house of the LORD.

6 And [l]he made his son pass through the fire, and [m]observed times, and used enchantments, and dealt with [n]familiar spirits and wizards: he [o]wrought much wickedness in the sight of the LORD, to provoke him to anger.

7 And [p]he set a graven image of the grove that he had made in the house, of which the LORD said to David, and to Solomon his son, [q]In this house, and in Jerusalem, which I have chosen out of all tribes of Israel, will I put my name for ever:

8 Neither [r]will I make the feet of Israel move any more out of the land which I gave their fathers; [s]only if they will observe to do according to all that I have commanded them, and according to all the law that my servant Moses commanded them.

9 But [t]they hearkened not: and Manasseh [u]seduced them to do [x]more evil than did the nations whom the LORD destroyed before the children of Israel.

10 ¶ And [y]the LORD spake by his servants the prophets,[3] saying,

11 [z]Because Manasseh king of Judah hath done these abominations, and hath done might be expected to die with more regret, than those under the New: but facts by no means support this supposition: for Abraham, Jacob, Aaron, Moses, Joshua, David, and others, seem to have left the world with as much joyfulness as Paul himself. We must therefore ascribe Hezekiah's reluctancy to die either to the state of his mind, or to the circumstances of his family and the nation. Nothing appears peculiarly to have distressed him, in the view of immediate death, as to the state of his own soul. But the circumstances of his family, and the state of affairs in Israel, seem to solve all the difficulty. Probably at that time Hezekiah had no son; for Manasseh, who succeeded him, was not born till three years after. By his death, therefore, this branch of David's family would have been extinct, and the succession must have been continued in a more remote and obscure branch of it: and this would have been a discouraging rebuke to him, as if he had forfeited the covenant of royalty. It is a general and probable opinion, that the nation was at this time threatened with an assault by the whole force of the king of Assyria; they therefore needed a commander, who united wisdom, courage, and faith, to head them in such an emergency; and if he were removed, and they were left to a disputed succession, and the weakness of an usurped or opposed government, there could be little prospect but that Jerusalem would share the fate of Samaria. With great earnestness and perseverance, Hezekiah had brought his reformation to a hopeful establishment: but he might fear lest the instability of the people, and the dissentions of the nobles, would subvert all if he were taken away. He therefore desired to live, not for his own sake so much as for that of his family and people, especially for the interests of true religion; and he prayed to that effect with many tears, as well as with great fervency. The Lord knew, and Hezekiah could appeal to him, that he had walked before him in sincerity and uprightness of heart; having used his authority to suppress idolatry and wickedness, and by every means to promote the worship and service of God; and that he had done what was good in his sight, being an example to his people. The consciousness of his integrity gave him confidence; and he begged the Lord to remember the fruits of grace which had been produced, and to spare him, that he might be yet more fruitful and useful.

THE DIAL OF AHAZ.—Ver. 9—11. The dial, it is probable, was placed full in Hezekiah's view, and the sun shining upon it: and he was allowed to choose whether the shadow should go forward or backward ten degrees; (that is, half-hour lines, as it is conjectured.) The progression of the shadow with accelerated speed, though evidently [illegible] seemed not so extraordinary to Hezekiah as its retrograde motion, which he [illegible] accordingly took place. We are not concerned to determine how [illegible] by the [illegible] in [illegible] a supernatural change in the motion of the earth and heavenly bodies; and some think that the same effect was produced in other places, especially at Babylon. It appears from Herodotus that the Egyptians had observed some few instances, in which the course of the sun and moon was very different from what was usual; though their traditions of them were greatly distorted, and unlike the real facts, as recorded in Scripture.—Scott.

HEZEKIAH'S PIOUS RESIGNATION.—Ver. 19. Observe how he argues himself into this submission. 1. He lays it down for a truth, that "good is the word of the Lord," even this word, though a threatening, for every word of his is so. It is not only just, but good; for as he does no wrong to any, so he means no hurt to good men. "It is good; for he will bring good out of it, and do me good by the foresight of it." We should believe this concerning every providence, that it is good, is working for good. 2. He takes notice of that in this word, which was good, that he should not live to see this evil, much less to share in it. He makes the best of the bad; "Is it not good?" Yes, certainly, it is, and better than I deserve." Note, (1.) True penitents, when they are under divine rebukes, call them not only just, but good; not only submit to, but accept of the punishment of their iniquity. So Hezekiah did, and by this it appeared that he was indeed "humbled for the pride of his heart." (2.) When, at any time, we are under dark dispensations, or have dark prospects, public or personal, we must take notice of what is for us, as well as of what is against us, that we may, by thanksgiving, honour God, and may in our patience, possess our own souls. (3.) As to public affairs, it is good, and we are bound to think it so, "if peace and truth be in our days."—Henry.

CHAP. XXI. MANASSEH.—Ver. 1—6. It is uncertain whether Hezekiah had any other children than Manasseh, or any other wives than Hephzi-bah, (whose name signifies, My delight is in her. Doubtless Manasseh had been properly educated during the lifetime of his father; and the rudiments of religious knowledge which he then imbibed, though they aggravated the guilt of his enormous impiety, might prove the seeds of his subsequent repentance: at least we may be sure that his pious father offered many prayers for him, which at length were answered.—It would be pleasing to his youthful mind to inherit a prosperous kingdom so early in life; but this circumstance proved extremely prejudicial to him, and was still more ruinous to his people. The event, as well as the testimony of the prophets, evinces that Hezekiah's reformation had been complied with in a reluctant and hypocritical manner, especially by the chief men; and that the nation [illegible] fast for destruction. The nobles, upon whom the regency of the [illegible] young king most assuredly devolve, seem to have [illegible] humouring and flattering Manasseh, they [illegible] wickedly [a]above all that the Amorites did, which were before him, and hath [b]made Judah also to sin with his idols;

12 Therefore thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Behold, [c]I am bringing such evil upon Jerusalem and Judah, that [d]whosoever heareth of it, both his ears shall tingle.

13 And [e]I will stretch over Jerusalem the line[4] of Samaria, and [f]the plummet of the house of Ahab: and [g]I will wipe Jerusalem as a man [h]wipeth a dish, wiping it, and turning it upside down.

14 And [i]I will forsake [j]the remnant of mine inheritance, and [k]deliver them into the hand of their enemies; and they shall become a prey and a spoil to all their enemies;

15 Because they have done that which was evil in my sight, and have provoked me to anger, [l]since the day their fathers came forth out of Egypt, even unto this day.

16 Moreover [m]Manasseh shed innocent blood very much, till he had filled Jerusalem from [n]one end to another; [o]beside his sin wherewith he made Judah to sin, in doing that which was evil in the sight of the LORD.

17 ¶ Now [p]the rest of the acts of Manasseh, and all that he did, and his sin that he sinned, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

18 And Manasseh slept with his fathers, [q]and was buried in the garden[5] of his own house, in the garden of Uzza: [r]and Amon his son reigned in his stead.

19 ¶ Amon was twenty and two years old when he began to reign, and he reigned [s]two years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Meshullemeth, the daughter of Haruz of Jotbah.

20 And he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, [t]as his father Manasseh did.

21 And he walked in all the way that his father walked in,[6] and served the idols that his father served, and worshipped them:

22 And [u]he forsook the LORD God of his fathers, and walked not in the way of the LORD.

23 ¶ And [v]the servants of Amon conspired against him, and slew the king in his own house.

24 And [w]the people of the land slew all them that had conspired against king Amon; and [x]the people of the land made Josiah his son king in his stead.

25 ¶ Now [y]the rest of the acts of Amon which he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

26 And he was buried in his sepulchre [z]in the garden of Uzza: and [a]Josiah his son reigned in his stead.

Josiah's good reign, 1; he taketh care for the repair of the temple, 3. Hilkiah findeth the book of the law, 8. Huldah prophesieth the destruction of Jerusalem, 15.

JOSIAH[a] was [b]eight years old when he began to reign, and he reigned thirty and one years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jedidah, the daughter of Adaiah of [c]Boscath.

2 And he did that which was [d]right in the sight of the LORD, and [e]walked in all the way of David his father, and [f]turned not aside to the right hand or to the left.

3 ¶ And it came to pass [g]in the eighteenth year of king Josiah, that the king sent Shaphan the son of Azaliah, the son of Meshullam, the scribe, to the house of the LORD, saying,

4 Go up to [h]Hilkiah the high priest, that he may [i]sum the silver which is brought into the house of the LORD, which [j]the keepers of the [k]door have gathered of the people:

5 And let them [l]deliver it into the hand of the doers of the work, that have the oversight of the house of the LORD: and let them give it to the doers of the work which is in the house of the LORD, [m]to repair the breaches of the house,

6 Unto carpenters, and builders, and masons, and to buy timber and hewn stone to repair the house.

7 Howbeit [n]there was no reckoning made with them of the money that was delivered into their hand, because [o]they dealt faithfully.

8 ¶ And Hilkiah the high priest said unto Shaphan the scribe, [p]I have found the book of the law[1] in the house of the LORD. And Hilkiah gave the book to Shaphan, and he read it.

9 And [q]Shaphan [r]the scribe came to the king, and brought the king word again, and said, Thy servants have [s]gathered the money that was found in the house, and have delivered it into the hand of them that do the work, that have the oversight of the house of the LORD.

10 And Shaphan the scribe shewed the king, saying, Hilkiah the priest hath delivered me a book. And [t]Shaphan read it before [u]the king.

11 And it came to pass, when the king had heard the words of the book of the law, [v]that he rent his clothes.

12 And [w]the king commanded Hilkiah the priest, and [x]Ahikam the son of Shaphan, and [y]Achbor the son of [‡]Michaiah, and Shaphan the scribe, and Asahiah[2] a servant of the king's, saying, and probably to go beyond them. Soon after Hezekiah's death, his reformation seems to have been subverted: and the king proceeded from bad to worse, till he was carried captive to Babylon. Thus Hezekiah, though a prince of eminent piety and excellency, was the son of a very wicked father, and the father of a more wicked son! It is probable that Manasseh was taught to consider his father's attachment to the temple, as the effect of a weak and bigoted mind. It appeared to the nobles more convenient, liberal, and magnificent, to have a variety of temples and altars, than to be confined to meet with the poorest of the people, from all parts of the land, at Solomon's temple. In contempt, therefore, of his father's memory, the king rebuilt the high places which had been piously destroyed. Yet this seemed but a light thing, and he soon proceeded to copy Ahab's idolatry, and even to exceed it. In order, as it were, the more directly to insult the God of Israel, Manasseh built altars to his idols, and to the host of heaven, the sun, moon, and stars, not only in Jerusalem, where the Lord had recorded his name, but even in the courts of the temple itself; both that into which the priests and Levites, and such as brought sacrifices entered, and that in which the other worshippers assembled. —Scott.

AMON.—Of Amon we are here told, 1. That his reign was very wicked. "He forsook the God of his fathers," ver. 22, disobeyed the commands given to his fathers, and disclaimed the covenant made with his fathers, "and walked not in the way of the Lord," but "in all the way which his father walked in," ver. 20, 21. He trod in the steps of his father's idolatry, and revived that which he, in the latter end of his days, had put down. Note, those who set bad examples, though they may repent themselves, yet cannot be sure that those whom they have drawn into sin by their example, will repent: it is often otherwise. 2. That his end was very tragical. He having rebelled against God, his own servants "conspired against him, and slew him;" probably upon some personal disgust, when he had reigned but two years, ver. 23. His servants, who should have guarded him, murdered him; his own house, that should have been his castle of defence, was the place of his execution. He had profaned God's house with his idols, and now God suffered his own house to be polluted with his blood. How unrighteous soever they were that did it, God was righteous, who suffered it to be done. Two things the people of the land did, by their representatives, hereupon. 1. They did justice on the traitors that had slain the king, and put them to death; for though he was a bad king, he was their king, and it was a part of their allegiance to him to avenge his death. Thus they cleared themselves from having any hand in the crime, and did what was incumbent on them to deter others from the like villanous practices. 2. They did a kindness to themselves, in "making Josiah his son king in his stead," whom, probably, the conspirators had a design to put by: but the people stood by him, and settled him in the throne: encouraged, it may be, by the indications he gave, even in his early days, of a good disposition. Now they made a happy change from one of the worst to one of the best of all the kings of Judah. "Once more," says God, "they shall be tried with a reformation: and if that succeed, well; if not, then, after that, I will cut them down." Amon was buried in the same garden where his father was, ver. 26. If his father put himself under that humiliation, the people will put him under it.—Henry.

CHAP. XXII. JOSIAH.—Ver. 1. Concerning Josiah, we are here told, 1. That he was very young when he began to reign, but eight years old. Solomon says, "Woe unto thee, O land, when thy king is a child;" but happy art thou, O land, when thy king is such a child. Our English Israel had once a king that was such a child, Edward VI. Josiah, being young, had not received any bad impressions from the example of his father and grandfather, but soon saw their errors, and God gave him grace to take warning by them, see Ezek. xviii. 14, &c. 2. That he "did that which was right in the sight of the Lord," ver. 2, see the sovereignty of divine grace: the father passed by and left to perish in his sin; the son a chosen vessel. See the triumphs of that grace: Josiah born of a wicked father, no good education nor good example given him, but many about him who, no doubt, advised him to tread in his fathers steps, and few that gave him any good counsel: and yet the grace of God makes him an eminent saint, "cuts him off from the wild olive, and grafts him into the good olive," Rom. xi. 24. Nothing is too hard for that grace to do. He walked in a good way, and turned not aside (as some of his predecessors had done who begun well) "to the right hand or to the left:" there are errors on both hands, but God kept him in the right way, he fell not either into superstition or profaneness. 3. That he took care for the repair of the temple. This he did in the 18th year of his reign, ver. 3; compare 2 Chron. xxxiv. 8. He began much sooner to "seek the Lord," as appears 2 Chron. xxxiv. 3, but it is to be feared the work of reformation went slowly on, and met with much opposition, so that he could not effect what he desired and designed, till his power was thoroughly confirmed. The consideration of the time we unavoidably lost in our minority should quicken us, when we come to years, to act with so much the more vigour in the service of God.—Henry.

RECOVERY OF THE BOOK OF THE LAW.—Ver. 8—11. The inquiries and controversies, which this account of finding the book of the law has occasioned, seem to have been quite unnecessary. If it were conceded that no other complete copy existed in all the world, at the time when this book was found, it would not in the smallest degree invaliand for the people, and for all Judah, concerning the words of this book that is found: for [a]great is the wrath of the LORD that is kindled against us, [b]because our fathers have not hearkened unto the words of this book, to do according unto all that which is written concerning us.

14 So Hilkiah the priest, and Ahikam, and Achbor, and Shaphan, and Asahiah, went unto Huldah [c]the prophetess,[3] the wife of Shallum the son of [d]Tikvah, the son of Harhas, keeper of the [4]wardrobe; (now she dwelt in Jerusalem in the [f]college;) and they communed with her.

15 ¶ And she said unto them, [g]Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, Tell the man that sent you to me,

16 Thus saith the LORD, [h]Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, and upon the inhabitants thereof, even [5]all the words of the book which the king of Judah hath read:

17 Because they [k]have forsaken me, and have burned incense unto other gods, that they might provoke me to anger with all [l]the works of their hands; therefore my wrath shall be kindled against this place, and [m]shall not be quenched.

18 But to [n]the king of Judah which sent you to enquire of the LORD, [o]thus shall ye say to him, Thus saith the LORD God of Israel, As touching the words which thou hast heard;

19 Because [p]thine heart was tender, and thou hast [q]humbled thyself before the LORD, when thou heardest what I spake against this place, and against the inhabitants thereof, that they should become [r]a desolation and a curse, and hast rent thy clothes, and [s]wept before me; [t]I also have heard thee, saith the LORD.

20 Behold therefore, [u]I will gather thee unto thy fathers, and thou shalt be [v]gathered into thy grave in peace;[4] and thine eyes shall not see all the evil which I will bring upon this place. And they brought the king word again.

AND [a]the king sent, and they gathered unto him all the elders of Judah and of Jerusalem.

2 And the king went up into the house of the LORD, and all the men of Judah and all the inhabitants of Jerusalem with him, and the priests, and the prophets,[1] and all the people, [*]both [b]small and great: and [c]he read in their ears all the words of [d]the book of the covenant which was found in the house of the LORD.

3 ¶ And the king [e]stood by a pillar, and [f]made a covenant before the LORD, [g]to walk after the LORD, and to keep [h]his commandments and his testimonies and his statutes [i]with all their heart and all their soul, to perform the words of this covenant that were written in this book. [j]And all the people stood to the covenant.

4 ¶ And the king commanded Hilkiah the high priest, and the [k]priests of the second order,[2] and [l]the keepers of the door, [m]to bring forth out of the temple of the LORD all the vessels that were made for [n]Baal, and for the grove, and for all the host of heaven: and he burned them without Jerusalem in the fields of [o]Kidron, and carried the ashes of them unto [p]Beth-el.

5 And he [*]put down [†]the idolatrous priests, whom the kings of Judah had ordained to burn incense in the high places in the cities of Judah, and in the places round about Jerusalem: them also that burned incense unto Baal, to the sun, and to the moon, and to the [‡]planets, and to [q]all the host of heaven.

6 And he brought out [r]the grove from the house of the LORD, without Jerusalem, unto the brook Kidron, [s]and burned it at the brook Kidron, and stamped it small to powder, and cast the powder thereof upon [t]the graves of the children of the people.

7 And he brake down the houses of [u]the sodomites, that were by the house of the LORD, [x]where the women wove [6]hangings for the grove.

8 And he brought all the priests out of the cities of Judah, and defiled the high places where the priests had burned incense, from [y]Geba to [z]Beer-sheba, and brake down the high places of the gates that were in the entering in of the gate of Joshua the governor of the city, which were on a man's left hand at the gate of the city.

9 Nevertheless [a]the priests of the high places came not up to the altar of the LORD in Jerusalem, [b]but they did eat of the unleavened bread among their brethren.

10 And he defiled [c]Topheth,[3] which is in [d]the valley of the children of Hinnom, that no man [e]might make his son or his daughter to pass through the fire to Molech.

11 And he took away the horses[4] that the kings of Judah had given to [f]the sun, at the entering in of the house of the LORD, by the chamber of Nathan-melech [7]the chamberlain, which was in the suburbs, and burned the chariots of the sun with fire.

date the authenticity of that part of holy writ: because all the succeeding writers of the Scriptures, with Christ himself and his apostles, have given the sanction of their testimony to its divine original. All the cavils and objections therefore of infidels, grounded upon this circumstance, mean nothing; except they are intended to demonstrate their embittered enmity to the sacred Scriptures.—It is highly probable, that copies of the law were at that time very scarce, through the idolatry of the former reigns, and the lamentable ungodliness of the people. It may also be reasonably conjectured, that the priests had made abstracts from it, of the outlines of their worship, without specifying particulars, or inserting the solemn sanctions annexed to each of them. The book which Hilkiah found, seems to have been the original book of the law, deposited by Moses at the side of the ark, but which in those distracted times had been removed, either for concealment, lest it should be destroyed by the idolaters, or in contempt by those who were turning every thing into confusion. Some argue that this circumstance occasioned Josiah's consternation: but he certainly acted like a man who had never seen the law before; and this most likely was the case, though there might be copies dispersed among his subjects. It is probable his reformation had hitherto been conducted by such abstracts as have been mentioned, or by traditional knowledge. If the kings of Judah had observed the rule of transcribing the law with their own hands, very salutary effects might have been produced; but it seems to have been entirely neglected, as well as the command to read the law publicly to the people, every year at the feast of tabernacles. It is supposed that the portion which was first read to Josiah, was the twenty-eighth and twenty-ninth chapters of Deuteronomy; and these were, doubtless, well suited to convince him that the guilt and danger of his people was much greater than he had apprehended, and to induce the expressions of fear, sorrow, and humiliation which he showed.

HULDAH THE PROPHETESS.—Ver. 14. Jeremiah and Zephaniah prophesied at this time; but perhaps being young, and newly entered on their work, they were of inferior note; or they were elsewhere employed. The ordinary ministry, both under the Old and New Testament, is confined to men: but the Lord is not bound by those restrictions which he imposes upon us: and he has often conferred on women the spirit of prophecy—Huldah was doubtless a person of eminent piety, and well known to be a prophetess. She was a married woman, and her husband being keeper of the wardrobe, might make her better known to Josiah, who perhaps had before this consulted her.—Whether the word rendered "the college" means an institution at Jerusalem, in some respects similar to the schools of the prophets in Israel; or whether it only denotes, according to the marginal reading, the part of the city in which she lived, is not agreed. The latter opinion, however, seems most probable, as the same word is in the next chapter translated "of the second order."

CHAP. XXIII. NATIONAL ABOMINATIONS.—Ver. 4. Josiah, in his former well meant attempts for reformation, had probably removed the idols, and abolished the worship of them in Jerusalem: but perhaps he had supposed that the vessels and other valuables might be reserved for the use of the temple. Being, however, now more fully instructed in the law of God, he destroyed all these by fire: and in his progress through the land, he carried the ashes to Beth-el, the beginning of idolatry to Israel, as established by public authority: in order to render both the place and these ashes contemptible or abominable to the people. Ver. 5. Chemarim, the name of these priests, is supposed to be derived from the black garments which they wore, and by which they were distinguished from the priests of JEHOVAH, who wore garments of white linen. Ver. 6. The graves, &c. The graves of the worshippers of these idols are meant: this was another expedient, to render them and the idolaters alike vile and abominable to the spectators. Ver. 7. Hangings, &c. It is supposed that these hangings were intended for tents, in which the devotees of the demons perpetrated the most detestable species of lewdness, as a part of their religion, and as near as possible to the house of the Lord itself! This was even worse than making that holy place a den of thieves. Ver. 8. It is probable that these high places were defiled by casting the bones or dead bodies of men into them. Thus the people in general would be preserved from going thither, when they had so expressly been declared abominable; though presumptuous persons should rebuild them.—Josiah showed his impartiality, when he destroyed those high places at the gates of the city, which seem to have been erected under the patronage of a considerable person, entitled "the governor of the city." Ver. 9. It does not appear that these priests had been guilty of idolatry, but of irregularly and illegally worshipping JEHOVAH in the high places instead of at the temple. To deter others from this inveterate practice, they were excluded from their sacred functions; but not put to death, or deprived of their maintenance, though it is uncertain what portions were allotted them. Ver. 10. Topheth, &c. This place derived its name from a word which signifies a drum: because they used to drown the cries of the children, who were passed through the fire, or were burned in it, by the sound of drums. Ver. 11. The worshippers of the sun represented that luminary by a man seated in a chariot drawn by swift and furious horses; and therefore they dedicated to him horses and chariots. The kings of Judah had imitated this custom, and kept the horses of the sun at the entrance of the temple: and a person, who, as it seems, was very honourably provided for, was employed to take care of them.—Scott.

kings of Judah had made, and the altars [h]which Manasseh had made in the two courts of the house of the LORD, did the king beat down, and [*]brake them down from thence, and [i]cast the dust of them into the brook Kidron.

13 And the high places that were before Jerusalem, which were on the right hand of [†]the mount of Corruption,[§] which [j]Solomon the king of Israel had builded for [k]Ashtoreth the abomination of the Zidonians, and for [l]Chemosh the abomination of the Moabites, and for [m]Milcom the abomination of the children of Ammon, did the king defile.

14 And [n]he brake in pieces the [‡]images, and cut down the groves, and filled their places with [°]the bones of men.

15 ¶ Moreover [p]the altar that was at Beth-el, and the high place which Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin, had made, both that altar and the high place he brake down, and burned the high place, and [q]stamped it small to powder, and burned the grove.

16 And as Josiah turned himself, he spied the sepulchres that were there in the mount, and sent, and took the bones[6] out of the sepulchres, and [r]burned them upon the altar, and polluted it, according to the word of the LORD which the man of God proclaimed, who proclaimed these words.

17 Then he said, What title is that that I see? And the men of the city told him, [s]It is the sepulchre of the man of God, which came from Judah, and proclaimed these things that thou hast done against the altar of Beth-el.

18 And he said, Let him alone; let no man move his bones. So they let his bones [§]alone, with [t]the bones of the prophet that came out of Samaria.

19 ¶ And all [u]the houses also of the high places that were in [x]the cities of Samaria, which [y]the kings of Israel had made[7] [z]to provoke the LORD to anger, Josiah took away, and did to them according to all the acts that he had done in Beth-el.

20 And [a]he [b]slew all the priests of the high places that were there upon the altars, and burned men's bones[8] upon them, and returned to Jerusalem.

21 ¶ And the king commanded all the people, saying, [b]Keep the passover unto the LORD your God, [c]as it is written in the book of this covenant.

22 Surely [d]there was not holden such a passover from the days of the judges that judged Israel, nor in all the days [e]of the kings of Israel, nor of the kings of Judah;

[9] Indeed no king that ever sat upon the throne of Judah made such a speedy alteration in the face of affairs as this prince did. His intentions were hearty and serious toward a reformation, from the moment he was thoroughly informed in the truth of his religion, from the authentic copy of the books of Holy Scripture. His prudence and courage kept pace with his zeal, so that nothing was wanting on the part of this consummate prince to render his kingdom happy.—PYLE.

24 ¶ Moreover [f]the workers with familiar spirits, and the wizards, and [*]the images, and the idols, and all the abominations that were spied in the land of Judah and in Jerusalem, did Josiah put away, [g]that he might perform the words of the law which were written in [h]the book that Hilkiah the priest found in the house of the LORD.

25 And [i]like unto him was there no king[9] before him, [j]that turned to the LORD with all his heart, and with all his soul, and with all his might, [k]according to all the law of Moses; neither after him arose there any like him.

26 ¶ [l]Notwithstanding the LORD turned not from the fierceness of his great wrath, wherewith his anger was kindled against Judah, because of all the [†]provocations that Manasseh had provoked him withal.

27 And the LORD said, [m]I will remove Judah also [n]out of my sight, as I have removed Israel, and will cast off this city Jerusalem which I have chosen, and the house of which I said, [°]My name shall be there.

28 ¶ Now [p]the rest of the acts of Josiah, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

29 ¶ In his days [q]Pharaoh-nechoh king of Egypt went up against the king of Assyria to the river Euphrates: and king Josiah went against him; and he [r]slew him at [s]Megiddo, when [t]he had seen him.

30 And [u]his servants carried him in a chariot dead from Megiddo, and brought him to Jerusalem, and buried him in his own sepulchre. And [x]the people of the land took Jehoahaz the son of Josiah, and anointed him, and made him king in his father's stead.

32 And [y]he did that which was evil in the sight of the LORD, according to all that his fathers had done.

33 And Pharaoh-nechoh [§]put him in bands[10] at [a]Riblah in the land of Hamath, [‡]that he might not reign in Jerusalem; and [§]put the land to a tribute of an hundred talents of silver, and a talent of gold.

34 And Pharaoh-nechoh made [b]Eliakim the son of Josiah king in the room of Josiah his father, and [c]turned his name to [l]Jehoiakim, and took Jehoahaz away: and [d]he came to Egypt, and died there.

REFORMATION UNDER JOSIAH.—Ver. 4. 1. The king orders Hilkiah and the other priests to clear the temple, that was their province. Away with all the vessels that were made for Baal. They must never be employed in the service of God, no, nor reserved for any common use, they must all be burnt, and the ashes of them carried to Beth-el; that place had been the common source of idolatry, for there was set up one of the calves, and that lying next to Judah, thence the infection had spread into that kingdom, and therefore now he makes it the laystall of idolatry, the dunghill to which he carries the filth and off-scouring of all things, that, if possible, it might be made loathsome to those that had been fond of it. 2. The idolatrous priests were all put down; those of them that were not of the house of Aaron, or had sacrificed to Baal, or other false gods, he put to death according to the law, ver. 20, he "slew them upon their own altars," the most acceptable sacrifice that ever had been offered upon them, a sacrifice to the justice of God; those that were descendants from Aaron, and yet had burnt incense in the high places, but to the true God only, he forbade ever to approach the altar of the Lord, they had forfeited that honour, ver. 9, he "brought them out of the cities of Judah," ver. 8. that they might not do mischief in the country by secretly keeping up their old idolatrous usages; but he allowed them to "eat of the unleavened bread," (the bread of the meat-offering, Lev. ii. 4, 5,) "among their brethren," with whom they were to reside, that, being under their eye, they might be kept from doing hurt, and taught to do well; that bread, that unleavened bread, (heavy and unpleasant as it was,) was better than they deserved, and that would serve to keep them alive; but whether they were permitted to eat of all the sacrifices, as blemished priests were, Lev. xxi. 22, which is called, in general, "the bread of their God," may be justly questioned. 3. All the images were broken to pieces, and burnt; the image of the grove, ver. 6, some goddess or other, was reduced to ashes, and the "ashes cast upon the graves of the common people," ver. 6, the common burying place of the city; by the law, a ceremonial uncleanness was contracted by the touch of a grave, so that, in casting them here, he declared them most impure, and none could touch them without making themselves unclean by it. 4. All the wicked houses were suppressed, those nests of impiety that harboured idolaters, the houses of the sodomites, ver. 7, (down with them, down with them, raze them to the foundation;) the high places were, in like manner, broken down, and levelled with the ground, ver. 8, even that which belonged to the governor of the city, for no man's greatness or power may protect him in idolatry or profaneness; let governors be obliged, in the first place, to reform, and then the governed will be the sooner influenced; he defiled the high places, ver. 8, and again, ver. 13, did all he could to render them abominable, and put the people out of conceit with them, as Jehu did when he made the house of Baal a draught-house, 2 Kings x. 27. 5. The horses that had been given to the sun were taken away, and put to common use, and so were delivered from the vanity to which they were made subject; and the chariots of the sun (what pity was it that those horses and chariots should be kept as the chariots and horsemen of Israel!) he burned with fire; and if the sun be a flame, they never resembled him so much as they did when they were chariots of fire. 6. The workers with familiar spirits and the wizards were put away, ver. 24. Those of them that were convicted of witchcraft, it is likely, he put to death, and so deterred others from those diabolical practices; in all this he had a sincere regard to "the words of the law which were written in the book" lately found, ver. 24; he made that his rule, and kept that in his eye throughout this reformation.

THE GREAT PASSOVER.—Ver. 21. Josiah commanded all the people to keep the passover, which was not only a memorial of their deliverance out of Egypt, but a token of their dedication to him that brought them out, and their communion with him: this he found written in the "book of the law," here called "the book of the covenant;" for, though the divine authority may deal with us in a way of absolute command, divine grace condescends to federal transactions, and therefore he observed it. We have not such a particular account of this passover as of that in Hezekiah's time, 2 Chron. xxx., but in general that "there was not holden such a passover" in any of the foregoing reigns, no, not "from the days of the judges," ver. 22, which, by the way, intimates, that though the account which the book of Judges gives of the state of Israel under that dynasty looks but melancholy, yet there were then some golden days. This passover, it seems, was extraordinary for the number and devotion of the communicants, their sacrifices and offerings, and their exact observance of the laws of the feast; and it was not now, as in Hezekiah's passover, when many communicated that were not cleansed according to the purification of the sanctuary, and the Levites were permitted to do the priests' work. We have reason to think, that, during all the remainder of Josiah's reign, religion flourished, and the feasts of the Lord were very carefully observed.—Henry.

JOSIAH'S DEATH.—Ver. 29, 30. Nabopolassar, king of Babylon, assisted by the Medes, is supposed, before this time, to have conquered the Assyrians, and destroyed Nineveh. Thus he became king of Assyria also: and some learned men are of opinion, that after Manasseh was freed from captivity, the kings of Judah reigned over the country formerly possessed by the ten tribes, as tributaries and allies to the kings of Babylon.—Josiah might therefore consider himself as under engagements to the king of Assyria, as well as unwilling that the contending parties should march their armies through his country: he, however, lost his life in the attempt. Megiddo was situated in the 36 ¶ [f]Jehoiakim was twenty and five years old when he began to reign; and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Zebudah, the daughter of Pedaiah of Rumah.

IN [a]his days Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon[1] came up, and Jehoiakim became his servant three years: then he turned and rebelled against him.

2 And [c]the LORD sent against him bands of the Chaldees, and bands of the Syrians, and bands of the Moabites, and bands of the children of Ammon, and sent them against Judah[2] to destroy it, [d]according to the word of the LORD, which he spake by [*]his servants the prophets.

3 Surely [e]at the commandment of the LORD came this upon Judah, to [f]remove them out of his sight, [g]for the sins of Manasseh, according to all that he did;

4 And also [h]for the innocent blood that he shed: for he filled Jerusalem with innocent blood; [i]which the LORD would not pardon.

5 ¶ Now [j]the rest of the acts of Jehoiakim, and all that he did, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Judah?

6 So Jehoiakim [k]slept with his fathers: and Jehoiachin his son reigned in his stead.

8 ¶ [n]Jehoiachin was [o]eighteen years old[3] when he began to reign, and he reigned in Jerusalem three months. And his mother's name was Nehushta, the daughter of Elnathan of Jerusalem.

10 ¶ At that time the servants of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came up against Jerusalem, and the city [†]was besieged.

Jerusalem is besieged, 1. Zedekiah taken, his sons slain, and his eyes put out, 4.

AND it came to pass [a]in the ninth year of his reign, in the tenth month, in the tenth day of the month, that [b]Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon came, he, and all his host, against Jerusalem, and [c]pitched against it; and they built forts against it round about.

2 And the city was besieged unto the eleventh year of king Zedekiah.

northern part of the land of Israel; but at this time it seems to have been under Josiah's government. Perhaps Josiah disguised himself, that the king of Egypt might not know him; but he, having discovered him, singled him out for slaughter. When he had received his mortal wound, he was carried out of the battle, and he died by the way to Jerusalem. The people of the land placed the second son of Josiah on the throne in preference to his elder brother: probably, because he was deemed to be of a more active and martial temper. And to confirm their irregular proceedings, they anointed him, as if he had been immediately appointed by God: but, alas! the season of the Lord's graciously giving them pious kings to reign over them was elapsed, and all Josiah's sons proved wicked, impolitic, and unsuccessful. Ver. 33. Jehoahaz had assumed the regal authority without Pharaoh's consent, and, perhaps, attempted to continue the war against him; but, by some means, Pharaoh took him prisoner, deposed him, and sent him bound into Egypt, where he ended his days: and the land was put under tribute, in token of its subjection to the king of Egypt. Ver. 34. "Jehoiakim" means the same as "Eliakim;" except that the latter is compounded with the word translated GOD, the former with a part of the name JEHOVAH. Pharaoh seems not to have wished Jehoiakim to renounce his religion; but chose to distinguish him as the ruler of that people who professed to worship JEHOVAH.—Hitherto the kingdom of Judah had descended in a direct line from father to son, and this is the first instance of one brother succeeding another.—Scott.

CHAP. XXIV. INVASION BY NEBUCHADNEZZAR.—Ver. 1. Pharaoh-nechoh, after Josiah's death, obtained a victory over the king of Babylon, and for some time retained Judea and Syria in subjection. But not long after, Nabopolassar seems to have associated his son Nebuchadnezzar with him in the kingdom, that by him the war with the Egyptians might be conducted with greater vigour; for when Daniel had been "three years" under tuition at Babylon, and had afterwards been introduced to Nebuchadnezzar, he interpreted the dream of that prince in "the second" year of his reign; yet Daniel had been carried captive by Nebuchadnezzar the king. Two distinct dates respecting the beginning of his reign must be admitted; and it appears that he was made king two or three years before his father died.—Nebuchadnezzar having obtained decisive advantages against the Egyptians, attacked Jehoiakim as an ally of Nechoh, and, having taken him prisoner, he "put him in chains to carry him to Babylon;" but, upon his submission, he released him, and carried away some of the gold and silver vessels of the temple, and some of the most considerable persons of the land; among the latter were Daniel and his companions. This is the first epoch of the seventy years of the Babylonish captivity. Nebuchadnezzar left Babylon in the third year of Jehoiakim, and he reduced that prince in his fourth year. After this Jehoiakim served the king of Babylon three years, and in his eighth year he rebelled against him, about three years before his death.—Scott.

JEHOIAKIM.—His reign was short and inconsiderable; he reigned but three months, and then was removed and carried captive to Babylon, as his father, it is likely, would have been, if he had but lived so much longer. What an unhappy young prince was this, that was thrust into a falling house, a sinking throne! What an unnatural father had he, who begat him to suffer for him! and by his own sin and folly had left himself nothing to bequeath to his son but his own miseries! Yet this young prince reigned long enough to show that he justly smarted for his fathers' sins, for he trod in their steps, ver. 9. He "did that which was evil in the sight of the Lord," as they had done; he did nothing to cut off the entail of the curse, to discharge the encumbrances of his crown, and therefore, (Transit cum onere—The encumbrance descends with the crown) with his own iniquity that of his fathers shall come into the account.—Henry.

FIRST CAPTIVITY.—Ver. 8—16. After all the depredations to which the temple had been exposed, some of the vessels that Solomon had made, remained in the treasuries of the temple: but all, except what were in immediate use, seem to have been seized, cut in pieces, and sent to Babylon. And those afterwards mentioned might be such as had been before this carried-away, or such as were found at the complete destruction of the temple and city. This event took place in the eighth year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign, ver 12, and forms a second epoch to be regarded in computing the duration of the captivity.—The chief and the most useful of the people were carried to Babylon, that the land might be reduced to absolute dependence on Nebuchadnezzar. Seven thousand soldiers, one thousand craftsmen and smiths, and two thousand persons of superior rank, may make up the sum total ten thousand. Some learned men, however, suppose that there were ten thousand carried captive from Jerusalem alone, besides a thousand craftsmen and smiths; and also seven thousand from the rest of the land.—Jeremiah speaks of three thousand and twenty-three, who seem to have been carried away the year before out of the open country. Among the rest, Ezekiel seems to have been at this time made a captive.—Scott.

CHAP. XXV. FINAL CAPTURE OF JERUSALEM.—Ver. 1—5. Jerusalem was so fortified by nature and art, that notwithstanding the enfeebled state of the inhabitants, and Nebuchadnezzar's great power and military skill, it could not be taken till the besieged were incapacitated by famine to make any further resistance. In the Prophecy and Lamentations of Jeremiah, we shall have an opportunity of more fully considering the 13 ¶ And [z]the [a]pillars of brass that were in the house of the LORD, and the [b]bases, and the brasen sea that was in the house of the LORD, did the Chaldees break in pieces, and carried the brass of them to Babylon.

14 And [c]the pots, and the shovels, and the snuffers, and the spoons, and all the vessels of brass wherewith they ministered, took they away.

15 And the firepans, and the bowls, [d]and such things as were of gold, in gold, and of silver, in silver, the captain of the guard took away.

16 The two pillars, one [‖]sea, and the bases which Solomon had made for the house of the LORD; [e]the brass of all these vessels was without weight.

17 The height of the [f]one pillar was eighteen cubits, and the chapiter upon it was brass; and the height of the chapiter three cubits; and the wreathen work, and pomegranates upon the chapiter round about, all of brass: and like unto these had the second pillar with wreathen work:

18 ¶ And the captain of the guard took [g]Seraiah the chief priest, and [h]Zephaniah the second priest,[2] and the three keepers of the [*]door:

19 And out of the city he took an [†]officer, that was set over the men of war, and [i]five men of them that [‡]were in the king's presence, which were found in the city, and the [§]principal scribe of the host, which mustered the people of the land, and threescore men of the people of the land that were found in the city:

20 And Nebuzar-adan captain of the guard took these, [j]and brought them to the king of Babylon to Riblah:

21 And the king of Babylon smote them, and slew them at Riblah in the land of Hamath. [k]So Judah[3] was carried away out of their land.

22 ¶ And as for [l]the people that remained in the land of Judah, whom Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon had left, even over them he made [m]Gedaliah the son of [n]Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, ruler.

23 And [o]when all the captains of the armies, they and their men, heard that the king of Babylon had made Gedaliah governor, there came to Gedaliah to Mizpah, even Ishmael[4] the son of Nethaniah, and Johanan the son of Careah, and Seraiah the son of Tanhumeth the Netophathite and Jaazaniah the son of a Maachathite, they and their men.

24 And Gedaliah [p]sware to them and to their men, and said unto them, Fear not to be the servants of the Chaldees: dwell in the land, and serve the king of Babylon; [q]and it shall be well with you.

25 But it came to pass [r]in the seventh month, that [s]Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, the son of Elishama, of the seed [‖]royal, came, and ten men with him, and smote Gedaliah, that he died, and the Jews and the Chaldees that were with him at Mizpah.

26 And [t]all the people, both small and great, and the captains of the armies, arose, and came to Egypt: for they were afraid of the Chaldees.

27 ¶ And [u]it came to pass in the seven and thirtieth year of the captivity of Jehoiachin king of Judah, in the twelfth month, on the seven and twentieth day of the month, that Evil-merodach[5] king of Babylon in the year that he began to reign did [x]lift up the head of Jehoiachin king of Judah out of prison;

28 And he spake [*]kindly to him, and set his throne above [z]the throne of the kings that were with him in Babylon; circumstances of this catastrophe, and, indeed, the whole of this compendious history: it suffices in this place to observe, that the obstinacy, impiety, and misery of the besieged were alike great, and almost unparalleled. The king and his remaining forces endeavoured to escape by some private gate, which the enemy had not observed, or did not guard; but his attendants were dispersed, and he was taken prisoner. Ver. 6, 7. Nebuchadnezzar, having placed Zedekiah on the throne, and made him engage to be faithful to him, tried and condemned him as a traitor, in the presence of his ministers and counsellors: and having slain his sons in his sight, as the last spectacle which he should ever behold, and which might ever after haunt his affrighted imagination, he put out his eyes, and sent him in chains to Babylon. Here he ended his life, probably not long after: no more is recorded concerning him.—Zedekiah left daughters at Jerusalem, who went down with Johanan to Egypt, and doubtless died there.—Scott.

BURNING OF THE CITY AND TEMPLE.—1. The city and temple are burnt, ver. 9. It does not appear that the king of Babylon designed to send any colonies to people Jerusalem, and therefore he ordered it to be laid in ashes, as a nest of rebels. At the burning of the king's house, and "the houses of the great men," one cannot so much wonder, (the inhabitants had, by their sins, made them combustible;) but that the "house of the Lord" should perish in these flames, that that holy and beautiful house should be burnt with fire, Isa. lxiv. 11, is very strange, that house which David prepared for, and which Solomon built, at such a vast expense; that house which had the eye and heart of God perpetually upon it, 1 Kings ix. 3, might not that have been snatched as a brand out of this burning? No, it must not be fire-proof against God's judgments; this stately structure must be turned into ashes, and, it is probable, the ark in it, for the enemies, having heard how dear the Philistines paid for the abusing of it, durst not seize that, nor did any of its friends take care to preserve it, for then we should have heard of it again in the second temple; one of the apocryphal writers does indeed tell us that the prophet Jeremiah got it out of the temple, and conveyed it to a cave in mount Nebo, on the other side Jordan, and hid it there, 2 Macc. ii. 4, 5, but that could not be, for Jeremiah was a close prisoner at that time. By the burning of the temple, God would show how little he cares for the external pomp of his worship, when the life and power of religion are neglected; the people trusted to the temple, as if that would protect them in their sins, Jer. vii. 4; but God by this lets them know that, when they had profaned it, they would find it but a refuge of lies. This temple had stood about 420, some say 430 years; the people having forfeited the promises made concerning it, those promises must be understood of the gospel-temple, which is God's rest for ever. It is observable that the second temple was burnt by the Romans, the same month, and the same day of the month, that the first temple was burnt by the Chaldeans, which Josephus says, was the 10th of August. 2. The walls of Jerusalem are demolished, ver. 10, as if the victorious army would be revenged on them that had kept them out so long, or, at least, prevent the like opposition another time. Sin unwalls a people, and takes away their defence. These walls were never repaired till Nehemiah did it.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Ver. 1—21. If repeated warnings and afflictions leave the sinner's heart more obdurate, it is an evidence that his ruin is at hand.—Those advantages which inspire confidence in the ways of wickedness, will eventually aggravate the possessor's misery: for no power can resist, no craftiness can elude, those whom God appoints to be the executioners of his vengeance.—If rebellion against earthly princes deserves such severe penalties as, by common consent, have, in all ages and nations, been inflicted upon those who were guilty of that crime; who can estimate what, or how much, punishment is due to rebellion against our Creator, Benefactor, and Sovereign!—Precious as our eyes are to us, they may possibly be reserved to witness such scenes, as may make us wish that they had been previously closed in darkness or in death. But surely no sight can be so distressing as the misery of our children, when occasioned by our own misconduct. God overrules and imperceptibly guides the resentment of men, to execute his righteous purposes for his own glory. In the days of his indignation, he utterly disregards populous cities, magnificent palaces, and fertile countries: nay, he permits his avowed enemies to destroy his sanctuaries, to prevent the administration of his ordinances, and even to extinguish the very light of his gospel, in those places where these inestimable advantages have long been despised, neglected, or perverted. But he will still preserve his true religion, though perhaps among the poor and despised alone.—As the Lord "spared not the angels that sinned;" as he hath doomed the whole race of fallen men to the grave, and all unbelievers to hell; and as "he spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all;" we need not wonder at any desolation or miseries which, for sin, he may see good to bring upon guilty nations and churches. Ver. 22—30. The secret working of Providence disappoints the politic or humane purposes of such as purpose to spare those whom God intends to destroy: and, while some are left to their vile passions, and others to their groundless fears and infatuated devices, "his council shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure."—No state of misery on earth can be called absolutely hopeless or comfortless. In hell alone this blackness of darkness is to be found for ever. During our most dismal and tedious nights of adversity, we may hope for the cheerful dawning of prosperous days; especially if our afflictions lead us to repentance: for God hath all hearts in his hands, and, as he sees good, can incline them to kindness. The believer in this world is, as it

THE FIRST BOOK OF THE CHRONICLES.

It is generally agreed that the books of the Chronicles were compiled by Ezra, after the Babylonish captivity, and that they consist of extracts from the public records of the Jews, and the writings of preceding prophets. Some passages appear to have been inserted in the very words of the original record, which was penned before the captivity; and a few names seem to have been added to the genealogies after the death of Ezra (1 Chr. iii. 19-24). The original name is, The Words of Days, which signifies, Journals or Annals; and it is not improperly rendered Chronicles or Records of the times. Anciently, the whole formed but one book in the Hebrew Bible, but the Septuagint divides it into two, and calls them The Books of Things which had been Left Out: but this is less proper than the original name, for there are many repetitions of facts before recorded, as well as further historical information. These repetitions, however, must not be deemed superfluous; for most of them, in some degree, and some of them exceedingly, elucidate the preceding history; and the few that seem not wanted in this respect, are suited to connect the whole into one narration, without referring to other books, which would be peculiarly useful, when copies of the whole Scriptures were both scarce and expensive.—In the genealogies, there are several literal or verbal variations from those found in other parts of Scripture: but it is evident, that many persons had more than one name, and were called by one or the other indiscriminately; and the spelling and pronunciation, in most languages, change considerably in a course of years. Some variations in the numerals have already been noted, and we are sometimes constrained to allow, that, probably, a trivial error of the transcriber has taken place; but there is no variation which in the least interferes with our faith or practice, or weakens the external or internal evidence of the Divine inspiration of the Scripture in general, or of these books in particular.—It was evidently a principal design of the sacred writer, in these records, to bring into one view, and comprise in a narrow compass, whatever immediately related to the nation of Israel, to each of the twelve tribes, and to the family of David, with reference to the settlement in the land after the captivity, and to ascertain the descent of the promised Messiah; and in both these respects the genealogies would be very useful. Until Christ came, all the genealogies of that nation were preserved correct and authentic, but since that period they have none which can be depended on. The types were then fulfilled in the great Antitype; the kingdom and priesthood were permanently united in his person; and the nation soon forfeited their peculiar temporal advantages, by rejecting their King: and so their genealogies were no further needful, and were left to be involved in oblivion or uncertainty.—Many things might be very plain and useful to the ancient Jews, which appear obscure and uninteresting to us. Should it be allowed that a small part of the Scripture was profitable to the church in some ages and places, but not at all in others, it would be no impeachment of the Divine wisdom and goodness; and if we cannot understand, or get any benefit from, certain portions, it is more reasonable to blame our own dulness, than, so much as in thought, to censure them as useless.—The first book commences with genealogies from Adam, till long after the captivity—many of which are collected from other parts of Scripture. The advancement of David to the throne upon Saul's death, is next related: and a much fuller account is given of his internal government of the kingdom, especially in the regulation concerning the priests and Levites in the service of the sanctuary, the preparation that he made for the building of the temple, and the exhortations to Solomon his successor, and to the elders of Israel, with which he closed his days, than in the preceding histories. And the sacred writer seems to have dwelt on these subjects the more fully, in order to stir up a holy emulation in his contemporaries, in restoring the worship at the temple to its ancient order and purity. So that in this book, "the man after God's own heart" shines much brighter than in the second book of Samuel and the beginning of the first of Kings.—The genealogies given by St Matthew and St Luke may be supposed to refer in many respects to those in this book. And when it is said that Zacharias was "of the course of Abia," the reference is still more indisputable (xxiv. 10; Luke i. 5). The prophecies contained in it coincide indeed with those in the second of Samuel and in the Psalms; and therefore cannot be adduced as full proofs of its Divine inspiration: but the sentiments which pervade it are perfectly scriptural; and we are sure it formed a part of the Jewish Scriptures when our Saviour and his apostles appealed to them as "the oracles of God."

were, imprisoned with sins, temptations, and tribulations, sometimes for many a tedious year; but death, as the servant of Jesus Christ, comes for his enlargement. Then the prison-door is opened, his fetters are loosed, his prison garments changed for the robes of salvation and glory; his head is lifted up, and his throne advanced above the chief of the kings of the earth; and he shall be eternally feasted upon the fulness of joy, which is to be found in the presence and favour of the Almighty. Indeed, even here, the Saviour brings to the trembling, distressed, and enslaved sinner, who comes and trusts in him, a blessed release from condemnation and bondage: he bestows on him liberty, change of raiment, royal immunities, and heavenly provisions, day by day; and these are intended as earnests and fortastes of those "pleasures, which are at his right hand for evermore." In short, sin alone can hurt us, and Jesus alone can do good to sinners. May God help us to believe; and to wait, in patient hope, for the blessed season, when, being made more than conquerors by his grace, we shall "sit down with the Saviour upon his throne, even as he hath overcome, and hath sat down with the Father upon his throne!"—Scott.

CHAP. I. All Nations of One Blood.—Ver. 1—27. The four first verses of this paragraph, and the four last, which are linked together by Shem, ver. 4, 24, contain the sacred line of Christ from Adam to Abraham, and are inserted in his pedigree; the order, Luke iii. 34—38, ascends, here it descends. This genealogy proves the falsehood of that reproach, "As for this man, we know not whence he is." Bishop Patrick well observes here, that a genealogy being to be drawn of the families of the Jews, this appears as the peculiar glory of the Jewish nation, that they alone were able to derive their pedigree from the first man that God created, which no other nation pretended to, but abused themselves and their posterity with fabulous accounts of their originals; the Arcadians fancying that they were before the moon; the people of Thessaly that they sprang from stones; the Athenians that they grew out of the earth; much like the vain imaginations which some of the philosophers had of the origin of the universe. The account which the holy scripture gives, both of the creation of the world and of the rise of nations, carries with it as clear evidences of its own truth, as those idle traditions do of their own vanity and falsehoods. All the verses between, repeat the account of the replenishing of the earth by the sons of Noah after the flood. 1. He begins with those who were strangers to the church, the sons of Japheth, who were planted in the isles of the Gentiles, those western parts of the world, the countries of Europe. Of these he gives a short account, ver. 5—7, because with these the Jews had hitherto had little or no dealings. 2. He proceeds to those, many of whom had been enemies to the church, the sons of Ham, who moved southwards towards Africa, and those parts of Asia which lay that way. Nimrod, son of Cush, began to be an oppressor, probably, to the people of God in his time. But Mizraim, from whom came the Egyptians, and Canaan, from whom came the Canaanites, are both of them names of great note in the Jewish story; for, with their descendants, the Israel of God had severe struggles to get out of the land of Egypt, and into the land of Canaan; and therefore the branches of Mizraim are particularly recorded, ver. 11, 12, and of Canaan, ver. 13—16. See at what a rate God valued Israel, when he gave "Egypt for their ransom," Isa. xliii. 4, and cast out all these nations before them, Ps. lxxx. 8. -3. He then gives an account of those that were the ancestors and allies of the church, the posterity of Shem, ver. 17—23. These peopled Asia, and spread themselves eastward; the Assyrians, Syrians, Chaldeans, Persians, and Arabians, descended from these. At first the originals of the respective nations were known; but, at this day, we have reason to think the nations are all so mingled with one another, by the enlargement of commerce and dominion, the transplanting of colonies, the carrying away of captives, and many such occasions, that no one nation, no, nor the greatest part of any, is descended entire from any of these fountains. Only this we are sure of, that God has "created of one blood all nations of men;" they are all descended from one Adam—one Noah. "Have we not all one father? Has not one God created us?" Mal. ii. 10. Our register hastens to the line of Abraham, breaking off abruptly from all the other families of the sons of Noah, but that of Arphaxad, from whom Christ was to come. The great promise of the Messiah (says Bishop Patrick) was translated from Adam to Seth, from him to Shem, from him to Eber, and so to the Hebrew nation, who were intrusted, above all nations, with that sacred treasure, till the promise was performed, and the Messiah was come, and then that nation was made not a people.

The Church and the World.—Ver. 29—54. Israel was a chosen nation, elect in type; and no other nation, in its national capacity, was so dignified and privileged as the Jewish nation was. That is the holy nation, which is the subject of the sacred story; and therefore we are next to shake off all the seed of Abraham, but the posterity of Jacob only, which were all incorporated into one nation, and joined to the Lord, while the other descendants from Abraham, for aught that appears, were estranged both from God and from one another. 1. We shall have little to say to the Ishmaelites; they were the sons of the bond-woman, that were to be cast out, and not to be heirs with the child of the promise; and their case was to represent that of the unbelieving Jews, who were rejected, Gal. iv. 22, &c., and therefore there is little notice taken of that nation. Ishmael's twelve sons are just named here, ver. 29—31, to show the performance of the 3 ¶ The sons of Judah; [c]Er, and Onan, and Shelah: which three were born unto him of the daughter of Shua the Canaanitess. And Er, the first-born of Judah, was evil in the sight of the Lord; and he slew him.

11 And Nahshon begat [s]Salma, and Salma begat Boaz, promise God made to Abraham, in answer to his prayer for him, that for Abraham's sake, he should become a great nation, and particularly that he should beget twelve princes, Gen. xvii. 20. 2. We shall have little to say to the Midianites who descended from Abraham's children by Keturah; they were "children of the east," (probably Job was one of them,) and were dismissed from Isaac, the heir of the promise, Gen. xxv. 6, and therefore they are only named here, ver. 32. The sons of Jokshan, the son of Keturah, are named also, and the sons of Midian, ver. 32, 33, who became most eminent, and perhaps gave denomination to all these families, as Judah to the Jews. 3. We shall not have much to say to the Edomites; they had an inveterate enmity to God's Israel; yet, because they descended from Esau the son of Isaac, we have here an account of their families, and the names of some of their famous men, ver. 35, to the end. Some slight differences there are between some of the names here, and as we had them, Gen xxxvi., whence this whole account is taken. Three or four names that were written with a Vau there, are written with a Jod here; probably, the pronunciation being altered, as is usual in other languages. We now write many words very differently from what they were written but 200 years ago. Let us take occasion, from the reading of these genealogies, to think, (1.) Of the multitudes that have gone through this world, have acted their part in it, and then quitted it. Job, even in his early day, saw not only "every man drawing after him," but "innumerable before him," Job xxi. 33. All these, and all theirs, had their day: many of them made a mighty noise and figure in the world; but their day came to fall, and their place knew them no more. The paths of death are trodden paths, but, Vestigia nulla retrorsum—None can retrace their steps. (2.) Of the providence of God which keeps up the generations of men, and so preserves that degenerate race, though guilty and obnoxious, in being upon earth. How easily could he cut it off without either a deluge or a conflagration! Write but all the children of men childless, as some are, and in a few years the earth will be relieved of its burden under which it groans; but the divine patience lets the trees that cumber the ground, not only grow, but propagate. As one generation, even of sinful men, passes away, another comes, Eccl. i. 4; Num. xxxii. 14, and will do so while the earth remains. "Destroy it not, for a blessing is in it."—Henry.

Practical Observations.—As we are descended from that "one man, by whom sin and death entered into the world;" so we all resemble and imitate him: and this should remind us how vile and frail we are; and excite us to repent, to value the Saviour, to despair of happiness in this miserable world, to seek those things which are above, and habitually to prepare to meet death, who is, to all unbelievers, "the king of terrors." For, as an invincible conqueror, he has already transmitted the bodies of innumerable millions to the grave, and their souls to the tribunal of God and to the eternal world; and is even now ready to deal with us in like manner. But whilst we are spared, we should regard every human being as a brother, a fellow-sinner, and a fellow-sufferer, without respect to climate, complexion, party, character, or even personal injuries; and, with expanded benevolence and compassion, we should aim to alleviate misery, to increase comfort, to promote peace, and to be instrumental to the salvation of men, by our example, prayers, and the improvement of our several talents.—Short is our passage through time into eternity: we are no sooner born, than we begin to die; and all earthly distinctions will speedily be reduced to a level, as the rough weed, the green blade, and the gaudy flower fall before the indiscriminating scythe! May we then be distinguished as the Lord's people, who are his portion, and whom he delighteth to honour and bless.—The inconceivable multitudes of the human race, which have peopled, or shall people, the earth, through successive generations, will ere long assemble before the judgment-seat of Christ, and be divided as easily, and as certainly, "as the shepherd divideth the sheep from the goats:" then the wicked "shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous into life eternal." May we, then, so "look for these things as to give diligence that we may be found of him in peace, without spot and blameless!"—Scott.

CHAP. II. Families of the Chosen Seed.—Ver. 1—17. Here is, 1. The family of Jacob. His twelve sons are here named, that illustrious number so often celebrated almost throughout the whole Bible, from the first to the last book of it. At every turn, we meet with the twelve tribes that descended from these twelve patriarchs. The personal character of several of them was none of the best, (the four first were much blemished,) and yet the covenant was entailed on their seed; for it was of grace, free grace, that it was said, "Jacob have I loved: Not of works, lest any man should boast." 2. The family of Judah. That tribe was most praised, most increased, and most dignified, of any of the tribes, and therefore the genealogy of it is the first and largest of them all. In the account here given of the first branches of that illustrious tree, which Christ was to be the Top-branch of, we meet, (1.) With some that were very bad. Here is Er, Judah's eldest son, that was "evil in the sight of the Lord," and was cut off, in the beginning of his days, by a stroke of divine vengeance; the "Lord slew him," ver. 3. His next brother, Onan, was no better, and fared no better. Here is Tamar, with whom Judah, her father-in-law, committed incest, ver. 4. And here is Achan, called Achar, a troubler, that troubled Israel by taking of the accursed thing, ver. 7. Note, The best and most honourable families may have those belonging to them that have their blemishes.

(2.) With some that were very "wise and good," as Heman and Ethan, Calcol and Dara, who were not, perhaps, the immediate sons of Zerah, but descendants from him, and are named because they were the glory of their father's house: for when the Holy Ghost would magnify the wisdom of Solomon, he declares him wiser than these four men, who, though the sons of Mahol, are called Ezrahites, from Zerah, 1 Kings iv. 31. That four brothers should be eminent for wisdom and grace, was a rare thing. (3.) With some that were very great, as Nahshon, who was prince of the tribe of Judah, when the camp of Israel was formed in the wilderness, and so led the van in that glorious march; and Salma, or Salmon, who was in that post of honour when they entered Canaan, ver. 10, 11. 3. The family of Jesse, of which a particular account is kept for the sake of David, and the Son of David, who is "a Rod out of the stem of Jesse," Isa. xi. 1. Hence it appears that David was a seventh son, and that his three great commanders, Joab, Abishai, and Asahel, were the sons of one of his sisters, and Amasa of another. Three of the four went down slain to the pit, though they were the terror of the mighty. Ver. 18—55. The persons mentioned in the first seventeen verses are most of them such as we read of, and most of them such as we read much of, in other scriptures. But there are very few of those here, that are mentioned anywhere else. It should seem the tribe of Judah were more full and exact in their genealogies than any other of the tribes; in which we must acknowledge a special providence, for the clearing of the genealogies of Christ. 1. Here we find Bezaleel, who was head-workman in building the tabernacle, Exod. xxxi. 2. 2. Hezron, who was the son of Pharez, ver. 5, is the father of all this progeny; his sons, Caleb and Jerahmeel, being very fruitful, and he himself likewise, even in his old age, for he left his wife pregnant when he died, ver 24. This Hezron was one of the seventy that went down with Jacob into Egypt, Gen. xlvi. 12; there his family thus increased, as the other oppressed families there did. We cannot but suppose that he died during the Israelites' bondage in Egypt; and yet it is here said he died in Caleb-ephratah, that is, Beth-lehem in the land of Canaan, ver. 24. Perhaps, though the body of the people continued in Egypt, yet some that were more active than the rest, at least before their bondage came to be extreme, visited Canaan sometimes, and got footing there, though afterwards they lost it. The achievements of Jair, here mentioned, ver. 22, 23, we had an account of, Num. xxxii. 41, and, it is supposed, they were long after the conquest of Canaan. The Jews say, Hezron married his third wife when he was sixty years old, ver. 21, and another after, ver. 24, because he had a great desire of posterity, the family of Pharez, from whom the Messiah was to descend. Here is mention of [illegible] without children," ver. 30, and another, ver. 32, and of one that [illegible] ver. 34. Let not those that are [illegible] ways afflicted think their case new or singular. Providence orders these affairs of families by an uncontestable sovereignty, as pleaseth him; giving children, or withholding them, or giving all of one sex. He is not bound to please us, but we are bound to acquiesce in his good pleasure. To those that love him, he will himself be better than ten sons, and give them in his house a place and a name better than of sons and daughters. Let not them therefore that are written childless, envy the families that are built up and replenished. Shall our eye be evil, because God's is good? Here is mention of one who had an only daughter, and married her to his servant, an Egyptian, ver. 34, 35. If it be mentioned to his praise, we must suppose that this Egyptian was proselyted to the Jewish religion, and that he was very eminent for wisdom and virtue; else it had not become a true-born Israelite to match a daughter to him, especially an only daughter. If Egyptians become converts, and servants do worthily, neither their parentage, nor their servitude, should be a bar to their preferment. Such a one this Egyptian servant might be, that she who married him might live as happily with him, as if she had married one of the rulers of her tribe. The pedigree of several of these terminate, not in a person, but in a place or country; as one is said to be "the father of Kirjath-jearim," ver. 50, another of "Beth-lehem," ver. 51, which was afterwards David's city; because these places fell to their lot in the division of the land. Lastly, Here are some that are said to be "families of scribes," ver. 55, such as kept up learning in their family, especially scripture learning, and taught the people the good knowledge of God. Among all these great families, we are glad to find some that were "families of scribes. Would to God that all the Lord's people were prophets!" all the families of Israel, families of scribes, well instructed to the kingdom of heaven, and able to bring out of their treasury things new and old!—Henry.

Practical Observations.—No length of time will expunge the guilt, or infamy, of those who do evil in the sight of the Lord, are troublers of his people, and die in their sins. But, as the Saviour was pleased to assume human nature, by descent through so many notorious transgressors, and thus to be "made in the likeness of sinful flesh," as well as a sacrifice for sin, all manner of wickedness shall be purged away from those who believe in his name.—Frequently the last become first, and the first last; and atrocious sinners have in every age been transformed into the most [illegible] believers.—Difficulties, blemishes, and disgraces in the beginnings of life, or [illegible] entrance of any undertaking; and remarkable blots in the origin of families [illegible] proved as foils to the lustre, success, or eminence, with which they were favoured. In the same wise, righteous, and merciful [illegible] depresses the [illegible] or diminishes, our households, and renders them a comfort, or a trial to us. Submission to his will is our duty and wisdom; but it is the privilege of the true believer alone to maintain this happy frame of mind.—Scott.

[3] The Targum here hath a very strange observation; for after the word Anani, he saith, "He is the king Messiah, who is to be revealed." The reason of which is given in the famous book Tanchuma (as Becklus here notes), because it is said in Dan. vii. 13, "He saw in a vision, and, behold, one like the Son of man," im anani (in the clouds); which certainly was a vision of the Messiah, as Saadia Gaon acknowledges. And this use is to be made of this passage, that their minds were always full of the thoughts of the Messiah, and that they expected he should be revealed (as they speak) so many generations after Zerubbabel: which is an argument he came long ago.—Patrick.

CHAP. III. David's Family.—Ver. 1. We had an account of David's sons, 2 Sam. iii. 2, &c., and ver. 14, &c. 1. He had many sons; and, no doubt, wrote as he thought, Ps. cxxvii. 5, "Happy is the man that hath his quiver full of" these arrows. 2. Some of them were a grief to him, as Amnon, Absalom, and Adonijah. And we do not read of any of them that imitated his piety and devotion, except Solomon, and he came far short of it. 3. One of them, which Bath-sheba bare to him, he called Nathan, probably in honour of Nathan the prophet, who reproved him for his sin in that matter, and was instrumental to bring him to repentance. It seems he loved him the better for it as long as he lived. It is wisdom to esteem those our best friends that deal faithfully with us. From this son of David our Lord Jesus descended, as appears, Luke iii. 31. 4. Here are two Elishamas, and two Eliphelets, ver. 6, 8. Probably the two former were dead, and therefore David called two more by their names; which he would not have done if there had been any ill omen in it, as some fancy. 5. David had many concubines, but their children are not named, as not worthy of the honour, ver. 9; the rather, because the concubines had dealt treacherously with David in the affair of Absalom. 6. Of all David's sons, Solomon was chosen to succeed him; perhaps not for any personal merits, (his wisdom was God's gift,) but so, "Father, because it seemed good unto thee."—Henry.

Salathiel.—Ver. 17, 18. Many commentators take it for granted, that Salathiel, or Shealtiel, actually descended from Nathan, and was only the adoptive son of Jeconiah: that Solomon's line was extinct; and that Joseph, the husband of Mary, sprang from Nathan, as well as she. They ground this sentiment on these reasons: Jeremiah is supposed to have pronounced Jeconiah childless; but perhaps a satisfactory solution of that difficulty may be adduced. St. Luke mentions Zorobabel, the son of Salathiel, in the genealogy of Mary: but it is scarcely the shadow of an argument to say, because a father and son are of the same names in one genealogy, as they are in another, therefore they were the same persons, when no other part of the genealogy supports, or can possibly accord with, the conclusion. Salathiel, the father of Zorobabel, mentioned by St. Luke, was "the son of Rhesa, the son of Joanna, the son of Judah;" this Salathiel was the "son of Assir, the son of Jeconiah."—"Rhesa (Luke iii. 27,) is not found among the eight children that are here reckoned up."—Bp. Patrick. Matthew says, Jeconiah begat Salathiel; and it will be harsh to interpret this of mere adoption, or of less than being his progenitor; and here are several other sons, or descendants, of Jeconiah mentioned, who cannot all have been adopted. Upon the whole, it is highly probable that the line from Solomon to Joseph was uninterrupted; and that the two families met in Jesus, the real son of Mary, and the supposed and legal son of Joseph. Ver. 19—24. Perhaps Pedaiah was Salathiel's son, Jeconiah's grandson, and Zerubbabel's father: but, being of small note, his name is omitted in the other genealogies, which is a common case. Nothing is known except the names of the persons afterwards mentioned; but several of them must have lived a long time after the captivity, perhaps later than the days of Ezra. St. Matthew evidently deduces the line of Joseph from a different branch of the same stock.—Scott.

CHAP. IV. Jabez.—Ver. 9. The most remarkable person in this paragraph is Jabez. It is not said whose son he was; nor does it appear in what age he lived; but it should seem he was the founder of one of the families of Aharhel, mentioned, ver. 8. Here is, 1. The reason of his name: his mother gave him the name with this reason, "Because I bare him with sorrow," ver. 9. All children are born with sorrow; for the sentence upon the woman is, "In sorrow shalt thou bring forth children:" but some with much more sorrow than others. Usually, the sorrow in bearing is afterward forgotten, "for joy that the child is born;" but here, it seems, it was so extraordinary, that it was remembered when the child came to be circumcised, and care taken to perpetuate the remembrance of it while he lived. Perhaps the mother called him Jabez, as Rachel called her son Benoni, when she was dying of the sorrow. Or, if she recovered it, yet thus she recorded it, (1.) That it might be a continual memorandum to herself, to be thankful to God as long as she lived, for supporting her under, and bringing her through, that sorrow. It may be of use to be often reminded of our sorrows, that we may always have such thoughts of things as we had in the day of our affliction, and may learn to rejoice with trembling. (2.) That it might likewise be a memorandum to him what this world is, into which she bare him, a vale of tears, in which he must expect "few days and full of trouble." The sorrow he carried in his name might help to put a seriousness upon his spirit. It might also remind him to love and honour his mother, and labour, in every thing, to be a comfort to her who brought him into the world with so much sorrow. It is piety in children thus to requite their parents, 1 Tim. v. 4. 2. The eminency of his character: "he was more honourable than his brethren," qualified above them by the divine grace, and dignified above them by the divine providence: they did virtuously, but he excelled them all. Now the sorrow with which his mother bare him was abundantly recompensed. That son which of all the rest cost her most dear, she was happy in, and was made glad in proportion to the affliction, Ps. xc. 15. We are not 37 And Ziza the son of Shiphi, the son of Allon, the son of Jedaiah, the son of Shimri, the son of Shemaiah.

38 These [†]mentioned by their names were princes in their families: and the house of their fathers increased greatly.

39 ¶ And they went to the entrance of [m]Gedor, even unto the east side of the valley, to seek pasture for their flocks.

40 And they found fat pasture and good, and [n]the land was wide, and quiet, and peaceable; for they of [o]Ham had dwelt there of old.

41 And [p]these written by name came in the days of [q]Hezekiah king of Judah, and smote their tents, and the habitations that were found there, and destroyed them utterly unto this day, and dwelt in their rooms: because there was [r]pasture there for their flocks.

42 And some of them, even of the sons of Simeon, five hundred men, went to [s]mount Seir, having for their captains Pelatiah, and Neariah, and Rephaiah, and Uzziel, the sons of Ishi.

43 And they smote [t]the rest of the Amalekites that were escaped, and dwelt there [u]unto this day.

told upon what account he was "more honourable than his brethren;" whether because he raised a greater estate, or was preferred to the magistracy, or signalized himself in war; we have most reason to think it was upon the account of his learning and piety: not only because these, above any thing, put honour upon a man, but because we have reason to think that in these Jabez was eminent; (1.) In learning; because we find that "the families of the scribes dwelt at Jabez;" chap. ii. 55, a city which, it is likely, took its name from his name. The Jews say that he was a famous doctor of the law, and left many disciples behind him. And it should seem, by the mentioning of him so abruptly here, that his name was well known when Ezra wrote this. (2.) In piety; because we find here that he was a praying man. His inclination to devotion made him truly honourable; and by prayer he obtained those blessings from God which added much to his honour. The way to be truly great is to be truly good, and to pray much. 3. The prayer he made, probably, like Solomon's prayer for wisdom, just when he was setting out in the world: he set himself to acknowledge God in all his ways, put himself under the divine blessing and protection, and prospered accordingly. Perhaps these were the heads on which he enlarged in his daily prayers; for this purpose, it was his constant practice to pray alone, and with his family, as Daniel. Some think that it was upon some particular occasion, when he was straitened and threatened by his enemies, that he prayed this prayer. Observe, (1.) To whom he prayed. Not to any of the gods of the Gentiles; no, he "called on the God of Israel," the living and true God, who alone can hear and answer prayer; and in prayer, had an eye to him as the God of Israel, a God in covenant with his people, the God with whom Jacob wrestled and prevailed, and was thence called Israel. (2.) What was the nature of his prayer. [1.] As the margin reads it, it was a solemn vow, "If thou wilt bless me indeed," &c., and then the sense is imperfect, but may easily be filled up from Jacob's vow, or some such like, "then thou shalt be my God." He does not express his promise, but leaves it to be understood; either because he was afraid to promise in his own strength, or because he resolved to devote himself entirely to God. He does, as it were, give God a blank paper, let him write what he pleases: "Lord, if thou wilt bless me and keep me, do what thou wilt with me, I will be at thy command and disposal, for ever." [2.] As the text reads it, it was the language of a most ardent and affectionate desire, "O that thou wouldest bless me!" (3.) What was the matter of his prayer. Four things he prayed for: [1.] [illegible] would "bless him indeed," "That [illegible] thou wilt bless me;' bless me [illegible] abundant blessings." Perhaps, he had an eye to the promise [illegible] in blessing, I will bless thee;" "let that [illegible] Spiritual blessings are the best blessings; and those are blessed indeed who are blessed with them. God's blessings are real things, and produce real effects. We can but wish a blessing, he commands it: those whom he blesses are blessed indeed. [2.] That he would "enlarge his coast;" that he would prosper his endeavours for the increase of what fell to his lot, either by work or war. That God would enlarge our hearts, and so enlarge our portion in himself, and in the heavenly Canaan, ought to be our desire and prayer. [3.] That God's "hand might be with him." The prayer of Moses for this tribe of Judah was, That his own "hands might be sufficient for him," Deut. xxxiii. 7; but Jabez expects not that, unless he have God's hand with him, and the presence of his power. God's hand with us, to lead us, protect us, strengthen us, and to work all our works in us and for us, is indeed a hand sufficient for us, all-sufficient. [4.] That he would "keep him from evil;" the evil of sin, the evil of trouble, all the evil designs of his enemies, that they might not hurt nor grieve him, nor make him a Jabez indeed, a man of sorrow. In the original there is an allusion to his name, "Father in heaven, deliver me from evil." 4. What was the success of his prayer. "God granted him that which he requested;" prospered him remarkably, and gave him success in his undertakings, in his studies, in his worldly business, in his conflicts with the Canaanites; and so he became "more honourable than his brethren." God was of old ready to hear prayer, and "his ear is not yet heavy."—Henry.

CHAP. V. Tribes East of the Jordan.—Ver. 1. The heads of the half tribe of Manasseh, that were seated on the other side Jordan, are named here, ver. 23, 24. Their lot at first was Bashan; but afterward they increased so much in wealth and power, that they spread far north, even unto Hermon. Two things only are here recorded concerning these tribes on the other side Jordan, in which they were all concerned. They all shared, 1. In a glorious victory over the Hagarites; so the Ishmaelites were now called, to remind them that they were "the sons of the bond-woman," that was "cast out." We are not told when this victory was obtained: whether it be the same with that of the Reubenites, which is said, ver. 10, to be "in the days of Saul;" or whether that success of one of these tribes animated and excited the other two to join with them in another expedition, is not certain. It seems, though in Saul's time the common interests of the kingdom were weak and low, some of the tribes that acted separately did well for themselves. We are here told, (1.) What a brave army these frontier tribes brought into the field against the Hagarites, 44,000 men and [illegible] and stout, and skilful in war; so many effective men, that [illegible] How much more could they do [illegible]

10 And in the days of Saul they made war with [q]the Hagarites, who fell by their hand: and they dwelt in their tents [r]throughout all the east land of Gilead.

11 ¶ And the children of Gad dwelt over against them [s]in the land of Bashan unto Salcah:

12 Joel the chief, and Shapham the next, and Jaanai, and Shaphat in Bashan.

13 And their brethren of the house of their fathers were, Michael, and Meshullam, and Sheba, and Jorai, and Jachan, and Zia, and Heber, seven.

16 And they dwelt in Gilead in Bashan, and in her towns, and in all the suburbs of [t]Sharon,[2] upon their [‡]borders.

17 All these were [t]reckoned[3] by genealogies in the days of [u]Jotham king of Judah, and in the days of [v]Jeroboam king of Israel.

19 And they [y]made war with the Hagarites, with Jetur, and [z]Nephish, and Nodab.

20 And [a]they were helped against them, and the Hagarites were delivered into their hand, and all that were with them: for [b]they cried to God in the battle, and he was entreated of them; [c]because they put their trust in him.

21 And they [‖]took away their cattle; of their camels fifty thousand, and of sheep two hundred and fifty thousand, and of asses two thousand, and of [*]men an hundred thousand.

22 And there fell down many slain, because [d]the war was of God. And they dwelt in their steads [e]until the captivity.

23 ¶ And the children of the half tribe of Manasseh dwelt in the land: they increased from Bashan unto [f]Baal-hermon and Senir, and unto mount [g]Hermon.

24 And these were the heads of the house of their fathers, even Epher, and Ishi, and Eliel, and Azriel, and Jeremiah, and Hodaviah, and Jahdiel, mighty men of valour, [†]famous men, and heads of the house of their fathers.

25 ¶ And they transgressed[4] against the God of their fathers, and [h]went a whoring [i]after the gods of the people of the land, whom God destroyed before them.

26 And the God of Israel [k]stirred up the spirit of [l]Pul king of Assyria, and the spirit of [m]Tilgath-pilneser king of Assyria, and he carried them away, even the Reubenites, and the Gadites, and the half tribe of Manasseh, [n]and brought them unto Halah, and Habor, and Hara, and to the river Gozan, unto this day.

judges, if all the tribes had acted in conjunction! (2.) What course they took to engage God for them: they "cried to God," and "put their trust in him." Now they acted as Israelites indeed. [1.] As the seed of believing Abraham, they "put their trust in God." Though they had a powerful army, they relied not on that, but on the Divine Power. They depended on the commission they had from God to wage war with their neighbours for the enlarging of their coasts, if there was occasion, even with those that were very far off, beside the devoted nations. See Deut. xx. 15. They depended on God's providence to give them success. [2.] As the seed of praying Jacob, "they cried unto God," especially "in the battle," when, perhaps, they were at first in danger of being overpowered. See the like done, 2 Chron. xiii. 14. In distress, God expects we should cry to him; he distrains upon us for this tribute, this rent. In our spiritual conflicts, we must look up to heaven for strength; and it is the believing prayer that will be the prevailing prayer. (3.) We are told what success they had: "God was entreated of them," though need drove them to him; so ready is he to hear and answer prayer. They were helped against their enemies; for God never yet failed any that trusted in him. And then they routed the enemies' army, though far superior in number to theirs, slew many, ver. 22, took 100,000 prisoners, enriched themselves greatly with the spoil, and settled themselves in their country, ver. 21, 22. And all this "because the war was of God," undertaken in his fear, and carried on in a dependence upon him. If the battle be the Lord's, there is reason to hope it will be successful. Then we may expect to prosper in any enterprise, and then only, when we take God along with us. 2. They shared at length in an inglorious captivity. Had they kept close to God and their duty, they had continued to enjoy both their ancient lot and their new conquests; but they "transgressed against the God of their fathers," ver. 25.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Happy is that people who live together in harmony, who readily assist each other: who strenuously oppose the common enemies of their souls; and who acknowledge God in all their ways, but are especially earnest in times of trial and temptation. Such persons will assuredly be heard and helped; their warfare is of God, their enemies will be trodden down, their victory is certain, and their triumphs will be glorious.—And let it be carefully noticed, that all genuine and warranted trust in God will be expressed by earnest prayer; and this in part distinguishes it from a presumptuous confidence, and an indolent reliance, which often subsist without application to him, or habitual prayer; and are especially maintained by lifeless forms, and [illegible] notions.—They, who rebel against the Lord, and apostatize from him, [illegible] especially such as desert his worship and reject his salvation, for the sake of those idols which are set up either in temples, or in the hearts of the avaricious, the sensual, or the ambitious. It will little avail them to have their names inserted in the genealogies of honourable families, or recorded as famous in the page of history, while they are rejected by God, and excluded from his kingdom.—We should consider, that those actions, which are vain, foolish, and wicked in man, may be permitted and made use of by the Lord, in justice, wisdom, and goodness. From him the renowned ravagers of the earth derive their power and courage: and they are employed as his executioners, and classed with pestilences, earthquakes, and famine; being equally dreadful and fatal to mankind. Nor should we forget, that they, whose inordinate desire of earthly objects draws them to a distance from the ordinances of God, are assuredly preparing for their own correction or destruction.—Scott.

CHAP. VI. FAMILIES OF LEVI.—It is but very little that is here recorded of the genealogies of this sacred tribe. 1. The first fathers of it are here named twice, ver. 1, 16, Gershon, Kohath, and Merari, are three names which we were very conversant with in the book of Numbers, when the families of the Levites were marshalled, and had their work assigned them. Aaron, and Moses, and Miriam, we have known much more of than their names, and cannot pass them over here without remembering that this was that Moses and Aaron whom God honoured in making them the instruments of Israel's deliverance and settlement, and "figures of him that was to come;" Moses as a prophet, and Aaron as a priest. And the mention of Nadab and Abihu (though, having no children, there was no occasion to bring them into the genealogy) cannot but remind us of the terrors of that divine justice, which they were made monuments of for offering strange fire, that we may always fear before him. 2. The line of Eleazar, the successor of Aaron, is here drawn down to the time of the captivity, ver. 4—15. It begins with Eleazar, who came out of the house of bondage in Egypt, and ends with Jehozadak, who went into the house of bondage in Babylon. Thus, for their sins, they were left as they were found: which might also intimate, that the Levitical priesthood made nothing perfect; that was to be done by the "bringing in of a better hope." All these here named were not high priests; for, in the time of the Judges, that dignity was, upon some occasion or other, brought into the family of Ithamar, of which Eli was; but in Zadok it returned again to the right line. Of Azariah it is here said, ver. 10, "He it is that executed the priest's office in the temple that Solomon built." It is supposed that this was that Azariah who bravely opposed the presumption of king Uzziah when he invaded the priest's office, 2 Chron. xxvi. 17, though he ventured his neck by it. [illegible] who done like a priest, like one that was truly zealous for his God. He, that [illegible] maintained and defended the priest's office, and made good its barriers against such a daring insult, may well be said to execute it; and this honour is put upon him for it, while Urijah, one of his successors, for a base compliance with king Ahaz, in building him an idolatrous altar, has the disgrace put upon him of being left out of this genealogy, as, perhaps, some others are. But some think that this remark upon this Azariah should have been added to his grandfather of the same name, ver. 9, who was the son of Ahimaaz, and that that was he who first officiated in Solomon's temple. 3. Some other of the families of the Levites are here accounted for. One of the families of Gershom (that of Libni) is here drawn down as far as Samuel, who had the honour of a prophet added to that of a Levite. One of the families of Merari (that of Mahli) is likewise drawn down for some descents, ver. 29, 30.

SERVICE OF THE TABERNACLE.—Ver. 31. When the Levites were first ordained in the wilderness, much of the work then appointed them lay in carrying, and taking care of the tabernacle and the utensils of it, while they were in their march through the wilderness. In David's time their number was increased; and, though the greater part of them were dispersed all the nation over, to teach the people the good knowledge of the Lord, yet, of those that attended the house of God, there was not constant work for them all; and therefore David, by special commission and direction from God, new-modelled the Levites, as we shall find in the latter part of this book. We are told what the work was which he assigned them. 1. "Singing work," ver. 31; David was raised up on high to be the sweet psalmist of Israel, 2 Sam. xxiii. 1, not only to pen psalms, but to appoint the singing of them in the house of the Lord; (not so much because he was musical, as because he was devout;) and this he did "after that the ark had rest." While that was in captivity, obscure, and unsettled, the harps were hung upon the willow-trees: singing was then thought unseasonable; (when the bridegroom is taken away, they shall fast;) but the harps being resumed, and the songs revived, at the bringing up of the ark, they were continued afterward; for we should rejoice as much in the prolonging of our spiritual privileges as in the restoring of them. When the service of the ark was superseded by its rest, they had other work cut out for them, (for Levites should never be idle,) and were employed in the service of song. Thus, when the people of God [illegible] to the rest which remains for them above, they shall take leave of all their [illegible] employed in everlasting songs. These singers kept up that service in the [illegible] and there they "waited on their office" there, ver. [illegible] they kept as close, built to their [illegible] in their [illegible]

"serving-work," abundance of service to be done "in the tabernacle of the house of God," ver. 48, to provide water and fuel: to wash and sweep, and carry out ashes; to kill and slay, and boil the sacrifices; and to all such services there were Levites appointed, those of other families, or perhaps those that were not fit to be singers, that had either no good voice, or no good ear. "As every one has received the gift, so let him minister." They that could not sing, must not therefore be laid aside as good for nothing; though they were not fit for that service, there was other service they might be useful in. 3. There was "sacrifice work," and that was to be done by the priests only, ver. 49. They only were to sprinkle the blood, and burn the incense; as for "the work of the place most holy," that was to be done by the high priest only. Each had his work, and they both needed one another, and both helped one another in it. Concerning the work of the priests, we are here told, (1.) What was the end they were to have in their eye; they were to "make an atonement for Israel," to mediate between the people and God; not to magnify and enrich themselves, but to serve the public. They were "ordained for men." (2.) What was the rule they were to have in their eye; they presided in God's house, yet must do as they were bidden, according to all that God commanded. That law the highest are subject to.

LEVITICAL CITIES.—We have here an account of the Levites' cities; they are here called their "castles," ver. 54, not only because walled and fortified, and well guarded by the country, (for it is the interest of every nation to protect its ministers,) but because they and their possessions were, in a particular manner, the care of the Divine Providence: as God was their Portion, so God was their Protection; and a cottage will be a castle to those that abide under the shadow of the Almighty. This account is much the same with that which we had, Josh. xxi. We need not be critical in comparing them; (what good will it do us?) nor will it do any hurt to the credit of the holy scripture, if the names of some of the places be not just the same here that they were there. We know it is common for cities to have several names; Sarum and Salisbury, Salop and Shrewsbury, are more unlike than Hilen, ver. 58, and Holon, Josh. xxi. 15; Ashan, ver. 59, and Ain, Josh. xxi. 16; Alemeth, ver. 60, and Almon, Josh. xxi. 18. And time changes names. We are only to observe, that in this specification of cities for the Levites, God took care, 1. For the accomplishment of [illegible] concerning this tribe, that it should be scattered in [illegible] diffusing of the knowledge of himself and his law in all [illegible] tribe had Levites' cities in [illegible] 2. tithes and offerings, they had glebe lands, and cities of their own to dwell in. Some of the most considerable cities of Israel fell to the Levites' lot. Every tribe had benefit by the Levites; and therefore every tribe must contribute to their support. Let him that is taught in the word, communicate to him that teacheth, and do it cheerfully.—Henry.

Practical Observations.—In the judgment of God, none of the human race are more honourable or valuable, than they who consistently minister in holy things. And though many, nominally bearing this sacred character, render themselves insignificant by their indolence, contemptible by their covetousness, or odious by their profligacy, or bring the Divine vengeance upon themselves by offering strange fire before the Lord; yet, instead of that order being despised on these accounts, they, who are singularly humble, diligent, disinterested, zealous, and valiant for the truth, ought to be treated with the greater respect; and of this God himself has condescended to set the example in his holy word.—None of the Lord's people, and especially of his ministers, should be unemployed: they who, through want of ability or change of circumstances, are precluded from one method of glorifying God, should set themselves to devise another. And if they deem nothing, which may conduce to the advancement of true religion, too laborious, mean, disgusting, or discouraging; if they be disposed to be "instant in season, and out of season;" to instruct or encourage, one, ten, or ten thousand, in public, or in private, in a cottage, an hospital, a prison, or a palace; in safe and easy, or in difficult and perilous circumstances; if they consider nothing too little to be attended to, and nothing too arduous to be attempted; and if they do all in sincerity, humility, and simplicity of spirit, they cannot long be unoccupied or useless. But nothing can be a more pleasant and honourable work, than to excite or assist the devotions of the pious, and to lead them to abound in thanksgivings and praises to the Lord.—If a rich inheritance, or the important station of a magistrate or civil governor, could with propriety be quitted for such a service, the enlightened understanding must perceive it to be an honourable and advantageous exchange; for this is the delightful employment of those above, who are arrived at their eternal rest.—They who have shown themselves peculiarly disinterested in the cause of God and his people, should be peculiarly considered by their brethren, and their families respected for their sakes. But though Christians and ministers may be very useful to the Church, while "they wait in their offices," none but our great High Priest can make atonement for sin, or be accepted, even through his atonement.—While ministers are bound to wait on their ministering, [illegible] the work of their place; the people are equally bound, in their several [illegible] their hands, and contribute without grudging to [illegible] every good work, equitably and thankfully will render the burden light, and conduce to the comfort of all concerned, as also to render their endeavours more generally useful.—Scott.

CHAP. VII. Ephraim.—Ver. 20. We have here an account of the tribe of Ephraim. Great things we read of that tribe, when it came to maturity. Here we have an account of the disasters of its infancy, while it was in Egypt, as it should seem; for Ephraim himself was alive when those things were done; which yet is hard to imagine, if it were, as is here computed, seven generations off. Therefore I am apt to think that either it was another Ephraim, or that those who were thus slain were the immediate sons of that Ephraim that was the son of Joseph. In this passage, which is here only related, we have, 1. The great breach that was made upon the family of Ephraim. The men of Gath, Philistines, giants, slew many of the sons of that family, "because they came down to take away their cattle," ver. 21. It is uncertain who were the aggressors here. (1.) Some make the men of Gath the aggressors, men "born in the land of Egypt," but now resident in Gath, that they came down into the land of Goshen, to drive away the Ephraimites' cattle, and slew the owners, because they stood up in the defence of them. Many a man's life has been exposed and betrayed by his wealth; so far is it from being a strong city. (2.) Others think that the Ephraimites made a descent upon the men of Gath to plunder them, presuming that the time was come when they should be put in possession of Canaan; but they paid dear for their rashness and precipitation. They that will not wait God's time, cannot expect God's blessing. I rather think that the men of Gath came down upon the Ephraimites; because the Israelites in Egypt were shepherds, not soldiers; abounded in cattle of their own, and therefore were not likely to venture their lives for their neighbours' cattle: and the words may be read, "The men of Gath slew them, for they came down to take away their cattle." Zabad the son of Ephraim, and Shuthelah, and Ezer, and Elead, his grand-children, were, as Dr. Lightfoot thinks, the men that were slain. Jacob had foretold that the seed of Ephraim should become a "multitude of nations," Gen. xlviii. 19, and yet that plant is thus nipped in the bud. God's providences often seem to contradict his promises; but when they do so, they really magnify the promise, and make the performance of it, notwithstanding, so much the more illustrious. The Ephraimites were the posterity of Joseph, and yet his power could not protect them, though some think he was yet living. The sword devours one as well as another. 2. The great grief which [illegible] the father of the family hereupon; "Ephraim mourned many days," [illegible] brings the [illegible] to the [illegible] especially if in [illegible] that they see those go before them of whom they said, "These same shall comfort us." It was a brotherly, friendly office which his brethren did, when "they came to comfort him" under this great affliction, to express their sympathy with him, and concern for him, and to suggest that to him which would support and quiet him under this sad providence. Probably they reminded him of the promise of increase with which Jacob had blessed him, when he laid his right hand upon his head. Although his house was not so with God as he hoped, but a house of mourning, a shattered family, yet that promise was sure, 2 Sam. xxiii. 5. 3. The repair of this breach, in some measure, by the addition of another son to his family in his old age, ver. 23, like Seth, "another seed instead of that of Abel, whom Cain slew," Gen. iv. 25. When God thus restores comfort to his mourners, "makes glad according to the days wherein he afflicted," setting the mercies over against the crosses, we ought therein to take notice of the kindness and tenderness of Divine Providence; it is as if "it repented God concerning his servants," Ps. xc. 13, 15. Yet, joy that a man was born into his family could not make him forget his grief; for he gives a melancholy name to this son, Beriah, in trouble; for he was born when the family was in mourning, when "it went evil with his house." It is good to have in remembrance the affliction and the misery, the wormwood and the gall, that our souls may be "humbled within us," Lam. iii. 19. What name more proper for "man that is born of a woman," than Beriah, because born into a troublesome world? It is added, as a further honour to the house of Ephraim, (1.) That a daughter of that tribe, Sherah by name, at the time of Israel's settling in Canaan, built some cities, either at her own charge or by her own care; one of them bare her name, Uzzen-sherah, ver. 24. A virtuous woman may be as great an honour and blessing to a family as a mighty man. (2.) That a son of that tribe was employed in the conquest of Canaan, "Joshua the son of Nun," ver. 27. In this also the breach made on Ephraim's family was further repaired; and perhaps the resentments of this injury, formerly done by the Canaanites to the Ephraimites, might make him more vigorous in the war.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Events frequently occur entirely beyond our expectations, and contrary to probabilities; the dispensations of Providence seem to run counter to the promises, in order that their performance may be more observed and admired; and often a good cause is run down, while the wicked triumph in the success of their villainy: but the day of judgment will clear up and rectify all such apparent obliquities in the Divine administration.—They who live long often become like the decaying tree, which [illegible] its branches are withered, or broken off one after another. But though [illegible] necessarily be afflictive, and it behoves us all [illegible] should not mourn as men [illegible] for the Lord is able to make up all our losses. Considering our state on earth, we may properly call our children on earth Beriah, for "man is born to trouble as the sparks fly upwards." But the supports, consolations, and prospects, which the gospel brings to believers, are sufficient to counterbalance every evil, and to render both life and death tolerable, if not joyful.—If men venture their lives to preserve their cattle; surely we should be willing to renounce, venture, and suffer any thing for the sake of Jesus Christ and his precious salvation.—Scott.

CHAP. VIII. BENJAMIN.—Ver. 1. 1. This tribe of Benjamin was once brought to a very low ebb, in the time of the Judges, upon the occasion of the iniquity of Gibeah, when only 600 men escaped the sword of justice; and yet, in these genealogies, it makes as good a figure as almost any other of the tribes: for it is the honour of God to help the weakest, and raise up those that are most diminished and abased. 2. Here is mention of one Ehud, ver. 6. In the verse before, of one Gera, ver. 5, and ver. 8, of one that descended from him, that "begat children in the country of Moab;" which inclines me to think it was Ehud who was the second of the judges of Israel; for he is said to be "the son of Gera," and "a Benjamite," Judg. iii. 15; and he delivered Israel from the oppression of the Moabites, by killing the king of Moab, which might give him a greater sway in the country of Moab than we find evidence of in his history, and might occasion some of his posterity to settle there. 3. Here is mention of some of the Benjamites that "drove away the inhabitants of Gath, ver. 13, perhaps those that had slain the Ephraimites, chap. vii. 21, or their posterity, by way of reprisal: and one of them that did this piece of justice was named Beriah too, that name in which the memorial of that injury was preserved. 4. Particular notice is taken of them that "dwelt in Jerusalem," ver. 28, and again, ver. 32, that they whose ancestors had had their residence there might thereby be induced, at their return from captivity, to settle there too; which, for aught that appears, few were willing to do, because it was the post of danger: and therefore we find, Neh. xi. 2, "The people blessed those that willingly offered themselves to dwell at Jerusalem," the greater part being inclined to prefer the cities of Judah. They whose godly parents had their conversation in the New Jerusalem, should thereby be engaged to set their faces thitherward, and pursue the way thither, whatever it cost them.

FAMILY OF SAUL.—1. Before Saul, Kish and Ner only are mentioned, ver. 33, and grandfather, ver. 33. His pedigree is carried higher, [illegible] said to be "the son of Abiel," here, "of Ner," [illegible] grandson of Abiel, as appears by 1 Sam. ix. 1, "the son of Abiel" [illegible]

[5] We read nothing of Eshek before, unless he be the same with Eleasah (ver. 37). Thus the family of Saul, though he was rejected by God from being king of Israel, was blessed with a numerous progeny, which sprung from his great-grandchild Micah, whose posterity is here largely recorded in honour of Jonathan.—BOOTHR.

[1] Rather the guards, as the Hebrew word more properly signifies. The next verse tells us that they waited "in the king's gate eastward;" that is, where the king's gate formerly was. This shews that the tabernacle which they erected since their return from the captivity was not on Mount Moriah, but in Zion. It is probable that they erected this tabernacle immediately after their return, till the temple could be built, being unwilling to remain for any time without a place of public worship.—PATRICK.

brother: therefore his father was also the son of Ner. It is common in all languages to put sons for grandsons, and other descendants, much more in the scanty language of the Hebrews. 2. After Saul, divers of his sons are named, but the posterity of none of them, save Jonathan only, who was blessed with a numerous issue, and those honoured with a place in the sacred genealogies, for the sake of his sincere kindness to David. The line of Jonathan is drawn down here for about ten generations. Perhaps David was, in a particular manner careful to preserve that, and assigned it a page by itself, because of the covenant made between his seed and Jonathan's seed for ever, 1 Sam. xx. 15, 23, 42. This genealogy ends in Ulam, whose family became famous in the tribe of Benjamin, for the number of its valiant men. Of that one man's posterity there were, as it should seem at one time, 150 archers brought into the field of battle, that were "mighty men of valour," ver. 40. That is taken notice of concerning them, which is more a man's praise than his pomp or wealth is, that they were qualified to serve their country.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The Lord delighteth to exalt those who have been abased, and to honour those who adhere to him, and to the king whom he hath placed upon his holy hill of Zion, to his chosen people, and to his instituted worship. Numbers of renowned names are now buried in oblivion; but as God honours some of those who have been faithful and useful in their generation, by recording their names in the sacred Scriptures; so he writes the names of all his people in the book of life. May this be our privilege, however unnoticed in the partial histories of mankind.—Scott.

CHAP. IX. REORGANIZATION OF THE TEMPLE SERVICE.—Ver. 14—34. We have here a further account of the good posture which the affairs of religion were put into, immediately upon their return out of Babylon. They had smarted for their former neglect of ordinances, and under the late want of ordinances; both these considerations made them very zealous and forward in setting up the worship of God among them; and so they began their work at the right end. Instances hereof we have here, 1. Before the house of the Lord was built, they had the house of the tabernacle; a plain and moveable tent, which they made use of in the meantime. They that cannot yet reach to have a temple, must not be without a tabernacle; but be thankful for that, and make the best of it. Never let God's work be left undone, for want of a place to do it in. 2. In allotting to the priests and Levites their respective employments, they had an eye to the model that was [illegible] by David, and Samuel the seer, ver. 22. Samuel, in his time, had drawn the [illegible] that held the foundation, though the ark was then in obscurity; and David [illegible] it; both by immediate direction from God. Or David, as soon as he was anointed, had this matter in his mind, and consulted Samuel about it, though he was then in his troubles, and the plan was formed in concert between them. This, perhaps, had been little regarded for many ages; but now, after a long interruption, it is revived. In dividing the work, they observed these ancient land-marks. 3. The most of them dwelt at Jerusalem, ver. 34; yet there were some that dwelt in the villages, ver. 16, 22, because, it may be, there was not yet room for them in Jerusalem; but, however, they were employed in the service of the tabernacle, ver. 25, "they were to come after seven days from time to time." They had their week's attendance in their turns. 4. Many of the Levites were employed as porters at the gates of the house of God; four chief porters, ver. 26, and, under them, to the number of 212, ver. 22. They had the oversight of the gates, ver. 23; were keepers of the thresholds, as it is in the margin, ver. 19; and keepers of the entry. This seemed a mean office, and yet David would rather have it, than "dwell in the tents of wickedness," Ps. lxxxiv. 10. Their office was, (1.) To open the door of God's house every morning, ver. 27, and shut them at night. (2.) To keep off the unclean, and hinder those from thrusting in that were forbidden by the law. (3.) To direct and introduce into the courts of the Lord those that came thither to worship, and to show them whither to go, and what to do, that they might not incur punishment. This required care, and diligence, and constant attendance. Ministers have work to do of this kind. 5. Here is one Phinehas, a son of Eleazar, that is said to be a "ruler over them in time past," ver. 20; not the famous high priest of that name, but (as is supposed) an eminent Levite, of whom it is here said, that "the Lord was with him;" or, as the Chaldee reads it, "the Word of the Lord was his helper;" the Eternal Word, who is "Jehovah the mighty one, on whom help is laid." 6. It is said of some of them, that because the charge was upon them, "they lodged round about the house of God," ver. 27. It is good for ministers to be near their work, that they may give themselves wholly to it. The Levites pitched about the tabernacle, when they marched through the wilderness. Then, they were porters in one sense, bearing the burthens of the sanctuary; now, porters in another sense, attending the gates and the doors—in both instances keeping the charge of the sanctuary. 7. Every one knew his charge. Some were intrusted with the plate, the ministering vessels, to bring them in and out by tale, ver. 28; others were appointed to prepare the fine flour, wine, oil, &c., ver. 29; others, that were priests, made up the holy anointing oil, ver. 30; others took care of the meat-offerings, ver. 31; others of the shew-bread, ver. 32. As in other great houses, so in God's house, the work is likely to be done well, when every one knows the duty of his place, and makes a business of it. God is the God of order: but then [illegible] body's work will be nobody's work. In this chapter "were employed"

22 All these which were chosen to be porters in the gates were two hundred and twelve. These were reckoned by their genealogy [m]in their villages, whom [n]David and [o]Samuel the seer [‡]did ordain in their [§]set office.

26 For these Levites, the four chief porters, were in their [‖]set office, and were over the [*]chambers [s]and treasuries of the house of God.

27 And they lodged round about[4] the house of God, because [t]the charge was upon them, and [u]the opening thereof every morning pertained to them.

29 Some of them also were appointed to oversee the vessels, and all the [‡]instruments of the sanctuary, and the fine flour, and the wine, and [y]the oil, and [z]the frankincense, and the spices.

30 And some [a]of the sons of the priests made the ointment of the spices.

31 And Mattathiah, one of the Levites, who was the first-born of [b]Shallum the Korahite, had the [§]set office over the things that were made [‖]in the pans.

33 And these are [e]the singers, chief of the fathers of the Levites, who remaining in the chambers [f]were free: for [†]they were [g]employed in that work day and night.

34 These [h]chief fathers of the Levites were chief throughout their generations; these dwelt at Jerusalem.

35 ¶ And [i]in Gibeon dwelt [k]the father of Gibeon,[5] Jehiel, whose wife's name was Maachah:

36 And his first-born son Abdon, then Zur, and [l]Kish, and Baal, and Ner, and Nadab, 37 And [m]Gedor, and Ahio, and Zechariah, and Mikloth.

38 And Mikloth begat [n]Shimeam. And they also dwelt with their brethren at Jerusalem, over against their brethren.

39 And [o]Ner[6] begat Kish; and Kish begat Saul; [p]and Saul begat Jonathan, and Malchi-shua, and Abinadab, and [q]Esh-baal.

40 And the son of Jonathan was [r]Merib-baal: and Merib-baal begat Micah.

41 And the sons of Micah were, Pithon, and Melech, and Tahrea, and Ahaz.

42 And Ahaz begat [s]Jarah; and Jarah begat Alemeth, and Azmaveth, and Zimri; and Zimri begat Moza;

43 And Moza begat Binea; and [t]Rephaiah his son, Eleasah his son, Azel his son.

44 And Azel had six sons, whose names are these, Azrikam, Bocheru, and Ishmael, and Sheariah, and Obadiah, and Hanan: these were the sons of Azel.

NOW [a]the Philistines[1] fought against Israel; and the men of Israel fled from before the Philistines, and fell down [*]slain in [b]mount Gilboa.

2 And the Philistines followed hard after Saul, and after his sons; and the Philistines slew [c]Jonathan, and [d]Abinadab, and Malchi-shua, [e]the sons of Saul.

3 And the battle [f]went sore against Saul, and the [†]archers [‡]hit him, and [§]he was wounded of the archers.

4 Then said Saul to his armourbearer, [h]Draw thy sword, and thrust me through therewith; lest these [i]uncircumcised come and [§]abuse me. But his armourbearer would not; for [k]he was sore afraid. So [l]Saul took a sword, and fell upon it.

5 And when his armourbearer saw that Saul was dead, he fell likewise on the sword, and died.

6 So [m]Saul died, and his three sons, and all his house died together.

7 And when all the men of Israel that were in the valley saw that they fled, and that Saul and his sons were dead, [n]then they forsook their cities, and fled: and the Philistines came and dwelt in them.

8 ¶ And it came to pass on the morrow, when the Philistines came [o]to strip the slain, that they found Saul and his sons fallen in mount Gilboa.

9 And when they had stripped him, they [p]took his head, and his armour, and sent into the land of the Philistines round about, to carry [q]tidings unto their idols, and to the people.

10 And they put his armour in the house of [r]their gods, and fastened his head [s]in the temple of Dagon.

day and night," ver. 33. They were the "chief fathers of the Levites," that made a business of it; not mean singing men, that made a trade of it. They remained in the chambers of the temple, that they might closely and constantly attend it; and were therefore discharged from all other services. It should seem, some companies were continually singing, at least, at stated hours, both day and night. Thus was God continually praised, as it is fit he should be who is continually doing good. Thus devout people might, at any hour, have assistance in their devotion. Thus was that temple a figure of the heavenly one, where they "rest not, day nor night," from praising God, Rev. iv. 8. "Blessed are they that dwell in thine house, they will be still praising thee.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—In remembering the miseries of man, we should be careful not to lose sight of his transgressions, that the justice of God in them may be noticed.—When sinners repent, and forsake their sins, they are in a fair way of being extricated from their trouble; and the affairs of church and state are likely to be well ordered, when men, of all ranks and orders in the community, concur in endeavours for that purpose.—Whatever politicians may suppose, no description of men are more essential to the real welfare of the state, than conscientious ministers of religion; and that service requires very able men, of clear heads, and steadfast minds. God will raise up such persons in those nations which he peculiarly favours, and qualify some for rulers in his church, and others for subordinate services: and it is well, when every one knows, and diligently attends to, his proper work, without envying or contemning any of his brethren. To be "a door-keeper in the house of the LORD," is an honourable employment: and if He be with us, it will both be comfortable to us, and profitable to others; but without this, our services will be formal, and our souls miserable.—If employed in the service of the sanctuary, we have a charge to keep, as well as a work to do; and those who "watch for men's souls, as they that must give account," are intrusted with that which is far more valuable than the richest treasures of silver and gold. They should therefore reside upon the spot as much as possible, in order to be near and ready for their work, at every hour, as occasion may require. To prepare bread for the sanctuary, in their stated public preaching, may, perhaps, be only expected from them every Sabbath: but some parts of their work must be needful every day; and they should generally be exempted from other cares and employments, that they may give [illegible] wholly to the word of God and prayer. Blessed be his name! if believers, [illegible] (not in rotation, but altogether,) without interruption or cessation, [illegible] which we had, 1 Sam. xxxi. 1, &c. We need not repeat the exposition of it. Only let us observe, 1. Princes sin, and the people suffer for it. It was a bad time with Israel, when they "fled before the Philistines," and "fell down slain," ver. 1; when they quitted their cities, and "the Philistines came, and dwelt in them," ver. 7. We do not find that they were at this time guilty of idolatry, as they had been before, in the days of the judges, and were after, in the days of the kings. Samuel had reformed them, and they were reformed: and yet they are thus "given to the spoil and to the robbers." 2. Parents sin, and the children suffer for it. When the measure of Saul's iniquity was full, and his day came to fall, (which David foresaw, 1 Sam. xxvi. 10,) he not only descended into battle, and perished himself, but his sons (all but Ish-bosheth) perished with him, and Jonathan among the rest, that gracious, generous man; for "all things come alike to all." 3. Sinners sin, and, at length, suffer for it themselves, though they be long reprieved; for, though sentence be not executed speedily, it will be executed. It was so upon Saul; and the manner of his fall was such, as, in divers particulars, answered to his sin. (1.) He had thrown a javelin more than once at David, and missed him; but the archers hit him, and he was wounded of the archers. (2.) He had commanded Doeg to slay the priests of the Lord; and now, in despair, he commands his armour-bearer to "draw his sword, and thrust him through." (3.) Him that had disobeyed the command of God, in not destroying the Amalekites, his armour-bearer disobeys, in not destroying him. (4.) He that was the murderer of the priests, is justly left to himself to be his own murderer; and his family is cut off who cut off the city of the priests.

LESSONS FROM IT.—From the triumphs of divine justice in the ruin of Saul, we may learn, 1. That sin of sinners will certainly find them out, sooner or later; "Saul died for his transgression." 2. That no man's greatness can exempt him from the judgment of God. 3. Disobedience is a killing thing. Saul died for "not keeping the word of the Lord," by which he was ordered to destroy the Amalekites. 4. Consulting with witches is a sin that fills the measure of iniquity as soon as any thing. Saul inquired of one that "had a familiar spirit," and "inquired not of the Lord, therefore he slew him." 14. Saul slew himself, and yet it is said, "God slew him." What is done by wicked hands, is yet done "by the determinate counsel and fore-knowledge of God." [illegible] abandon themselves to the Devil, shall be abandoned to [illegible]. It is said, 1 Sam. xxviii. 6, Saul did "inquire of the Lord," and [illegible] but here it is said, "Saul did not inquire of God;" the [illegible] the last extremity; and then it was too late. 3 Therefore came all the [g]elders of Israel to the king to Hebron; and [h]David made a covenant with them in Hebron [i]before the LORD; and they [k]anointed David king over Israel, according [l]to the word of the LORD [‡]by Samuel.

4 ¶ And [m]David and all Israel went to Jerusalem, which is [n]Jebus; where the Jebusites were, [o]the inhabitants of the land.

5 And the inhabitants of Jebus said to David, [p]Thou shalt not come hither. Nevertheless David took [q]the castle of Zion, which is [r]the city of David.

6 And David said, [s]Whosoever smiteth the Jebusites first shall be [§]chief and captain. [t]So Joab the son of Zeruiah went first up, and was chief.

7 And [u]David dwelt in the castle; therefore they called [l]it the city of David.

8 And he built the city round about, even from [x]Millo round about: and Joab [*]repaired the rest of the city.

9 So David [†]waxed greater and greater: [y]for the LORD of hosts was with him.

10 ¶ These also are [z]the chief of the mighty men whom David had, who [‡]strengthened themselves with him in his kingdom, and with all Israel, [a]to make[2] him king, [b]according to the word of the LORD concerning Israel.

11 And this is the number of the mighty men whom David had; [c]Jashobeam, [§]an Hachmonite, the chief of the captains: he lifted up his spear against three hundred slain by him at one time.

12 And after him was [d]Eleazar the son of Dodo, the [e]Ahohite, who was one of [f]the three mighties.

13 He was with David at [g]Pas-dammim, and there the Philistines were gathered together to battle, where was a parcel of ground full of barley; and the people fled from before the Philistines.

14 And they [l]set themselves in the midst of that parcel, and delivered it, and slew the Philistines; and [h]the LORD saved them by a great [*]deliverance.

15 ¶ Now three [†]of the thirty captains went down to the rock to David, into [i]the cave of Adullam; and the host of the Philistines encamped [k]in the valley of [l]Rephaim.

16 And David was then [m]in the hold, and [n]the Philistines' garrison was then at Bethlehem.

17 And David [o]longed, and said, Oh that one would give me drink [p]of the water of the well of Beth-lehem, that is at the gate![3]

18 And the three [q]brake through the host of the Philistines, and drew water out of the well of Beth-lehem, that was by the gate, and took it, and brought it to David: but David would not drink of it, but [r]poured it out to the LORD,

19 And said, [s]My God forbid it me, that I should do this thing: [t]shall I drink the blood of these men [‡]that have put their lives [u]in jeopardy? for with the jeopardy of their lives they brought it. Therefore he would not drink it. [x]These things did these three mightiest.

20 ¶ And [y]Abishai the brother of Joab, he was chief of the three: [4] for lifting up his spear against three hundred, he slew them, and had a name among the three.

21 Of the three, he was more honourable than the two; for he was their captain: [z]howbeit he attained not to the first three.

22 [a]Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, the son of a valiant man of [b]Kabzeel, [§]who had done many acts; he slew two [c]lion-like men of Moab: also he went down and [d]slew a lion in a pit in a snowy day.

23 And he slew an Egyptian, [l]a man of great stature, [*]five cubits high; and in the Egyptian's hand was [e]a spear like a weaver's beam; and he went down to him with a staff, and plucked the spear out of the Egyptian's hand, and [§]slew him with his own spear.

24 These things did Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, and had a name among the three mighties.[5]

25 Behold, he was honourable among the thirty, [b]but attained not to the first three: and David set him over his guard.

inquire of God, and earnestly seek deliverance in his appointed way, they will certainly prevail; and if they be involved in domestic or national calamities in this world, they will be saved from the wrath to come.—Alas! many "reject his counsel, and will none of his reproof," till he leaves them to "eat of the fruit of their own ways, and to be filled with their own devices:" and numbers who profess to seek the Lord, are so superficial in doing it, so soon weary of it, and so ready to listen to Satan's temptations, that God accounts it no inquiry at all. May we "seek the LORD, whilst he is to be found," and till we have obtained pardon, peace, and sanctifying grace, are enabled to renounce all fellowship with the works and prince of darkness!—Scott.

CHAP. XI. DAVID'S HEROES.—Observe, 1. The connection of this catalogue with that which is said concerning David, ver. 9, (1.) "David waxed greater and greater," and these were his mighty men. Much of the strength and honour of great men is borrowed from their servants and depends upon them, which cannot but somewhat diminish pomp and power, in the opinion of those that are wise. David is great, because he has great men about him; take these away, and he is where he was. (2.) "The Lord of hosts was with him, and these were the mighty men which he had." God was with him, and wrought for him, but by men and means, and the use of second causes. By this it appeared that God was with him, that he inclined the hearts of those to come over to him, that were able to serve his interest. As, if God be for us, none can be against us; so if God be for us, all shall be for us, that we have occasion for. Yet David ascribed his success and increase, not to the hosts he had, but to the "Lord of hosts;" not to the mighty men that were with him, but to the mighty God, whose presence with us is all in all. 2. The title of this catalogue, ver. 10; "These are the men who strengthened themselves with him." In strengthening him, they strengthened themselves and their own interest; for his advancement was theirs. What we do in our places for the support of the kingdom of the Son of David, we shall be gainers by. In strengthening it, we strengthen ourselves. It may be read, "They held strongly with him, and with all Israel." Note, When God has work to do, he will not want fit instruments to do it with. If it be work that requires mighty men, mighty men shall be either found or made to effect it, "according to the word of the Lord." 3. That which made all these men honourable, was the good service that they did to their king [illegible]; they helped to make David king, ver. 10. A good work! They slew the [illegible] and other public enemies, and were instrumental to save Israel. Note, The [illegible] Thus did they gain this honour without labour, and the [illegible] honours of Christ's kingdom are prepared for those that "fight the good fight of faith," that labour and suffer, and are willing to venture all, even life itself, for Christ and a good conscience. It is by a patient continuance in well-doing, that we must seek for glory, and honour, and immortality; and they that are faithful to the Son of David, shall find their names registered and enrolled, much more to their honour than these are in the records of fame. 4. Among all the great exploits of David's mighty men, here is nothing great mentioned concerning David himself, but his "pouring out water before the Lord," which he had "longed for," ver. 18, 19. Four very honourable dispositions of David appeared in that action, which, for ought I know, make it as great as any of the achievements of those worthies. (1.) Repentance for his own weakness. It is really an honour to a man, when he is made sensible that he has said or done any thing unadvisedly, to unsay it and undo it again by repentance; as it is a shame to a man, when he has said or done amiss, to stand to it. (2.) Denial of his own appetite. He longed for the water of the well of Beth-lehem; but when he had it, he would not drink it, because he would not so far humour himself and gratify a foolish fancy. He that has such a rule as this "over his own spirit, is better than the mighty." It is an honour to a man to have the command of himself; but he that will command himself, must sometimes cross himself. (3.) Devotion toward God. That water, which he thought too good, too precious for his own drinking, he "poured out to the Lord," for a "drink-offering." If we have any thing better than another, let God be honoured with it, who is the best, and should have the best. (4.) Tenderness of his servants. It put him into the greatest confusion imaginable, to think that three brave men should hazard their lives to fetch water for him. In his account it turns the water into blood. It is the honour of great men not to be prodigal of the blood of those they employ, but, in all the commands they give them, to put their own souls into their souls' stead. 5. In the wonderful achievements of these heroes, the power of God must be acknowledged. How could one slay three hundred, and another the same number, ver. 11, 20, another two lion-like men, ver. 22, and another an Egyptian giant, ver. 23, if they had not had the extraordinary presence of God with them, according to that promise, Josh. xxiii. 10, "One man of you shall chase a thousand, for the Lord your God fighteth for you." 6. One of these worthies is said to be "an Ammonite," ver. 39, another "a Moabite," ver. 46, and yet the law was, that an "Ammonite," and "a Moabite, should not enter into the congregation of the Lord," Deut. xxiii. 3. These, it is likely, had approved themselves so hearty for the interest of Israel, that in their case it was thought fit to dispense with that law, and the rather, because it was an indication that the Son of David would have [illegible] among the Gentiles, with [illegible]

The companies that came to David at Ziklag, 1; the armies that came to him at Hebron, 23.

NOW [a]these are they that came to David to Ziklag, [*]while he yet kept himself close because of [b]Saul the son of Kish: and they were among [c]the mighty men, helpers of the war.

2 They were armed with bows, and [d]could use both the right hand and the left [e]in hurling stones, and shooting arrows out of a bow, even of Saul's brethren[1] of Benjamin.

3 The chief was Ahiezer, then Joash, the sons of [†]Shemaah the [f]Gibeathite; and Jeziel, and Pelet, the sons of [g]Azmaveth; and Berachah, and Jehu [h]the Antothite,

4 And Ismaiah the [i]Gibeonite, [k]a mighty man among the thirty, and over the thirty; and Jeremiah, and Jahaziel, and Johanan, and Josabad the [l]Gederathite,

5 Eluzai, and Jerimoth, and Bealiah, and Shemariah, and Shephatiah the Haruphite,

6 Elkanah, and Jesiah, and Azareel, and Joezer, and Jashobeam, the Korhites,

7 And Joelah, and Zebadiah, the sons of Jeroham of [m]Gedor.

8 And of the Gadites there separated themselves unto David [n]into the hold to the wilderness men of might, and men [‡]of war fit for the battle, that could [o]handle shield and buckler, [p]whose faces were like the faces of lions,[2] and [~]were [$]as [q]swift as the roes upon the mountains;

9 Ezer the first, Obadiah the second, Eliab the third,

10 Mishmannah the fourth, Jeremiah the fifth,

11 Attai the sixth, Eliel the seventh,

12 Johanan the eighth, Elzabad the ninth,

13 Jeremiah the tenth, Machbanai the eleventh.

14 These were of the sons of Gad, captains of the host: [l]one of the least was over an hundred, and the greatest over a thousand.

15 These are they that went over Jordan in the first month,[3] when [r]it had [*]overflown all his banks; and they put to flight all them of the valleys, both toward the east, and toward the west.

16 And there came of [s]the children of Benjamin and Judah to [t]the hold unto David.

17 And David went out [†]to meet them, and answered and said unto them, [u]If ye be come peaceably unto me to help me, [x]mine heart shall be [‡]knit unto you: but if ye be come to betray me to mine enemies, seeing there is no [$]wrong in mine hands, [y]the God of our fathers look thereon, and [z]rebuke it.

18 Then [a]the spirit [b]came upon [b]Amasai, who was chief of the captains, and he said, [c]Thine are we, David, [d]and on thy side, thou son of Jesse: [e]peace, peace be unto thee, and peace be to thine helpers; for [f]thy God helpeth thee. Then David received them, and made them [g]captains of the band.

19 And there fell some of Manasseh to David, [h]when he came with the Philistines against Saul to battle: but they helped them not: for the lords of the Philistines upon advisement sent him away, saying, He will fall to his master Saul [*]to the jeopardy of our heads.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—When the time arrives for the performance of God's word, those persons who before were most averse to the things predicted, will concur to accomplish them.—Kings are not advanced for their own aggrandizement or self-indulgence; but that they should, with activity and vigour, provide for the defence and welfare of the nations over which they reign.—The desire of applause and pre-eminence seems to be the highest motive, of which carnal men are capable: but they who are born from above, are actuated by purer and nobler principles. Yet, in seeking the glory of God and the good of man, by endeavouring to advance the kingdom of Jesus the Lord's anointed; they most effectually secure their honour and exaltation.—The kingdom and glory of Christ will surely wax greater and greater, the Lord of hosts being with him, till all his enemies are put under his feet, and all his friends placed with him upon his throne. Thus, the way to be truly great is to be really useful; and to give the use and glory of all our talents and services to the Lord: and if we be at length preserved from the destruction of the wicked, we shall perceive that the Lord hath saved us with a great deliverance. May he teach us to repress all our earthly desires, to govern our appetites, to acknowledge candidly our mistakes, and completely to rectify them when discovered; and to be gentle and tender to others, and only severe against our own sins. Attached to the person and cause, and obedient to the orders of our King and Captain, may we endure hardship, be valiant for the truth, and so fight the good fight of faith, that we may lay hold on eternal life; and have our names enrolled with honour in the records of the heavenly Jerusalem!—Scott.

CHAP. XII. DAVID'S TREATY.—Ver. 17. "'If ye be come peaceably unto me, to help me,' though ye come late, and have left me exposed a great while: though you bring no great strength with you to turn the scale for me, yet I will thankfully accept your good will, and 'my heart shall be knit unto you;' I will love you and honour you, and do you all the kindness I can." Affection, respect, and service, that are cordial and sincere, will find favour with a good man, as they do with a good God, though clogged with infirmities, and turning to no great account. But, if they be false, and come to betray him into the hands of Saul, under colour of friendship, he leaves them to God to be [illegible] avenger, as he is, and will be, of every thing that is treacherous and perfidious. [illegible] men more violently rush down than David was, (except the Son of David [illegible] had the testimony of his conscience that there was no wrong in [illegible] which was his rejoicing in the day of evil, himself, though a man of valour; but let the righteous God, who hath said, "Vengeance is mine," do both. "The God of our fathers look thereon, and rebuke it." Observe, in this appeal, 1. He calls God, the "God of our father," both his fathers and theirs. Thus he reminds them not to deal ill with him; for they were both descendants from the same patriarchs; they both were dependents on the same God. Thus he encourages himself to believe that God would right him, if he were abused; for he was the "God of his fathers," and therefore a blessing was entailed on him; and a God to all Israel, and therefore not only a Judge to all the earth, but particularly concerned in determining controversies between contesting Israelites. 2. He does not imprecate any fearful judgment upon them, though they should deal treacherously, but very modestly refers himself to the divine wisdom and justice; The Lord "look thereon," and judge as he sees, (for he sees men's hearts,) and "rebuke it." It becomes those that appeal to God to express themselves with great temper and moderation; for the wrath of man "works not the righteousness of God."

GENUINE LOYALTY.—Ver. 18. For himself and all his associates, 1. Amasa professes a very cordial adherence to David and his interest, against all that opposed him, and a resolution to stand by him with the hazard of all that was dear to him, "Thine are we, David, and on thy side, thou son of Jesse." In calling him the "son of Jesse," they remind themselves that he was lineally descended from Nahshon and Salmon, who, in their days, were princes of the tribe of Judah. Saul called him so in disdain, 1 Sam. xx. 27; xxii. 7, but they look upon it as his honour. They were convinced that he was on God's side, and that God was on his side; and therefore "Thine are we, David, and on thy side." It is good, if we must side, to side with those that side with God, and have God with them. 2. He wishes prosperity to David and his cause, not drinking a health, but praying for peace to him and all his friends and well-wishers: "'Peace, peace be unto thee,' all the good thy heart desires, and 'peace be to thine helpers,' among whom we desire to be reckoned, that peace may be on us. 3. He assures him of help from heaven; 'For thy God helpeth thee:' therefore we wish peace may be, and therefore we doubt not but peace shall be, to thee and thy helpers, God is thy God, and those that have him for their God, no doubt, have him for their helper in every time of need and danger." From these expressions of Amasa, we may take instruction how to testify our affection and allegiance to the Lord Jesus: [illegible] we must be without reservation, or power of revocation; on his side [illegible] forward to appear and act; to his interest we must be [illegible] rity to his gospel and kingdom [illegible] all opposing 20 As he [l]went to Ziklag, there fell to him of Manasseh, Adnah, and Jozabad, and Jediael, and Michael, and Jozabad, and Elihu, and Zilthai, [k]captains of the thousands that were of Manasseh.

21 And they helped David [t]against [l]the band of the rovers: for they were all [m]mighty men of valour, and were captains in the host.

22 For at that time[4] [n]day by day there came to David to help him, until it was a great host, like [o]the host of God.

23 ¶ And these are [p]the numbers of the [‡]bands that were ready armed to the war, and came to David to Hebron,[s] [q]to turn the kingdom of Saul to him, [r]according to the word of the LORD.

24 The children of Judah that bare shield and spear were six thousand and eight hundred, ready [§]armed to the war.

25 Of the children of Simeon, mighty men of valour for the war, seven thousand and one hundred.

26 Of the children of Levi four thousand and six hundred.

27 And Jehoiada was [‖]the leader of the [‖]Aaronites, and with him were three thousand and seven hundred;

28 And [u]Zadok, a young man mighty of valour, and of his father's house twenty and two captains.

29 And of the children of Benjamin, [l]the kindred of Saul, three thousand: for hitherto [*]the greatest part of them had kept the ward of the house of Saul.

30 And of the children of Ephraim twenty thousand and eight hundred, mighty men of valour, [†]famous throughout the house of their fathers.

31 And of [x]the half tribe of Manasseh eighteen thousand, which were expressed by name, to come and make David king.

32 And of the children of Issachar, which were men that had [y]understanding of the times,[5] [z]to know what Israel ought to do; the heads of them were two hundred; and [a]all their brethren were at their commandment.

33 Of Zebulun, such as went forth to battle, [‡]expert in war, with all instruments of war, fifty thousand, which could [§]keep rank: they were [‖]not of double heart.

34 And of Naphtali a thousand captains, and with them with shield and spear thirty and seven thousand.

35 And of the Danites expert in war twenty and eight thousand and six hundred.

36 And of Asher, such as went forth to battle, [*]expert in war, forty thousand.

37 And on [b]the other side of Jordan, of the Reubenites, and the Gadites, and of the half tribe of Manasseh, with all manner of instruments of war for the battle, an hundred and twenty thousand.

38 All these men of war, that could keep rank, came with [c]a perfect heart to Hebron, to make David king over all Israel: and [d]all the rest also of Israel were of one heart to make David king.

39 And there they were with David three days, [e]eating and drinking: for their brethren had prepared for them.

40 Moreover they that were nigh them, even unto Issachar and Zebulun and Naphtali, brought [f]bread on asses, and on camels, and on mules, and on oxen;[6] and meat, [*]meal, [g]cakes of figs, and bunches of raisins, and wine, and oil, and oxen, and sheep abundantly: for [h]there was joy in Israel.

CHAP. XIII.

David fetcheth the ark from Kirjath-jearim, 1. Uzza being smitten, the ark is left at the house of Obed-edom, 9.

AND David [a]consulted with the captains of thousands and hundreds, and with every leader.

2 And David said unto all the congregation of Israel, [b]If it seem good unto you, [c]and that it be of the LORD our God, let us [*]send abroad unto our brethren every where, that are [d]left in all the land of Israel, and with them also to [e]the priests and Levites which are in [†]their cities and suburbs, that they may gather themselves unto us:

3 And let us [‡]bring again [f]the ark of our God to us: for [g]we enquired not at it in the days of Saul.[1]

4 And all the congregation said that they would do so: for [h]the thing was right in the eyes of all the people.

5 So [i]David gathered all Israel together, from [k]Shihor of Egypt even unto the entering of [l]Hemath, to bring the ark of God from [m]Kirjath-jearim.

6 And David went up, and all Israel, to [n]Baalah, that is to Kirjath-jearim, which belonged to Judah, to bring up thence the ark of God the LORD, [o]that dwelleth between the cherubims, [p]whose name is called on it.

7 And they [‖]carried the ark of God [q]in a new cart [r]out of the house of Abinadab; and Uzza and Ahio drave the cart.

8 And [s]David and all Israel played before God with all their might, and with [l]singing, and [t]with harps, and with psalteries, and with timbrels, and with cymbals, and with trumpets.

9 ¶ And when they came unto the threshing-floor of [u]Chidon, Uzza put forth his hand to hold the ark; for the oxen [*]stumbled.

MEN OF ISSACHAR.—Ver. 32. The men of Issachar were the fewest of all, but two hundred; and yet as serviceable to David's interest as those that brought in the greatest numbers; these few, being, in effect, the whole tribe. For, 1. They were men of "great conduct," above any of their neighbours; men that "had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do." They understood the natural times, could "discern the face of the sky," were weather-wise, could advise their neighbours in the proper times for ploughing, sowing, reaping, &c.; the ceremonial times, the times appointed for the solemn feasts; therefore they are said to "call the people to the mountain," Deut. xxxiii. 19, for almanacks were not then so common as now. Or, rather, the political times; they understood public affairs, the temper of the nation, and the tendencies of the present events. It is the periphrasis of statesmen, that they "know the times," Esth. i. 13. Those of that tribe were greatly intent on public affairs, and had good intelligence from abroad: and they made a good use of it; they knew "what Israel ought to do:" from their observation and experience, they learned both their own and others' duty and interest. In this critical juncture, they knew Israel ought to make David king. It was not only expedient, but necessary; the present posture of affairs called for it. The men of Issachar dealt mostly in country business, and did not much intermeddle in public affairs; which gave them an opportunity of observing others, and conversing with themselves. A stander-by sees sometimes more than a gamester. 2. They were men of great interests; for "all their brethren were at their commandment." The commonality of that tribe having "bowed their shoulders to bear," Gen. xlix. 15, the great men had them at their beck. Hence we read of "the princes of Issachar," Judg. v. 15. They knew how to rule, and the rest knew how to obey. It is happy indeed when those that should lead are intelligent and judicious; and those who are to follow, modest and obsequious.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—Long experience of the deceitfulness of mankind will teach caution to every reflecting person; but we should be afraid of growing unreasonably suspicious: and if we have a clear conscience, and use moderate precautions, we may trust in God to defend us from the effects of secret treachery, as well as of open violence; while we should readily forgive former injuries, and unite with those who profess a disposition to be at peace with us, and to help us. But, when we cannot but suspect men's intentions in courting our friendship, it is best, in some cases, frankly to remonstrate with them as in the sight of God. This may sometimes intimidate the insincere, and give the upright an opportunity of clearing up their characters; whilst suspicions, harboured in secret, or only whispered among friends, are often injurious to the suspected person, and always troublesome to ourselves. Integrity and affection will frequently, when the case requires it, dictate such frank, unreserved, and energetic language, as to afford full satisfaction; and then cordial union in promoting one common cause, succeeds jealousies, distance, and the debility of distrust.—Peace or victory, prosperity and felicity, are ensured to those whom God helpeth, and to all who concur with them. If, under the influence of his Spirit, we, on that account, desire to have our lot among them, and declare on their side, and if we uprightly embrace the cause of Christ, his heart will be knit unto us, and he will receive and advance us. Ver. 19—40. The cause of our king appears to a carnal eye weak and obscure, and his subjects have been hitherto comparatively few; but his kingdom and glory will, ere long, rapidly advance, and his host become, like "the host of God," innumerable and invincible.—The advancement of wise and good men to authority is justly considered as a cause of great and general joy; and joy naturally enlarges the heart in cheerful liberality. Thus the Saviour's exaltation to the throne of glory filled the hearts of his people with gladness: nay, the sinner's willing submission to him ushers in a day of joy and gladness, in which his brethren share, and to which they contribute.—Scott.

CHAP. XIII. THE ARK BROUGHT BACK.—We have here the solemnity of bringing up the ark, ver. 5, &c., which we read before, 2 Sam. vi. 1, &c. Here therefore we shall only observe, 1. That it is worth while to travel far to attend the ark of God. They came out of all parts of the country, from the "river of Egypt," the utmost part south, to the entering of Hemath, which lay furthest north, ver. 5, to grace this solemnity. 2. That we have reason greatly to rejoice in the revival of neglected ordinances, and the return of the tokens of God's presence. When the light of religion shines out of obscurity, when it is openly and freely professed, is brought into reputation, and countenanced by princes and great ones, it is such a happy omen to a people as is worthy to be welcomed with all possible expressions of joy, 3. When, after long disuse, ordinances come to be revived, it is too common for even wise and good men to make some mistakes. Who would have thought that David would have committed such an error as this, to carry the ark upon a cart? ver. 7. Because the Philistines so carried it, and a special providence drove the cart, 1 Sam. vi. 12, he thought they might do so too. But we must walk by rule, not by example, when it varies from the rule; even those examples which Providence has owned are not to be followed, in violation of the rule.

PEREZ-UZZA.—Ver. 11. 1. Let the sin of Uzza warn us all to take heed of presumption, rashness, and irreverence, in dealing about holy things, ver. 9, and not to think that a good intention will justify a bad action. In our communion with God, we must kindled against Uzza, and he smote him, because [x]he put his hand to the ark: and [y]there he died before God.

11 And David was [z]displeased, because the LORD had made a breach upon Uzza: wherefore that place is called [†]Perez-uzza [a]to this day.

12 And David was [b]afraid of God that day, saying, [c]How shall I bring the ark of God home to me?

13 So David [‡]brought not the ark home to himself to the city of David, but carried it aside into the house of [d]Obed-edom [e]the Gittite.

14 And the ark of God remained with the family of Obed-edom in his house three months. And [f]the LORD blessed the house of Obed-edom, and all that he had.

NOW [a]Hiram king of Tyre sent messengers to David, [b]and timber of cedars, with masons and carpenters, [c]to build him an house.

2 ¶ And David perceived that [d]the LORD had confirmed him king over Israel, for [e]his kingdom was lifted up on high, [f]because of his people Israel.

3 ¶ And David [g]took [*]more wives at Jerusalem: and David begat more sons and daughters.

7 And Elishama, and [m]Beeliada, [n]and Eliphalet.

8 ¶ And [o]when the Philistines heard that David was [p]anointed king over all Israel, [q]all the Philistines went up to seek David. And David heard of it, and went out against them.

9 And the Philistines came and spread themselves in [r]the valley of Rephaim.

10 And David [s]enquired of God, saying, [t]Shall I go up against the Philistines? and wilt thou deliver them into mine hand? And the LORD said unto him, [u]Go up; for I will deliver them into thine hand.

11 So they came up to [v]Baal-perazim: and David smote them there. Then David said, [x]God hath broken in upon mine enemies by mine hand [y]like the breaking forth of waters: therefore they called the name of that place [†]Baal-perazim.

12 And when they had left their gods there, David gave a commandment, and they [z]were burned with fire.

13 And the Philistines [a]yet again spread themselves abroad in the valley.

14 Therefore David [b]enquired again of God; and God said unto him, Go not up after them: [c]turn away from them, and come upon them over against the mulberry trees.

15 And it shall be, when thou shalt hear [d]a sound of going in the tops of the mulberry trees, that [e]then thou shalt go out to battle: [f]for God is gone forth before thee to smite the host of the Philistines.

16 David therefore [g]did as God commanded him: and they smote the host of the Philistines from [h]Gibeon even to [i]Gazer.

17 And the [j]fame of David went out into all lands;[2] and the LORD brought [k]the fear of him upon all nations.

David's order about bringing the ark from Obed-edom, 1; he performeth it with great joy, 25; Michal despiseth him, 29.

AND David made him [a]houses[1] in the city of David, [b]and prepared a place for the ark of God, and pitched for it a tent.

2 Then David said, [*]None ought to carry the ark of God but the Levites: for [c]them hath the LORD chosen to carry the ark of God, and [d]to minister unto him for ever.

3 And David [e]gathered all Israel together to Jerusalem, [f]to bring up the ark of the LORD unto his place, which he had prepared for it.

4 And David assembled [g]the children of Aaron, and the Levites:

5 Of the sons of Kohath; [h]Uriel the chief, and his [†]brethren an hundred and twenty:

6 Of the sons of Merari; [i]Asaiah the chief, and his brethren two hundred and twenty:

7 Of the sons of Gershom; [k]Joel the chief, and his brethren an hundred and thirty:

8 Of the sons of [l]Elizaphan;[2] [m]Shemaiah the chief, and his brethren two hundred:

9 Of the sons of [n]Hebron; Eliel the chief, and his brethren fourscore:

10 Of the sons of [o]Uzziel; [p]Amminadab the chief, and his brethren an hundred and twelve.

11 And David called for [q]Zadok and Abiathar the priests, and for the Levites, for [r]Uriel, Asaiah, and Joel, Shemaiah, and Eliel, and Amminadab, 12 And said unto them, [s]Ye are the chief of the fathers of the Levites: [t]sanctify yourselves, both ye and your brethren, that ye may bring up the ark of the LORD God of Israel unto the place that I have prepared for it.

carefully watch over our own hearts, lest familiarity breed contempt, and we think God is any way beholden to us. 2. Let the punishment of Uzza convince us that the God with whom we have to do is a jealous God. His death, like that of Nadab and Abihu, proclaims aloud that God will be "sanctified in those that come nigh unto him," Lev. x. 3, and that the nearer they are to him, the more displeased he is with their presumptions. 3. Let the damp this gave to the joy of Israel be a memorandum to us, always to rejoice with trembling, and to "serve the Lord with fear," even then when we "serve him with gladness." 4. Let David's displeasure upon this occasion, caution us to take heed to our spirits, when we are under divine rebukes, lest, instead of submitting to God we quarrel with him. If God be angry with us, shall we dare be angry with him? 5. Let the stop thus put to the solemnity caution us not to be driven off from our duty by those providences which are only intended to drive us from our sins. David should have gone on with this work, notwithstanding the breach made upon Uzza; so might the breach have been made up. Lastly, Let the blessing which the ark brought with it to the house of Obed-edom encourage us to welcome God's ordinances into our houses, as those that believe the ark is a guest nobody shall lose by; nor let it be the less precious to us, for its being to some a stone of stumbling, and a rock of offence. If the gospel be to some a savour of death unto death, as the ark was to Uzza, yet let us receive it in the love of it, and it will be to us a savour of life unto life.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—When we set out in life, or obtain any temporal advancement, we should first inquire how we may honour God and do good, and enjoy the Divine blessing in our several situations, and in the use of our possessions! Princes especially ought to devise the most useful measures they can to promote true religion by their example and authority, that they may have the Lord nigh unto them in all they undertake. This can only be done by consulting with others, and engaging them to concur in measures of acknowledged utility, and evidently consistent with the word of God; and by reminding, encouraging, and charging ministers to attend to their important duties in their several situations, that good examples and good instructions may spread throughout the land. When such things, being mildly proposed, seem good to [illegible] men, we may hope that they are from the Lord, and expect that many other [illegible] called upon, will [illegible] assist; and that thus the gospel will excite [illegible] zeal, [illegible] by [illegible] weapons of compulsion.—In [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] and severe [illegible] [illegible] to [illegible] more readily to condemn himself than others.—Even good men, in doing their duty, are liable to mistakes, and to act in an improper spirit; and rebukes, though merited and needed, often excite murmurs, discouragements, and hard thoughts of God.—Scott.

CHAP. XIV. DAVID'S PROSPERITY.—Ver. 8. This narrative of David's triumph over the Philistines is much the same with that, 2 Sam. v. 17, &c. 1. Let the attack which the Philistines made upon David, forbid us to be secure in any settlement or advancement, and engage us to expect molestation in this world. When we are most easy, something or other may come to be a terror or vexation to us. Christ's kingdom will thus be insulted by the serpent's seed, especially when it makes any advances. 2. Let David's inquiry of God, once and again, upon occasion of the Philistines' invading him, direct us in all our ways to acknowledge him, in distress to fly to him, when we are wronged to appeal to him, and when we know not what to do, to ask counsel at his oracles, to put ourselves under his conduct, and to beg of him to show us the right way. 3. Let David's success encourage us to resist our spiritual enemies, in observance of divine directions, and in dependence on divine strength. Resist the devil, and he shall fly, as the Philistines did before David. 4. Let the sound of the going in the tops of the mulberry-trees direct us to attend God's motions, both in his providence and in the influence of his Spirit. When we perceive God to go before, let us gird up our loins, gird on our armour, and follow him. 5. Let David's burning the god's of the Philistines, when they fell into his hands, teach us a holy indignation against idolatry, and all the remains of it. 6. Let David's thankful acknowledgment of the hand of God in his successes, direct us to bring all our sacrifices and praise to God's altar. "Not unto us, O Lord, not unto us, but to thy name give glory."—Henry.

CHAP. XV. ARK RESTORED TO ITS PLACE.—The Levites and priests were sanctified themselves, ver. 14, and were ready to carry the ark on their shoulders, according to the law, ver. 15. Note, Many that are very remiss in their duty, if they were but faithfully told of it, would reform and do better. The breach upon Uzza made the priests more careful to sanctify themselves, that they might cleanse themselves from all ceremonial pollution, and to compose themselves for [illegible] God, so as to strike a reverence upon the people. [illegible] may be made exemplary, and [illegible] bid the ark [illegible] chief of the [v] the LORD our God made a breach upon us, [z] for that we sought him not after the due order.

14 So the priests and the Levites [y] sanctified themselves to bring up the ark of the LORD God of Israel.

15 And the children of the Levites [z] bare the ark of God upon their shoulders with the staves thereon, as Moses commanded according to the word of the LORD.

16 And [a] David spake to the [b] chief of the Levites to appoint their brethren to be [c] the singers with instruments of musick, psalteries, and harps, and cymbals, sounding, by [d] lifting up the voice with joy.

17 So the Levites appointed [e] Heman the son of Joel; and of his brethren, [f] Asaph the son of Berechiah; and of the sons of Merari their brethren, [g] Ethan the son of Kushaiah;

18 And with them their brethren of [h] the second degree, [i] Zechariah, Ben, and [k] Jaaziel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehiel, and Unni, Eliab, and Benaiah, and Maaseiah, and Mattithiah, and Elipheleh, and Mikneiah, [l] and Obed-edom, and Jeiel, the porters.

19 So the singers, Heman, Asaph, and Ethan, were appointed to sound with [m] cymbals of brass;

20 And Zechariah, and [n] Aziel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehiel, and Unni, and Eliab, and Maaseiah, and Benaiah, with psalteries on [o] Alamoth;[3]

21 And [p] Mattithiah, and Elipheleh, and Mikneiah, and Obed-edom, and Jeiel, and Azaziah, with [q] harps on the [‡] Sheminith to excel.

22 And Chenaniah, chief of the Levites, was [s] for [t] song: [r] he instructed about the song, because he was skilful.

23 And Berechiah and Elkanah were [u] doorkeepers for the ark.

24 And Shebaniah, and Jehoshaphat, and Nethaneel, and Amasai, and Zechariah, and Benaiah, and Eliezer, [v] the priests, did blow with the trumpets before the ark of God: and [w] Obed-edom and Jehiah were doorkeepers for the ark.

25 ¶ So [x] David, and the elders of Israel, and the [y] captains over thousands, went to bring up the ark of the covenant of the LORD out of the house of [z] Obed-edom [a] with joy.

26 And it came to pass, when [b] God helped[4] the Levites that bare the ark of the covenant of the LORD, that [c] they offered [d] seven bullocks and seven rams.

27 And David was clothed with [e] a robe of fine linen, and all the Levites that bare the ark, and the singers, and [f] Chenaniah the master of the [*] song with the singers: David also had upon him an ephod of linen.

28 Thus all Israel [g] brought up the ark of the covenant of the LORD [h] with shouting, and with sound of the cornet, and with trumpets, and with cymbals, making a noise with psalteries and harps.

29 ¶ And it came to pass, as the [i] ark of the covenant of the [k] LORD came to the city of David, that [l] Michal the daughter of Saul looking out at a window saw king David [m] dancing and playing: and [n] she despised him in her heart.

David's festival sacrifice, 1; he ordereth a choir to sing thanksgiving, 4. The psalm of thanksgiving, 7.

SO [a] they brought the ark of God, and set it [b] in the midst of the tent that David had pitched for it: and [c] they offered burntsacrifices and peace-offerings before God.

2 And when David had made an end of offering [d] the burnt-offerings and the peace-offerings, [e] he blessed the people in the name of the LORD.

3 And he dealt to every one of Israel, both man and woman, [f] to every one a loaf of bread, and a good piece of flesh, and a flagon of wine.

4 ¶ And [g] he appointed certain of the Levites to [h] minister before the ark of the LORD, and [i] to record, and to thank and praise [j] the LORD God of Israel:

5 [k] Asaph the chief, and next to him Zechariah, Jeiel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehiel, and Mattithiah, and Eliab, and Benaiah, and Obed-edom: and Jeiel with [*] psalteries and with harps; but Asaph made a sound with cymbals;

6 Benaiah also and Jahaziel the priests [l] with trumpets continually before the ark of the covenant of God.

7 ¶ Then [m] on that day David delivered first this psalm to thank the LORD [n] into the hand of Asaph and his brethren.

8 [o] Give thanks[1] unto the LORD, [p] call upon his name, [q] make known his deeds among the people.

9 [r] Sing unto him, sing [s] psalms unto him, [t] talk ye of all his wondrous works.

10 [u] Glory ye in his holy name: [x] let the heart of them rejoice that seek the LORD.

11 [y] Seek the LORD and [z] his strength, [a] seek his face continually.

12 [b] Remember his marvellous works that he hath done, his wonders, and [c] the judgments of his mouth;

13 O [d] ye seed of Israel his servant, ye children of Jacob, [e] his chosen ones.

14 He is [f] the LORD our God; [g] his judgments are in all the earth.

15 Be [h] ye mindful always of his covenant;

cymbals, ver. 19, others with psalteries, ver. 20, others with harps, on the Sheminith, or eighth, eight notes higher or lower than the rest, according to the rules of concert, ver. 21. Some that were priests, blew with the trumpet, ver. 24, as was usual at the removal of the ark, Numb. x. 8, and at solemn feasts, Ps. lxxxi. 3. And one was appointed for song, ver. 22, for he was skilful in it, could sing well himself, and instruct others. Note, As every man has "received the gift," so he ought to "minister the same," 1 Pet. iv. 10. And those that excel in any endowment, should not only use it for the common good themselves, but teach others also, and not grudge to make others as wise as themselves. This way of praising God by musical instruments had not hitherto been in use: but David, being a prophet, instituted it by divine direction, and added it to the other "carnal ordinances" of that dispensation, as the apostle calls them, Heb. ix. 10. The New Testament keeps up singing of psalms, but has not appointed church music. Some were appointed to be porters, ver. 18, others doorkeepers for the ark, ver. 23, 24, and one of them was Obed-edom, who reckoned it, no doubt, a place of honour, and accepted it as a recompense for the entertainment he had given to the ark. He had been, for three months, housekeeper to the ark, and indeed its landlord. But when he might not be so any longer, such an affection had he for it, that he was glad to be its doorkeeper.

TIME OF REVIVAL—TIME OF JOY.—When they experienced the tokens of God's presence with them, they offered sacrifices of praise to him, ver. 26. This also he helped them to do. They offered these bullocks and rams, perhaps, by way of atonement for the former error, that that might not now be remembered against them, as well as by way of acknowledgment for the help now received. There were great expressions of rejoicing used; the sacred music played, David danced, the singers sang, and the common people shouted, ver. 27, 28. This we had before, 2 Sam. vi. 14, 15. Learn hence, 1. That we serve a good Master, who delights to have his servants sing at their work. 2. That times of public reformation are, and should be, times of public rejoicing. Those are unworthy of the ark, that are not glad of it. 3. It is not any disparagement to the greatest of men to show themselves zealous in the acts of devotion. Michal indeed despised David, ver. 29, but her despising him did not make him at all despicable; he did not regard it himself, nor did any that were wise and good (and why should we covet the esteem of any but such?) think the worse of him.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The most zealous and useful reformers have, in all ages, been left to make mistakes, which very inferior persons could easily discern; and especially before their judgments were matured by experience and observation. Satan avails himself of these errors, to prejudice the minds of men against their whole character and work: and the artifice readily succeeds with those who are in quest of some specious pretence for despising and opposing the humbling truths, and the holy service of God. But we should hence infer that nothing perfect can be expected from mere men; and we should neither be offended at the miscarriages blended with laudable and useful endeavours; nor yet vindicate or adopt every sentiment and practice, which have been sanctioned by respectable and eminent men: but we should compare all, as well as we can, with the word of God; and by that criterion distinguish between the precious and the vile. Wise and good men, however, will profit by rebukes; having discovered, they will honestly confess their mistakes, and acknowledge that they "did not seek the LORD after the due order;" and, upon recollection, they will both justify him in his sharpest corrections, and proceed with their work with greater circumspection. It indeed seems one of the greatest attainments of human nature, to search out, confess, rectify, and profit by our own mistakes and miscarriages.—The Lord's choice of us, in every sense, implies our being chosen to services, as well as privileges: and plain and serious admonitions, from those who lead the way by a good example, and whose rank and character give weight and authority to their words, will often excite the remiss to diligence, and the ignorant and heedless to learn and attend to their duty. But, alas! pre-eminence is generally privileged with supineness and indulgence: and too often, examples of avarice, pride, and licentiousness, become infamously conspicuous through the rank of those who set them; diffusing their baleful influence like a destructive pestilence, among the subordinate members of the community.—Scott.

CHAP. XVI. DAVID'S SONG OF HOLY JOY.—David had penned many psalms before this, some in the time of his troubles by Saul. This was composed before; but was now first delivered into the hand of Asaph for the use of the church. It is gathered out of several psalms. From the beginning to verse 23, is taken from Ps. cv. 1, &c.; and then ver. 23 to ver. 34 is the whole xcvith psalm, with little variation; ver. 34 is taken from Ps. cxxxvi. 1, and divers others; and then the two last verses are taken from the close of Ps. cvi.; which, some think, warrants us to do likewise, to make up hymns out of David's psalms, a part of one, and a part of another put together, so as may be most proper to express and excite the devotion of Christians. These psalms will be best expounded in their proper places, (if the Lord will,) here we take them as they are put together, with a design to "thank the Lord," ver. 7, a great duty, to which we need to be excited, and in which we need to be assisted. 1. Let God be glorified in our praises, let his honour be the centre in which all the lines meet. Let us glorify him by our thanksgivings, "Give thanks to the Lord;" by our prayers, "Call on his name," ver.

34 O [z]give thanks unto the LORD; for he is good; for his mercy endureth for ever.

35 And say ye, [a]Save us, O God of our salvation, and gather us together, and deliver us from the heathen, [b]that we may give thanks to thy holy name, and [c]glory in thy praise.

36 [d]Blessed be the LORD God of Israel for ever and ever. And all the people [e]said, Amen,[3] and praised the LORD.

37 ¶ So he left there [f]before the ark of the covenant of the LORD Asaph and his brethren, to minister before the ark continually, [g]as every day's work required:

CHAP. XVII.

David forbidden to build God an house, 3; is promised blessings in his seed, 11; his prayer and thanksgiving, 16.

NOW it came to pass, [a]as David sat in his house, that David said to [b]Nathan the prophet, Lo, [c]I dwell in an house of cedars, but [d]the ark of the covenant of the LORD remaineth [e]under curtains.

2 Then Nathan said unto David, [f]Do all that is in thine heart: [g]for God is with thee.

3 ¶ And it came to pass the same night, that [h]the word of God came to Nathan, saying,

4 Go and [i]tell David my servant, Thus saith the LORD, [j]Thou shalt not build me an house to dwell in:

5 For I have not [k]dwelt in an house since the day that I brought up Israel unto this day; but have [*]gone [l]from tent to tent,[1] and from one tabernacle to another.

6 Wheresoever I have [m]walked with all Israel, spake I a word to any of [n]the judges of Israel, whom I commanded to [o]feed my people, saying, Why have ye not built me an house of cedars?

7 Now therefore thus shalt thou say unto my servant David, Thus saith the LORD of hosts, [p]I took thee from the sheepcote, even [†]from following the sheep, that thou shouldest be [q]ruler over my people Israel:

8 And [r]I have been with thee whithersoever thou hast walked, and [s]have cut off all thine enemies from before thee, and have [t]made thee a name like the name of the great men that are in the earth.

8; by our songs, "Sing psalms unto him;" by our discourse, "Talk ye of all his wondrous works," ver. 9. Glorify him as "a great God, and greatly to be praised," ver. 25; as supreme God, (above all gods,) as sole God; for all others are idols, ver. 26. Glorify him as most bright and blessed in himself, "Glory and honour are in his presence," ver. 27; as Creator, "The Lord made the heavens;" as the Ruler of the whole creation, "His judgments are in all the earth," ver. 14; and as ours, "He is the Lord our God." Thus must we "give unto the Lord the glory due to his name," ver. 28, 29, and own it, and much more, his due. 2. Let others be edified and instructed. "Make known his deeds among the people," ver. 8. "Declare his glory among the heathen," ver. 24, that those who are strangers to him may be led into acquaintance with him, allegiance to him, and the adoration of him. Thus must we serve the interests of his kingdom among men, that all the earth may "fear before him," ver. 30. 3. Let us be ourselves encouraged to triumph and trust in God. They that give glory to God's name are allowed to "glory in it," ver. 10, to value themselves upon their relation to God, and venture themselves upon his promise to him. "Let the heart of them rejoice that seek the Lord," much more they that have found him. "Seek him, and his strength, and his face;" that is, seek him by the ark of his strength, in which he manifests himself. 4. Let the everlasting covenant be the great matter of our joy and praise, ver. 15. "Be ye mindful of his covenant." In the parallel place it is, "He will be ever mindful of it," Ps. cv. 8. Seeing God never will forget it, we never must. The covenant is said to be "commanded;" because God has obliged us to obey the conditions of it, and because he has both authority to make the promise, and ability to make it good. This covenant was ancient, yet never to be forgotten. It was made with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, who were long since dead, ver. 16—18; yet still sure to the spiritual seed, and the promises of it pleadable. 5. Let God's former mercies to his people of old, to our ancestors and predecessors in profession, be commemorated by us now, with thankfulness to his praise. Let it be remembered how God protected the patriarchs in their unsettled condition, when they came strangers to Canaan, and were sojourners in it; when they were few, and might easily have been swallowed up; when they were continually upon the remove, and so exposed; when there were many that bore them ill-will, and sought to do them mischief; yet no man was suffered to do them wrong; not the Canaanites, Philistines, Egyptians; kings were reproved and plagued for their sakes. Pharaoh was so, and Abimelech. They were the "anointed of the Lord," sanctified by his grace, sanctified to his glory, and had received the unction of the Spirit. They were his prophets, instructed in the things of God themselves, and commissioned to instruct others; (and prophets are said to be "anointed," 1 Kings xix. 16; Isa. lxi. 1;) and therefore, if any touch them, they touch the apple of God's eye; if any harm them, it is at their peril, ver. 19—22. 6. Let the great salvation of the Lord be especially the subject of our praises, ver. 23. "Show forth from day to day his salvation;" that is, (says Bishop Patrick,) his promised salvation by Christ. We have reason to celebrate that from day to day; for we daily receive the benefit of it, and it is a subject that can never be exhausted. 7. Let God be praised by a due and constant attendance upon him in the ordinances he has appointed; "Bring an offering, then," the fruit of the "ground, now," the fruit of the "lips," of the "heart," Heb. xiii. 15, and "worship him in the beauty of holiness," in the holy place, and in a holy manner, ver. 29. Holiness is the beauty of the Lord, the beauty of all sanctified souls, and all religious performances. 8. Let God's universal monarchy be the fear and joy of all people. Let us reverence it; "Fear before him, all the earth." And let us rejoice in it; "Let the heavens be glad and rejoice," because "the Lord reigns;" and that establishes the world, so that, though it be moved, it cannot be removed, nor the measures broken, which Infinite Wisdom has taken in the government of it, ver. 30, 31. 9. Let the prospect of the judgment to come inspire us with an awful pleasure. Let earth and sea, fields and woods, though in the great day of the Lord they will all be consumed, yet rejoice that he will come, doth come, to "judge the earth," ver. 32, 33. 10. In the midst of our praises, we must not forget to pray for the succour and relief of those saints and servants of God that are in distress, ver. 35, "Save us, gather us, deliver us from the heathen," those of us that are scattered and oppressed. When we are rejoicing in God's favours to us, we must remember our afflicted brethren, and pray for their salvation and deliverance as our own. We are members one of another; and therefore when we mean "Lord, save them," it is not improper to say, "Lord, save us." Lastly. Let us make God the Alpha and Omega of all our praises. He began, ver. 8, "Give thanks to the Lord;" he concludes, ver. 36, "Blessed be the Lord." And whereas, in the place whence this doxology is taken, Ps. cvi. 48, it is added, "Let all the people say, Amen; Hallelujah;" here we find that they did according to that directory; "All the people said, Amen, and praised the Lord." When the Levites had finished this psalm of prayer and praise, then, and not till then, the people that attended signified their consent and concurrence, by saying, "Amen." And so they praised the Lord, much affected, no doubt, with this newly instituted way of devotion, which had been hitherto used in the schools of the prophets only, 1 Sam. x. 5. And if this way of praising God "please the Lord better than an ox or a bullock that has horns and hoofs, the humble shall see it and be glad," Ps. lxix. 31, 32.—Henry.

CHAP. XVII. NATHAN'S PROPHECY.—David must not "build this house," ver. 4.

9 Also [a]I will ordain a place for my people Israel, and will [x]plant them, and they shall dwell in their place, [y]and shall be moved no more; neither shall [z]the children of wickedness [a]waste them any more, [b]as at the beginning,

10 And [c]since the time that I commanded judges to be over my people Israel. [d]Moreover I will subdue all thine enemies. Furthermore I tell thee that [e]the LORD will build thee an house.

11 ¶ And it shall come to pass, [f]when thy days be expired that thou must [g]go to be with thy fathers, that [h]I will raise up thy seed after thee, which shall be of thy sons; and I will establish his kingdom.

12 [i]He shall build me an house, and [k]I will stablish his throne for ever.

13 [l]I will be his father, and he shall be [m]my son: and [n]I will not take my mercy away from him, [o]as I took it from him that was before thee:

14 But I will settle him [p]in mine house and[2] in my kingdom for ever: and his throne shall be established for evermore.

15 [q]According to all these words, and according to all this vision, so did Nathan speak unto David.

16 ¶ And David the king came and [r]sat before the LORD, and said, [s]Who am I, O LORD God, and [t]what is mine house, [u]that thou hast brought me hitherto?

17 And yet this was [x]a small thing in thine eyes, O God; for [y]thou hast also spoken of thy servant's house for a great while to come, and [z]hast regarded me according to the estate of a man of high degree, O LORD God.

18 What can David speak more to thee for [a]the honour of thy servant? for [b]thou knowest thy servant.

19 O LORD, for [c]thy servant's sake,[3] and [d]according to thine own heart, hast thou done all this greatness, in making known all these [‡]great things.

20 O LORD, there is [e]none like thee, neither is there any God [f]beside thee, [g]according to all that we have heard with our ears.

21 And [h]what one nation in the earth is like thy people Israel, whom God went to [i]redeem to be his own people, to [k]make thee a name of [l]greatness and terribleness, [m]by driving out nations from before thy people, whom thou hast redeemed out of Egypt?

22 For [n]thy people Israel didst thou make thine own people for ever; and thou, LORD, becamest their God.

23 Therefore now, LORD, [o]let the thing that thou has spoken concerning thy servant and concerning his house be established for ever, and do as thou hast said.

24 Let it even be established, [p]that thy name may be magnified for ever, saying, The LORD of hosts is the God of Israel, even [q]a God to Israel: and let the house of David thy servant be established before thee.

25 For thou, O my God, hast [§]told thy servant [r]that thou wilt build him an house: therefore thy servant hath [s]found in his heart to pray before thee.

26 And now, LORD, [t]thou art God, and hast promised this goodness unto thy servant:

27 Now therefore [‖]let it please thee to bless the house of thy servant, that it may be [n]before thee for ever: for thou [u]blessest, O LORD, and it shall be blessed for ever.

CHAP. XVIII.

David subdueth the Philistines and the Moabites, 1; he smiteth Hadarezer and the Syrians, 8.

NOW [a]after this[1] it came to pass, that David smote the Philistines, and subdued them, and took [b]Gath and her towns out of the hand of the Philistines.

2 And [c]he smote Moab; and the Moabites became David's servants, and [d]brought gifts.

3 ¶ And David smote [e]Hadarezer king of [f]Zobah unto Hamath, as he went to stablish his dominion [g]by the river Euphrates.

4 And David took from him a thousand chariots, and [h]seven thousand horsemen, and twenty thousand footmen: David also [i]houghed all the chariot horses, but reserved of them [k]an hundred chariots.

5 And when [l]the Syrians of [*]Damascus came [m]to help Hadarezer king of [n]Zobah, David slew of the Syrians two and twenty thousand men.

6 Then David put garrisons in Syria-damascus; and the Syrians [o]became David's servants, and brought gifts. [p]Thus the LORD preserved David whithersoever he went.

7 And David took the [q]shields of gold that were on the servants of Hadarezer, and brought them to Jerusalem.

8 ¶ Likewise from [r]Tibhath,[2] and from Chun, cities of Hadarezer, brought David very much brass, [s]wherewith Solomon made the brasen sea, and the pillars, and the vessels of brass.

9 ¶ Now when [t]Tou king of Hamath heard how David had smitten all the host of Hadarezer king of Zobah;

10 He sent [†]Hadoram his son to king David, to [‡]enquire of his welfare, and to [§]congratulate him, because he had fought against Hadarezer, and smitten him; (for Hadarezer

He must prepare for it, but not do it; as Moses must bring Israel within sight of Canaan, but must then leave it to Joshua to put them in possession of it. It is the prerogative of Christ to be both the Author and Finisher of his work. Yet he must not think that, because he was not permitted to build the temple, 1. His preferment was in vain; no, "'I took thee from the sheep-cote,' though not to be a builder of the temple, yet to be 'ruler of my people Israel;' that is honour enough for thee, leave the other to one that shall come after thee," ver. 7. Why should one man think to engross all the business, and to bring every good work to perfection; let something be left for them that succeed. God had given him victories, and made him a name, ver. 8, and, further, intended by him to establish his people Israel, and secure them against their enemies, ver. 9. That must be his work, who is a man of war, and fit for it, and he must let building of churches alone for one that was never cut out for a soldier. Nor, 2. Must he think that his good purpose was in vain, and that he should lose the reward of it; no, it being God's act to prevent the execution of it, he shall be as fully recompensed as if he had done it. "The Lord will build thee a house," and annex the crown of Israel to it, ver. 10. If there be a willing mind, it shall not only be accepted but thus rewarded. Nor, 3. Must he think that because he might not do this good work, therefore it would never be done, and that it was in vain to think of it; no, "I will raise up thy seed, and he shall build me a house," ver. 11, 12. God's temple shall be built in the time appointed, though we may not have the honour of helping to build it, or the satisfaction of seeing it built. Nor, 4. Must he confine his thoughts to the temporal prosperity of his family, but must entertain himself with the prospect of the kingdom of the Messiah, who should descend from his loins, and whose throne should be "established for evermore," ver. 14.

DAVID'S HUMILITY AND GRATITUDE.—Ver. 16. That which is there expressed by way of question, ("Is this the manner of men, O Lord God?") is here an acknowledgment, "'Thou hast regarded me according to the estate of a man of high degree.' Thou hast made me a great man, and then treated me accordingly." God, by the covenant-relations into which he admits believers, the titles he gives them, the favours he bestows on them, and the preparations he has made for them, regards them according to the estate of men of high degree, though they are mean and vile. Having himself distinguished them, he treats them as persons of distinction, according to the quality he has been pleased to put upon them. Some give these words here another reading, "Thou hast looked upon me in the form of a man who art in the highest, the Lord God," or "Thou hast looked unto me to see, according to the form of a man, the majesty of the Lord God," And Christ is the Messiah; for as Abraham, so David saw his day, and was glad; saw it by faith, saw him in "fashion as a man, the Word made flesh;" and yet saw his "glory as" that "of the only-begotten of the Father." And this was it, that God spake concerning his house for a great while to come, the foresight of which affected him more than any thing. And let it not be thought strange that David should speak so plainly of the two natures of Christ, who in spirit called him "Lord," though he knew he was to be his Son, Ps. cx. 1, and foresaw him "lower than the angels" for a little while, but afterward "crowned with glory and honour," Heb. ii 6, 7.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The repetitions in the word of God may be considered as tacit reproofs of our negligence, forgetfulness, and unteachableness. Indeed, we are very backward to get familiarly acquainted with every part of the sacred volume, and very prone to forget what we have read; so that we need to be taught again what we seem to have already learned: and for all these reasons it is very useful to have the same important truths, precepts, and examples, enforced on us, in different parts of the Scriptures. If, in reading any chapter, or hearing any sermon, we learn nothing new, yet are reminded of those things of which we had lost sight, and stirred up to the exercise of faith and holy affections, and to the more diligent, fervent, and delightful practice of our several duties; very important purposes are answered. It may, however, suffice to observe in this place, that persons of eminent piety will still be devising and attempting one service after another for the honour of God, and to promote the best interests of mankind; accounting themselves to have done nothing, while so much remains to be done, that Christ alone begins and finishes his work, and perpetually unites in his own person all those offices which are requisite for the welfare of his church; but that mere men have, for a short space, certain portions of service allotted them which they cannot exceed.—Scott.

CHAP. XVIII. DAVID'S PIETY AND LIBERALITY.—Ver. 1—17. Here let us learn, 1. That it is our interest to make those friends, who have the presence of God with them. The king of Hamath, hearing of David's great success, sent to congratulate him, and to court his favour with a noble present, ver. 9, 10. It is in vain to contend with the Son of David: "Kiss the Son," therefore, "lest he be angry;" let the kings and judges of the earth, and all inferior people too, be thus wise, thus instructed. The presents we are to bring him are not "vessels of gold and silver," as here; (those shall be welcome to him who have no such presents to bring;) but our hearts and sincere affections, our own selves, our whole selves, we must present to him as living sacrifices. And then what God blesses us with, we must honour him with. The plunder of the idolaters will be the spoils of his enemies. "David dedicated unto the Lord of the silver and the gold that he brought from all these nations;" and we must do so too.

11 ¶ Them also king David [v]dedicated unto the LORD, with the silver and the gold that he brought from all these nations; from Edom, and from Moab, and from [x]the children of Ammon, and from the Philistines, and from [y]Amalek.

13 ¶ And he put [c]garrisons in Edom; and [d]all the Edomites became David's servants. [e]Thus the LORD preserved David whithersoever he went.

14 ¶ So [f]David reigned over all Israel, and [g]executed judgment and justice among all his people.

15 And [h]Joab the son of Zeruiah was over the host; and [i]Jehoshaphat the son of Ahilud, [†]recorder.

16 And Zadok the son of Ahitub, and [k]Abimelech[3] the son of [l]Abiathar, were the priests; and [m]Shavsha was scribe;

17 And [n]Benaiah the son of Jehoiada was over the [o]Cherethites and the Pelethites; and the sons of David were chief [‡]about the king.

CHAP. XIX.

David's messengers sent to comfort Hanun, are disgracefully treated, 1. The Ammonites are overcome, 6.

NOW it came to pass after this, that [a]Nahash the king of the children of Ammon died, and his son reigned in his stead.

2 And David said, [b]I will shew kindness unto Hanun the son of Nahash, because his father shewed kindness to me. And David sent messengers to comfort him concerning his father. So the servants of David came into the land of [c]the children of Ammon to Hanun, to comfort him.

3 But [d]the princes of the children of Ammon said to Hanun, *Thinkest thou that [e]David doth honour thy father, that he hath sent comforters unto thee? are not his servants come unto thee for [f]to search, and to overthrow, and to spy out the land?

4 Wherefore Hanun [g]took David's servants, and [h]shaved them, [i]and cut off their garments in the midst hard by their buttocks, and [k]sent them away.

5 Then there went certain, [l]and told David how the men were served. And he sent to meet them: for the men were greatly ashamed. And the king said, Tarry [m]at Jericho until [n]your beards be grown, and then return.

6 ¶ And when the children of Ammon saw that they [o]had made themselves [†]odious to David, Hanun and the children of Ammon sent [p]a thousand talents of silver to hire them chariots and horsemen out of Mesopotamia, and out of [q]Syria-maachah, and out of [r]Zoba.

7 So they [s]hired thirty and two thousand chariots,[1] and [t]the king of Maachah and his people; who came and pitched before [u]Medeba. And the children of Ammon gathered themselves together from their cities, and came to battle.

8 And when David heard of it, he sent [x]Joab, and all the host of the mighty men.

9 And the children of Ammon came out, and [y]put the battle in array before the gate of the city: and [z]the kings that were come were by themselves in the field.

10 Now [a]when Joab saw that the [‡]battle was [b]set against him before and behind, he chose out of all the [§]choice of Israel, and put them in array against the Syrians.

11 And the rest of the people he delivered unto the hand of [l]Abishai his brother, [c]and they set themselves in array against the children of Ammon.

12 And he said, [d]If the Syrians be too strong for me, then thou shalt help me: but if the children of Ammon be too strong for thee, then I will help thee.

13 Be [e]of good courage, and let us behave ourselves valiantly for our people, and for the cities of our God: and [f]let the LORD do that which is good in his sight.

14 So Joab and the people that were with him drew nigh before the Syrians unto the battle; and [g]they fled before him.

15 And when the children of Ammon saw that the Syrians were fled, [h]they likewise fled before Abishai[2] his brother, and entered into the city. Then Joab came to Jerusalem.

16 ¶ And when the Syrians saw that they were put to the worse before Israel, they sent messengers, [i]and drew forth the Syrians that were beyond the *river: and [k]Shophach the captain of the host of Hadarezer went before them.

17 And it was told David; and he gathered all Israel, and passed over Jordan, and came upon them, [l]and set the battle in array against them. So when David had put the battle in array against the Syrians, they fought with him.

18 But the Syrians [m]fled before Israel; and David slew of the Syrians seven thousand men which fought in chariots, and forty thousand [n]footmen, and killed Shophach the captain of the host.

19 And when [o]the servants of Hadarezer saw that they were put to the worse before Israel, they made peace with David, and became his servants: neither [p]would the Syrians help the children of Ammon any more.

building and enriching of the temple. That is most truly and most comfortably our own which we have consecrated unto the Lord, and which we use for his glory. Let our "merchandise and our hire be holiness to the Lord," Isa. xxiii. 18. 3. That those who take God along with them whithersoever they go, may expect to prosper, and be preserved, whithersoever they go. It was said before, ver. 6, and here again, ver. 13, that "the Lord preserved David whithersoever he went." Those are always under the eye of God that have God always in their eye. 4. God gives men power, not that they may look great with it, but that they may do good with it. When David reigned over all Israel, he "executed judgment and justice among all his people," and so answered the end of his elevation. He was not so intent on his conquests abroad, as to neglect the administration of justice at home. Herein he served the purposes of the kingdom of providence, and of that God who "sits in the throne judging right;" and was an eminent type of the Messiah, the "sceptre of whose kingdom is a right sceptre.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—They who "seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness," shall, in due time and manner, have all other things added unto them.—Communion with God, and his consolations, are intended to animate us to diligence in our proper work, and vigour in our spiritual welfare.—Earthly possessions are often lost by attempting to establish them: and sinners ruin themselves by encouraging and assisting one another in rebellion against God, and opposition to his cause.—Our good fight of faith, under the Captain of our salvation, will assuredly terminate in everlasting triumph and peace.—But the happiness of Israel, through David's victories and equitable administration, very faintly shadowed forth the felicity of the redeemed in the realms above, when the last enemy shall be destroyed, and Jesus shall reign in the midst of them for ever and ever, and they shall behold and share the joy and glory of his kingdom. Let us then, without delay, join ourselves to him, trusting and serving him constantly and faithfully, that at length we may be for ever with him.—Scott.

CHAP. XIX. VICTORY FROM GOD.—1. The courage of brave men is heightened and [illegible] by difficulties. When Joab saw that the battle was not against him, before [illegible] ver. 10, instead of meditating a retreat, he divided his [illegible] and double, he divided [illegible] greatest art and strength are against justice and equity. The Ammonites did their utmost; they brought as good a force into the field, and disposed it with as much policy as possible; yet, having a bad cause, and acting in defence of wrong, it would not do; they were put to the worst. Right will prevail and triumph at last. 2. To how little purpose it is for those to rally again, and reinforce themselves, that have not God on their side. The Syrians, though no way concerned in the merits of the cause, but serving only as mercenaries to the Ammonites, when they were beaten, thought themselves concerned to retrieve their honour; and therefore called in the assistance of the Syrians on the other side Euphrates; but to no purpose, still they "fled before Israel," ver. 18: they lost 7000 men, who are said to be the men of 700 chariots, 2 Sam. x. 18. For as now in a man-of-war for sea service, they allot ten men to a gun, so then in the land service, ten men to a chariot. 4. Those who have "meddled with strife that belongs not to them," and have found that they "meddle to their own hurt," do well to learn wit at length, and meddle no further. The Syrians, finding that Israel was the conquering side, not only brake off their alliance with the Ammonites, and would help them no more, ver. 19, but "made peace with David, and became his servants." Let those who have in vain stood it out against God, be thus wise for themselves, and "agree with him quickly while they are in the way." Let them become his servants; for they cannot but see themselves undone, if they be his enemies.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—We may expect, that in this world our kindest actions will often be requited with the basest returns, and our best intentions expose us to the most injurious suspicions. Even in our most implicit obedience to our great and gracious Lord, when we most sincerely desire to do good to our fellow-creatures, we must lay our account with ingratitude, contempt, and abuse. But these things should not discourage us; for he will plead our cause, and both comfort us and kindly recompense all that we endure for his sake: and after his example we also should endeavour to make up to those that serve us, every loss to which they are exposed in executing our orders.—In every case the servants of God, though here disgraced, will finally be honoured: but none of his enemies will bring upon themselves more sudden and [illegible] vengeance, than they who insult his ambassadors, when sent with [illegible] and salvation.—The only safety of us sinners consists in [illegible] peace with him, and becoming his servants: thus separating [illegible] their opposition and rebellion, we may [illegible] courage, and diligence, [illegible] each other, we may [illegible] him good [illegible]

AND [a]it came to pass, that [*]after the year was expired, at the time that kings go out to battle, Joab led forth the power of the army, and [b]wasted the country of the children of Ammon, and came and besieged [c]Rabbah. But David tarried at Jerusalem. And [d]Joab smote Rabbah, and destroyed it.

2 And David took the crown of their king from off his head, and found [†]it to weigh a talent of gold, and there were precious stones in it; and it was set upon David's head: [e]and he brought also exceeding much spoil out of the city.

3 And [f]he brought out the people that were in it, and cut them [g]with saws, and with harrows of iron, and with axes. Even so dealt David with all the cities of the children of Ammon. And David and all the people returned to Jerusalem.

David numbereth the people, 1; he repenteth, 8; and chooseth the pestilence, 9.

AND [q]Satan stood up against Israel, and [b]provoked David to number Israel.

2 And David said to [c]Joab and to the rulers of the people, Go, number Israel from [d]Beer-sheba even to Dan; and bring the number of them to me, [r]that I may know it.

3 And Joab answered, [s]The LORD make his people an hundred times so many more as they be: but, my lord the king, are they not all my lord's servants? why then doth my lord require this thing? [t]why will he be a cause of trespass[1] to Israel?

4 Nevertheless [1]the king's word prevailed against Joab. [j]Wherefore Joab departed, [k]and went throughout all Israel, and to Jerusalem.

5 ¶ And Joab gave the sum of the ber of the people unto David. And a of Israel were [1]a thousand thousand a hundred thousand men that drew sword Judah was four hundred threescore a thousand men that drew sword.

CHAP. XX. GIANTS—WEAK BEFORE ISRAEL.—Ver. 4. The Philistines were nearly subdued, chap. xviii. 1, but, as in the destruction of the Canaanites by Joshua, the sons of Anak were last subdued, Josh. xi. 21, so here, in the conquest of the Philistines, the giants of Gath were last brought down. In the conflicts between grace and corruption there are some sins, which, like these giants, keep their ground a great while, and are not mastered without much difficulty, and a long struggle: but judgment will be brought forth into victory at last. Observe, 1. We never read of giants among the Israelites, as we do of giants among the Philistines; the giants of Gath, but not giants of Jerusalem. The growth of God's plants is in usefulness, not in bulk. They who covet to have "cubits added to their stature," do not consider that it will but make them more unwieldy. In the balance of the sanctuary, David far outweighs Goliath. 2. The servants of David, though men of ordinary stature, were too hard for the giants of Gath, in every encounter; because they had God on their side, who takes pleasure in abasing lofty looks, and mortifying the giants that are in the earth, as he did of old by the deluge, though they were men of renown. Never let the church's friends be disheartened by the power and pride of the church's enemies. We need not fear great men against us, while we have the great God for us. What will a finger more on each hand do, or a toe more on each foot, in contest with Omnipotence? 3. These giants "defied Israel," ver. 7, and were thus made to pay for their insolence. None are more visibly marked for ruin, than those who reproach God and his Israel. God will do great things, rather than suffer the enemy to "behave themselves proudly," Deut. xxxii. 27. The victories of the Son of David, like those of David himself, are gradual. "We see not yet all things put under him;" but it will be seen shortly: and death itself, the last enemy, like these giants, triumphed over.—Henry.

CHAP. XXI. THE TEMPTATION.—How active the tempter was in it, ver. 1; "Satan stood up against Israel, and provoked David" to do it. It is said, 2 Sam. xxiv. 1, that "the anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel, and he moved David" to do it. The righteous judgments of God are to be observed and acknowledged even in the sins and unrighteousness of men. We are sure that God is not the Author of sin, he "tempts no man;" and therefore when it is said that he moved David to do it, it must be explained [illegible] that, for wise and holy ends, he permitted the Devil to do it. [illegible] to its fountain, 1. That Satan, the enemy of God and all good, should "stand up against Israel," is not strange. It is what he aims at, the strength, diminish the numbers, and eclipse the glory, of God's Israel, to [illegible] a Satan, a sworn adversary. But, 2. That he should influence David, the man own heart, to do a wrong thing, may well be wondered at. One would think of those whom the wicked one touches not. No, even the best saints, till the heaven, are forbidden to think themselves out of the reach of Satan's temptati

THE PUNISHMENT.—The king hears of 70,000 of his subjects, who, in a were struck dead by the pestilence, ver. 14. He was proud of the multi people, but divine justice took a course to make them fewer. Justly is that us, weakened, or embittered to us, which we are proud of. David must have numbered: "Bring me the number of them," says he, "that I may know it." God numbers them after another manner, "numbers to the sword," Isa. lxv David had another number of them brought, more to his confusion than that satisfaction, namely, the number of the slain: a black bill of mortality, which back to his muster-roll. He sees the destroying angel, with his sword dra Jerusalem, ver. 16. This could not but be very terrible to him, as it was a v cation of the anger of Heaven, and threatened the utter destruction of that b Pestilences make the greatest devastations in the most populous places. The angel, though coming peaceably, and on a friendly errand, has made even m to tremble; how dreadful then must this sight be, of an angel with a drawn his hand, a flaming sword, like that of the cherubim, which turned every w the way of the tree of life! While we lie under the wrath of God, the holy armed against us, though we see them not as David did.

REMOVAL OF THE SCOURGE.—Ver. 18. We have here the controversy conc upon David's repentance, his peace made with God. "Though thou wast me, thine anger is turned away." 1. A stop was put to the progress of the ver. 15. When David repented him of the sin, God repented him of the judg ordered the destroying angel to "stay his hand," and "sheath his sword." Direction was given to David to rear an altar in the threshing-floor of Orn The angel commanded the prophet Gad to bring David this direction. The that had, in God's name, carried on the war, is here forward to set on foot t peace; for angels do not desire the woful day. The angel could have given t David himself; but he chose to do it by his seer, that he might put an honou prophetical office. Thus the revelation of Jesus Christ was [illegible] by him to the churches. [illegible] token of reconciliation; for if God [illegible] evil indeed; but as for [s]these sheep, [t]what have they done? [u]Let thine hand, I pray thee, O LORD my God, be on me, and [x]on my father's house; but not on thy people, [y]that they should be plagued.

18 ¶ Then [z]the angel of the Lord commanded Gad to say to David, [a]that David should go up, and set up an altar unto the LORD in the thrashing-floor of Ornan the Jebusite.

19 And David [b]went up at the saying of Gad, which he spake in the name of the LORD.

20 [1]And Ornan turned back, and saw the angel;[3] and his four sons with him hid themselves. [c]Now Ornan was thrashing wheat.

21 And as David came to Ornan, Ornan looked and saw David, and went out of the thrashing-floor, and [d]bowed himself to David with his face to the ground.

22 Then David said to Ornan, *Grant me the place of this thrashing-floor, that I may build an altar therein unto the LORD: [e]thou shalt grant it me for the full price: [f]that the plague may be stayed from the people.

23 And Ornan said unto David, [g]Take it to thee, and let my lord the king do that which is good in his eyes: lo, I give thee [h]the oxen also for burnt-offerings, and the thrashing instruments for wood, and the wheat for the meat-offering: I give it all.

24 And king David said to Ornan, [i]Nay, but I will verily buy it for the full price; for I will not take that which is thine for the LORD, nor offer burnt-offerings without [j]cost.

25 So [k]David gave to Ornan for the place six hundred shekels of gold by weight.

26 And David [l]built there an altar unto the LORD, and offered burnt-offerings, and peace-offerings, [m]and called upon the LORD; and he answered him[4] from heaven [n]by fire upon the altar of burnt-offering.

27 And [o]the LORD commanded the angel; and [p]he put up his sword again into the sheath thereof.

28 ¶ At that time when David saw that the LORD had answered him in the thrashing-floor of Ornan the Jebusite, then he sacrificed there.

29 For [q]the tabernacle of the LORD, which Moses made in the wilderness, and the altar of the burnt-offering, were at that season in the high place at [r]Gibeon.

30 But David could not go before it to enquire of God: for [s]he was afraid, because of the sword of the angel of the LORD.

[h] 3. 2 Kings xxv. 16. Jer. lii. 20.

THEN David said, [a]This is the house of the LORD[1] God, [b]and this is the altar of the burnt-offering for Israel.

2 And David commanded to gather together [c]the strangers that were in the land of Israel; and he set [d]masons to hew wrought stones to build the house of God.

3 And David [e]prepared iron in abundance for the nails for the doors of the gates, and for the joinings; and brass in abundance [f]without weight;

4 Also [g]cedar-trees in abundance: for the Zidonians and they of Tyre brought much cedar-wood to David.

5 And David said, [h]Solomon my son is young and tender, and the house that is to be builded for the LORD must be [i]exceeding magnifical, of fame and of glory throughout all countries: I will therefore now make preparation for it. So [k]David prepared abundantly before his death.

6 ¶ Then he called for Solomon his son, and [l]charged him to build an house for the LORD God of Israel.

7 And David said to Solomon, My son, as for me, [m]it was in my mind to build an house [n]unto the name of the LORD my God:

8 But the word of the LORD came to me, saying, [o]Thou hast shed blood abundantly, and hast made great wars: [p]thou shalt not build an house unto my name, because thou hast shed much blood upon the earth in my sight.

9 Behold, [q]a son shall be born to thee, who shall be a man of rest; and [r]I will give him rest from all his enemies round about: for his name shall be *Solomon, and [s]I will give peace and quietness unto Israel in his days.

10 [t]He shall build an house for my name; and [u]he shall be my son, and I will be his father; and [x]I will establish the throne of his kingdom over Israel for ever.

11 Now, my son, [y]the LORD be with thee; and prosper thou, and build the house of the LORD thy God, as he hath said of thee.

12 Only [z]the LORD give thee wisdom and understanding, and give thee charge concerning Israel, [a]that thou mayest keep the law of the LORD thy God.

13 Then [b]shalt thou prosper, if thou takest heed [c]to fulfil the statutes and judgments which the LORD charged Moses with concerning Israel: [d]be strong, and of good courage; dread not, nor be dismayed.

14 Now, behold, in my [f]trouble I have prepared for the house of the LORD [g]an hundred thousand talents[2] of gold, and a thousand thousand talents of silver; and of brass and iron [h]without weight; for it is in abundance:

appointed, because he would not have accepted, a sacrifice at his hands. 3. David immediately made a bargain with Ornan for the thrashing-floor; for he would not serve God at other people's charge. Ornan generously offered it him gratis, not only in complaisance to the king, but because he had himself "seen the angel," ver. 20, which so terrified him, that he and his four sons hid themselves, as unable to bear the brightness of his glory, and afraid of his drawn sword. Under these apprehensions, he was willing to do any thing toward making the atonement.

DAVID'S GRATITUDE.—David continued to offer his sacrifices upon this altar. The brazen altar which Moses made was at Gibeon, ver. 29, and there all the sacrifices of Israel were offered: but David was so terrified at the sight of the sword of the angel, that he "could not go thither," ver. 30. The business required haste, when the plague was begun. Aaron must go quickly, nay, he must run, to make atonement, Num. xvi. 46, 47. And the case here was no less urgent; so that David had not time to go to Gibeon: nor durst he leave the angel, with his sword drawn over Jerusalem, lest the fatal stroke should be given before he came back. And therefore God, in tenderness to him, bade him build an altar in that place, dispensing with his own law concerning one altar, because of the present distress, and accepting the sacrifices offered on this new altar, which was not set up in opposition to that, but in concurrence with it. The symbols of unity were not so much insisted on, as unity itself. Nay, when the present distress was over, (as it should seem,) David, as long as he lived, sacrificed there, though the altar at Gibeon was still kept up; for God had owned the sacrifices that were here offered, and had testified his acceptance of them, ver. 28. On those administrations in which we have experienced the tokens of God's presence, and have found that he is with us of a truth, it is good to continue our attendance. "Here God has graciously met me, and therefore I will still expect to meet with him."—Henry.

CHAP. XXII. DAVID'S CHARGE TO SOLOMON.—Though Solomon was young and tender, he was capable of receiving instructions concerning the work for which he was designed; accordingly, his father here gives him instructions. When David came to the throne, he had many things to do, for the foundations were all out of course; but Solomon had only one thing in charge, and that was, "to build a house for the Lord God of [illegible]. 6. Now 1. He tells him why he did not do it himself. It was in his [illegible] ver. 7, but God forbade him, because "he had shed much blood," ver. 8. [illegible] to the blood of [illegible], which fastened such a reproach upon him, [illegible] the temple; but that honour was [illegible] it must be meant, as it is here explained, of the blood he shed in his wars, for he had been a man of war from his youth; which, though shed very justly and honourably, and in the service of God and Israel, yet made him unfit to be employed in this service, or rather less fit than another that had never been called to such a bloody work. God, by assigning this as the reason of laying David aside from this work, showed how precious human life is to him, and intended a type of him who should build the gospel-temple, not by "destroying men's lives," but "saving them," Luke ix. 56. 2. He gives him the reason why he imposed this task upon him. (1.) Because God had designed him for it, nominated him as the man that should do it; "A son shall be born to thee," that shall be called Solomon, and "he shall build a house for my name," ver. 9, 10. Nothing is more powerful to engage us to, and encourage us in, any service for God, than to know that hereunto we are appointed. 3. Because he would have leisure and opportunity to do it. He should be a man of rest, and therefore should not have his time, or thoughts, or wealth, diverted from this business. He should have rest from his enemies abroad, (none of them should invade or threaten him, or give him provocation,) and he should have peace and quietness at home; and therefore let him build the house. Note, When God gives rest, he expects work. 4. Because God had promised to establish his kingdom. Let this encourage him to honour God, that God had honour in store for him; let him build up God's house, and God will build up his throne. Note, God's gracious promises should quicken and invigorate our religious service. 5. He delivers him an account of the vast preparations he had made for this building, ver. 14; not in a way of pride and vain-glory, (he speaks of it as a poor thing; "I have, in my poverty, prepared," margin,) but as an encouragement to Solomon to engage cheerfully in the work, for which so solid a foundation was laid. The treasure here mentioned of 100,000 talents of gold, and 1,000,000 talents of silver, amounts to such an incredible sum, that most interpreters either allow an error in the copy, or think the talent here signifies no more than a plate or piece; ingots we call them. I am inclined to suppose that a certain number is here put for an uncertain, because it is said, ver. 16, that of the gold and silver, as well as of the brass and iron, there was no number; and that David here includes all the dedicated things, chap. xviii. 11, which he designed "for the house of the Lord;" that is, not only for the building of it, but for the treasury of it; [illegible] together, it might come near what is here spoken of. [illegible] bers which we often use to express that which is very much, [illegible] understood strictly. "6. He charges him to keep God's [illegible] to his duty in every thing, ver. 7. 3 Now [d]the Levites were numbered from the age of thirty years and upward: and their number by their polls, man by man, was [e]thirty and eight thousand.

4 Of which, [f]twenty and four thousand were to [*]set forward the work of the house of the LORD; and six thousand were [g]officers and judges:

5 Moreover four thousand were [h]porters; and four thousand [i]praised the LORD with [j]the instruments which I made, said David, to praise therewith.

6 And David [k]divided them into [†]courses among the sons of Levi, namely, [l]Gershon, Kohath, and Merari.

7 ¶ Of the [m]Gershonites were, [n]Laadan, and Shimei.

8 The sons of Laadan; the chief was [o]Jehiel, and Zetham, and [p]Joel, three.

9 The sons of Shimei; Shelomith, and Haziel, and Haran, three. These were the chief of the fathers of Laadan.

10 And the sons of Shimei were, Jahath, [q]Zina, and Jeush, and Beriah. These four were the sons of Shimei.

11 And Jahath was the chief, and [r]Zizah the second: but Jeush and Beriah [‡]had not many sons; therefore they were in one reckoning, according to their father's house.

12 ¶ The [s]sons of Kohath; Amram, Izhar, Hebron, and Uzziel, four.

13 The [t]sons of Amram; Aaron, and Moses: and Aaron was [u]separated, that he should [x]sanctify the most holy things, he and his sons for ever, [y]to burn incense before the LORD, to minister unto him, and [z]to bless in his name for ever.

14 Now concerning Moses[2] [a]the man of God, [b]his sons were named of the tribe of Levi.

15 The sons of Moses were, [c]Gershom, and Eliezer.

16 Of the sons of Gershom, [d]Shebuel was the chief.

17 And the sons of Eliezer were, Rehabiah [§]the chief. And Eliezer had none other sons; but the sons of Rehabiah [‡]were very many.

19 Of the sons of [f]Hebron; Jeriah the first, Amariah the second, Jahaziel the third, and Jekameam the fourth.

20 Of the sons of Uzziel; Micha the first, and Jesiah the second.

nor accounted of, if he did not "take heed to fulfil the statutes which the Lord charged Moses with," ver. 13. Though he was to be king of Israel, he must always remember that he was a subject to the God of Israel. 7. He encourages him to go about this great work, and to go on in it, ver. 13; "'Be strong, and of good courage;' though it is a vast undertaking, thou needest not fear coming under the reproach of the foolish builder, who began to build, and was not able to finish; it is God's work, and it shall come to perfection; 'dread not, nor be dismayed.'"—Henry.

CHAP. XXIII. ORGANIZATION OF THE SACRED SERVICE.—Ver. 2—6. The ark being now stationed at Jerusalem, the place of the temple appointed, and great preparations made for the building of it, chap. xvi. 1; xxii. 1—4; David proceeded to reduce the whole service of the priests and Levites to method, which seems before to have been conducted with less regularity. The Israelites had been greatly increased; and we may suppose that, towards the close of David's reign, the occasional sacrifices were far more numerous than they had been. The priests and Levites also were greatly multiplied; and it was of importance to make every thing ready for conducting the service with proportionable splendour and solemnity, as soon as the temple was finished. David therefore began his arrangements with numbering the Levites, from thirty years of age, as in the time of Moses; but it does not appear that such as were above fifty years old were omitted. The priests, who were very numerous, were not included in the sum total here mentioned; so that this tribe had increased in greater proportion than the others.—Twenty-four thousand Levites were employed to "set forward the work of the house of the LORD;" that is, to assist the priests in every thing pertaining to the sacrifices, and in removing from the temple and its courts whatever might be polluting and offensive; that the whole service might be performed with expedition and exactness, and every thing preserved entirely clean and beautiful, ver. 28; and it is probable that, while the temple was building, they were employed in superintending the workmen. They served in rotation by courses: it is probable, that every week a thousand came in and a thousand went out. Doubtless it was also intended, that they should be instructors of the people, in their several districts, when not employed at the sanctuary. Six thousand were employed as magistrates, in the different parts of the country, and perhaps they likewise acted in rotation. Four thousand kept the doors of the sanctuary, that no unclean or improper person might enter the courts, that none but priests might go into the temple, and that no one might rob the treasures there deposited: and four thousand were appointed as singers and musicians, to keep up that part of divine worship continually.—These also were divided into twenty-four courses, and changed weekly. Ver. 7—23. Moses, &c. ver. 14. As the sons of Moses were excluded from the priesthood; evidently with Moses' most cordial and disinterested concurrence: and, as it appears from the history, by their own also; no other person, not of Aaron's race, could on any account reasonably think of intruding into that sacred office. Ver. 24—28. The work of the Levites was not so laborious at this time, as when the tabernacle was carried by them, along with Israel in their journeys; and perhaps numbers of the young Levites, being out of employ, contracted bad habits, or set bad examples: therefore David, as a prophet, ordered this change. Twenty-five years of age had been the earliest term of their entering upon their probationary services, but now they were to be employed from twenty years old; and, as a matter of importance, David confirmed it with his last words.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—If we be prepared for death, having accomplished our measure of services, and seeing others raised up to succeed us in the church or community, according to our several situations, we surely may be "full of days," whatever our term of life may be: and satisfied with living in this world of sin and sorrow, of vanity and temptation, we may rejoice to leave all below, and even to be absent from our bodies, that we may go to heaven, and be present with the Lord.—We should be thankful, in declining years, to be eclipsed by men of real integrity, piety, and useful endowments, who are coming forward upon the stage of action; yet we should still endeavour to do all we can to promote the common cause of religion; and sometimes the sagacity and experience of old age, when incapable of much bodily exertion, may suggest and effect more real good, than the vigour and activity of youth.—The increase of ministers is of great importance, provided they be men of God, zealous for his glory, and earnestly seeking the salvation of souls. In this case they will desire employment, and in one way or other will be usefully active.—But it is expedient that every one should know his proper place, to help forward the work of the house of the Lord; to promote equity and justice; to instruct the people in the truths and precepts of God's word: to take care that his ordinances be duly administered; and to excite and assist the people in his sacred worship.—Every method should be used to prevent the irregularity, indolence, and worldly lusts, of this order of men, whose example, influence, and conversation are more useful, or more pernicious, than those of any other; and who are commonly either better or worse employed than the other orders in society.—Though it is generally inexpedient, that the more arduous part of the sacred ministry should be performed by very young men: yet, they who are intended for this service, ought by no means to waste their youth in inactivity or dissipation; but to employ their time in preparatory and initiatory studies and exercises.—A constant succession of religious duties, stated or occasional, public or private, must engage the true minister's attention,

The divisions of the sons of Aaron into four and twenty orders, 1. The Kohathites, 20, and the Merarites divided by lot, 27.

NOW these are [a]the divisions of the sons of Aaron. [b]The sons of Aaron; Nadab, and Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar.

2 But [c]Nadab and Abihu [d]died before their father, and had no children: therefore [e]Eleazar and Ithamar executed the priest's office.

3 And David distributed them, both [f]Zadok of the sons of Eleazar, and [g]Ahimelech of the sons of Ithamar, according to their offices in their service.

4 And there were more [h]chief men found of [i]the sons of Eleazar than of the sons of Ithamar; and thus were they divided. Among the sons of Eleazar there were sixteen chief men of the house of their fathers, and eight among the sons of Ithamar [k]according to the house of their fathers.

5 Thus were [l]they divided by lot,[l] one sort with another; for [m]the governors of the sanctuary, and governors of the house of God, were of the sons of Eleazar, and of the sons of Ithamar.

6 And Shemaiah the son of Nethaneel [n]the scribe, one of the Levites, wrote them before the king, and the princes, and Zadok the priest, and Ahimelech the son of Abiathar, and before the chief of the fathers of the priests and Levites: one *principal household being taken for Eleazar, and one taken for Ithamar.

7 Now the first lot came forth to [o]Jehoiarib, the second [p]to Jedaiah,

8 The third to [q]Harim, the fourth to Seorim,

9 The fifth to Malchijah, the sixth to [r]Mijamin,

10 The seventh to Hakkoz, the eighth to [s]Abijah,

11 The ninth to [t]Jeshuah, the tenth to Shecaniah,

12 The eleventh to [u]Eliashib, the twelfth to Jakim,

13 The thirteenth to Huppah, the fourteenth to Jeshebeab,

14 The fifteenth to Bilgah, the sixteenth to [x]Immer,

15 The seventeenth to Hezir, the eighteenth to Aphses,

16 The nineteenth to Pethahiah, the twentieth to Jehezekel,

17 The one and twentieth to Jachin, the two and twentieth to Gamul,

18 The three and twentieth to Delaiah, the four and twentieth to Maaziah.

19 These were [y]the orderings[z] of them in their service to come into the house of the LORD, according to their manner, [a]under Aaron their father, as the LORD God of Israel had commanded him.

20 ¶ And the rest of the sons of Levi were these: Of the sons of [b]Amram; [b]Shubael: of the sons of Shubael; Jehdeiah.

21 Concerning [c]Rehabiah: of the sons of Rehabiah, the first was [d]Isshiah.

22 Of the [e]Izharites; [f]Shelomoth: of the sons of Shelomoth; Jahath.

23 And the sons of Hebron; [g]Jeriah the first, Amariah the second, Jahaziel the third, Jekameam the fourth.

24 Of the sons of Uzziel; [h]Michah: of the sons of Michah; Shamir.

25 The brother of Michah was [i]Isshiah: of the sons of Isshiah; [k]Zechariah.

26 ¶ The [l]sons of Merari were Mahli and Mushi: the sons of Jaaziah; Beno.

27 The sons of Merari by Jaaziah; Beno, and Shoham, and Zaccur, and Ibri.

28 Of Mahli came Eleazar, [m]who had no sons.

29 Concerning Kish: the son of Kish was Jerahmeel.

30 The sons also of [n]Mushi; Mahli, and Eder, and Jerimoth. These were the sons of the Levites after the house of their fathers.

31 These likewise cast [o]lots over against their brethren the sons of Aaron in the presence of David the king, and Zadok, and Ahimelech, and the chief of the fathers of the priests and Levites, even [p]the principal fathers over against[3] their younger brethren.

day by day, continually: and if a man cannot take pleasure in such employments, he must soon be weary of the work as a drudgery; and will either neglect it, or attend upon it unwillingly, for the sake of his wages. A new heart, a spiritual mind, which delights greatly in God's commandments, is the first and most essential qualification for the ministry; as indeed it forms the great distinction between the true Christian and all other men in the world. To the spiritual man every successive service will yield renewed satisfaction; and he will be unwearied, and always abounding and delighting in the work of the Lord; being never so happy as when employed for such a good Master, in so pleasant a service.—Scott.

CHAP. XXIV. ORGANIZATION OF THE AARONITES.—Ver. 1. The particular account of these establishments is of little use to us now: but, when Ezra published it, it was of great use to direct their church affairs, after their return from captivity, into the old channel again. The title of this record we have, ver. 1, "These are the divisions of the sons of Aaron;" not by which they divided one from another, or were at variance one with another; (it is pity there should ever be any such divisions among the sons of Israel, but especially among the sons of Aaron;) but the distribution of them, in order to the dividing of their work among themselves; it was a division which God made, and was made for him. 1. This distribution was made for the more regular discharge of their office. God was, and still is, the God of order, and not of confusion, particularly in the things of his worship. Number, without order, is but a clog, and an occasion of tumult; but, when every one has, and knows, and keeps his place and work, the more the better. In the mystical body every member has its use, for the good of the whole, Rom. xii. 4, 5; 1 Cor. xii. 12. 2. It was made by lot, that the disposal thereof might be of the Lord, and so all quarrels and contentions might be prevented, and no man could be charged with partiality, nor could any say that they had wrong done them. As God is the God of order, so he is the God of peace. Solomon says of the lot, that it "causeth contention to cease." 3. The lot was cast publicly, and with great solemnity, in the presence of the king, princes, and priests, that there might be no room for any fraudulent practices, or the suspicion of them. The lot is an appeal to God, and ought to be managed with corresponding reverence and sincerity. Matthias was chosen to the apostleship by lot, with prayer, Acts i. 24, 26; and I know not but it might be still used, in faith, in parallel cases, as an instituted ordinance. We have here the name of the public notary that was employed in writing the names, and drawing the lots, ver. 6, "Shemaiah one of the Levites." 4. What those priests were chosen to, was, to preside in the affairs of the sanctuary, ver. 5, in their several courses and turns. That which was to be determined by the lot was only the precedency, not who should serve, (for they chose all their chief men,) but who should serve first, and who next, that every one might know his course, and attend in it. Of the twenty-four chief men of the priests, sixteen were of the house of Eleazar, and eight of Ithamar; for the house of Ithamar might well be supposed to have dwindled since the sentence passed on the family of Eli, who was of that house. The method of drawing the lots is intimated, ver. 6, one chief household being taken for Eleazar, and one for Ithamar. The sixteen chief names of Eleazar were put in one urn, the eight for Ithamar in another, and they drew out of them alternately, as long as those for Ithamar lasted, and then out of those only for Eleazar; or two for Eleazar, and then one for Ithamar, throughout. 5. Among these twenty-four courses, the eighth is that of Abijah, or Abia, ver. 10, which is mentioned, Luke i. 5, as the course which Zechariah was of, the father of John Baptist: by which it appears, that those courses which David now settled, though interrupted, perhaps, in the bad reigns, and long broken off by the captivity, yet continued in succession till the destruction of the second temple by the Romans. And each course was called by the name of him in whom it was first founded, as the high priest is here called Aaron, ver. 19, because succeeding in his dignity and power, though we read not of any of them that bore that name. Whoever was high priest must be reverenced and observed by the inferior priests as their father, as Aaron their father. Christ is high priest over the house of God, to whom all believers, being made priests, are to be in subjection.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The Lord will certainly perform all his promises and threatenings: and if they do not take effect suddenly, and with observation, they will do it gradually and silently.—Sin ruins men's characters, comforts, and families; and will destroy the immortal souls of all those, who do not obtain salvation by faith in Jesus Christ.—In all cases we ought to act with exact impartiality, as far as we are able: and when human prudence fails of discerning a reason of preference, where it must be given, it is right, in one way or other, to refer the determination to the Lord.—Scott.

CHAP. XXV. DIVINE SERVICE—SONG.—Observe, 1. Singing the praises of God is here called "prophesying," ver. 1—3; not that all those who were employed in this service were honoured with the visions of God, or could foretell things to come. Heman, indeed, is said to be the "king's seer in the words of God," ver. 5; but the psalms they sang were composed by prophets, and many of them were prophetical; and the edification of the church was intended in it, as well as the glory of God. In Samuel's time, singing the praises of God went by the name of "prophesying," 1 Sam. x. 5; xix. 20; with psalteries, and with cymbals: and the number of the workmen according to their service was:

3 Of [h]Jeduthun: the sons of Jeduthun;[2] [i]Gedoliah, and [j]Zeri, and [k]Jeshaiah, Hashabiah, and [l]Mattithiah, [†]six, under the hands of their father Jeduthun, who prophesied with a harp, [m]to give thanks and to praise the LORD.

4 Of [n]Heman: the sons of Heman; [o]Bukkiah, [p]Mattaniah, [q]Uzziel, [r]Shebuel, and [s]Jerimoth, [t]Hananiah, [u]Hanani, [x]Eliathah, [y]Giddalti, and [z]Romamti-ezer, [a]Joshbekashah, [b]Mallothi, [c]Hothir, and Mahazioth:

5 All these were the sons of Heman [d]the king's seer in the [‡]words of God, to lift up the horn.[3] And [e]God gave to Heman fourteen sons and three daughters.

7 So the number of them, with their brethren that were instructed in the songs of the LORD, even all that were cunning, was two hundred fourscore and eight.

8 ¶ And they [i]cast lots, [j]ward against ward, as well the small[4] as the great, [k]the teacher as the scholar.

[4] Because his elder brother was feeble, or some other way unfit for the service. For, as Jacob gave the kingdom to Judah, and the priesthood to Levi, and put Reuben his first-born from his right, because of his crime; so there was some weighty cause, no doubt, why this man had the right of primogeniture given him, which was not to be altered upon the account of affection (Deut. xxi. 16, 17).—PATRICK.

and perhaps that is intended in what St. Paul calls "prophesying." 1 Cor. xi. 4; xiv. 24. 2. This is here called a "service," and the persons employed in it "workmen," ver. 1. Not but that it is the greatest liberty and pleasure to be employed in praising God: what is heaven but that? But it intimates that it is our duty to make a business of it, and stir up all that is within us to it; and that in our present state of corruption and infirmity, it will not be done as it should be done without labour and struggle. We must take pains with our hearts, to bring them and keep them to this work, and to engage all that is within us. 3. Here were, in compliance with the temper of that dispensation, a great variety of musical instruments used, "harps, psalteries, cymbals," ver. 1, 6; and here was one that "lifted up the horn," ver. 5, that is, used wind-music. The bringing of such concerts of music into the worship of God now is what none pretend to. But those who use such concerts for their own entertainment, should feel themselves obliged to preserve them always free from any thing that savours of immorality or profaneness; by this consideration, that time was when they were sacred; and then they were justly condemned who brought them into common use, Amos vi. 5. "They invented to themselves instruments of music like David." 4. The glory and honour of God were principally intended in all this temple-music, whether vocal or instrumental. It was "to give thanks and praise the Lord" that they were employed, ver. 3. It was "in the songs of the Lord that they were instructed," ver. 7, that is, "for songs in the house of the Lord," ver. 6. This agrees with the intention of the perpetuating of psalmody in the gospel-church, which is, "to make melody with the heart," in conjunction with the voice, "unto the Lord," Eph. v. 19. 5. The order of the king is likewise taken notice of, ver. 2, and again, ver. 6. In those matters, indeed, David acted as a prophet; but his taking care for the due and regular observance of divine institutions, both ancient and modern, is an example to all in authority to use their power for the promoting of religion, and the enforcing of the laws of Christ. Let them thus be "ministers of God for good." 6. The fathers presided in this service; Asaph, Heman, and Jeduthun, ver. 1; and the children were "under the hands of their father," ver. 2, 3, 6. This gives a good example to parents to train up their children, and indeed to all seniors to instruct their juniors in the service of God, and particularly in praising of him, than which there is no part of our work more necessary, or more worthy to be transmitted to the succeeding generations. It gives also an example to the younger to "submit themselves to the elder," (whose experience and observation fit them for direction,) and, as far as may be, to do what they do, "under their hand." It is probable that Heman, Asaph, and Jeduthun, were bred up under Samuel, and had their education in the schools of the prophets, which he was the founder and president of; then they were pupils, now they came to be masters. Those that would be eminer begin early, and take time to prepare themselves. This good work of singir praises Samuel revived, and set on foot, but lived not to see it brought to the perfe appears in here. Solomon perfects what David began, so David perfects what began. Let all in their day do what they can for God and his church, though th not carry it so far as they would; when they are gone, God can, out of stone up others, who shall build upon their foundation, and bring forth the top-sto There were others also, beside the sons of these three great men, who are calle "brethren," (probably because they had been wont to join with them in their concerts,) who were "instructed in the songs of the Lord," and were cunning skilled therein, ver. 7. They were all Levites, and were in number 288.—Henry

CHAP. XXVI. DIVINE SERVICE—WATCH AND WARD.—Ver. 1. Observe, 1. In allusion to this office, ministers are said "the keys of the kingdom of heaven" committed to them, Matt. xvi. 19, that th admit and exclude, according to the law of Christ. 2. Of several of those th called to this service, it is taken notice of, that they were "mighty men of valou 6, "strong men," ver. 7, "able men," ver. 8, and of one of them, that he was " counsellor," ver. 14, who, probably, when he had "used this office of a deacon we given proofs of more than ordinary wisdom, "purchased to himself a good degre was preferred from the gate to the council-board, 1 Tim. iii. 13. As for tho excelled in strength of body, and courage and resolution of mind, they were t qualified for the post assigned them; for whatever service God calls men to, he finds them fit, or makes them so. 3. The sons of Obed-edom were employed rev office, sixty-two of that family. This was he that entertained the ark with rev and cheerfulness; and see how he was rewarded for it: (1.) He had eight "sons 5, "for God blessed him." The increase and building up of families are owing divine blessing; and a great blessing it is to a family to have many children, whe are, as those here, able for and eminent in the service of God. (2.) His sons wer ferred to places of trust in the sanctuary. They had faithfully attended the ark i own house, and now were called to attend it in God's house. He that is trusty in shall be trusted with more. He that keeps God's ordinances in his own tent, is fit to have the custody of them in God's tabernacle, 1 Tim. iii. 4, 5. "I have kept thy law," says David, and "this I had, because I kept thy precepts," Ps. cxix. 55, 56. 4. It is said of one here, that "though he was not the first-born, his father made him the chief," ver. 10, either because he was very excellent, or because the elder son was very weak. He was made chief, perhaps not in inheriting the estate, (for that was forbidden by the law, Deut. xxi. 16, 17,) but in this service, which required personal qualifications. 5. The porters, as the singers, had their posts assigned them by lot; so many at such a gate, and so many at such a one, that every one might know his post, and make it good, ver. 13. It is not said that they were cast into twenty-four courses, as before; but here are the names of about twenty-four, ver. 1—11, and the posts assigned are twenty-four, ver. 17, 18. We have therefore reason to think they were distributed into as many companies. Happy they who dwell in God's house; for, as they are well fed, well taught, and well employed, so they are well guarded. Men attended at the gates of the temple, but angels at the gates of the new Jerusalem, Rev. xxi. 12.

TEMPLE—TREASURES.—Ver. 22. Observe, 1. There were "treasures of the house of God." A great house cannot be well kept without stores of all manner of provisions. Much was expended daily upon the altar; flour, wine, oil, salt, fuel, beside the lamps; quantities of these were to be kept beforehand, beside the sacred vestments and utensils. These were the "treasures of the house of God." And because money answers all things, doubtless they had an abundance of it, which was received from the people's offerings, wherewith they bought in what they had occasion for. And, perhaps, much was laid up for an exigence. These treasures typified the plenty there is in our Heavenly Father's house, enough and to spare. In Christ, the true Temple, are hid "treasures of wisdom and knowledge," and "unsearchable riches." 2. There were "treasures of dedicated things;" dedicated mostly "out of the spoils won in battle," ver. 27, as a grateful acknowledgment of the Divine Protection. Abraham gave Melchisedec the "tenths of the spoils," Heb. vii. 4. In Moses's time, the officers of the army, when they returned victorious, brought, of their spoils, an "oblation to the Lord," Numb. xxxi. 50. Of late this pious custom had been revived; and not only Samuel and David, but Saul, and Abner, and Joab, had dedicated of their spoils to the honour and support of the house of God, ver. 28. Note, the more God bestows upon us, the more he expects from us in works of piety and charity. Great successes call for proportionable returns. When we look over our estates, we should consider, "Here are convenient things, rich things, it may be, and fine things; but where are the dedicated things?" Men of war must honour God with their spoils. 3. These treasurers had treasurers, those that were over them, ver. 20, 26, whose business it was to keep them, that neither "moth nor rust" might "corrupt" them, nor "thieves break through and steal;" to give out as there was occasion, and to see they were not wasted, embezzled, or alienated to any common use; and it is probable that they kept accounts of all that was brought in, and how it was laid out.—Henry.

CHAP. XXVII. DAVID'S MILITARY ORGANIZATION.—Ver. 1. We have here an account of the militia of the kingdom, and the regulation of that. David was himself a man of war, and had done great things with the sword; he had brought into the field great armies: now here we are told how he marshalled them, when God had given him rest from all his enemies. He did not keep them all together; for that would have been a hardship on them and the country; yet he did not disband and disperse them all; then he had left his kingdom naked, and his people would have forgotten the arts of war, wherein they had been instructed. He therefore contrives to keep up a constant force, and yet not a standing army. The model is very prudent. 1. He kept up 24,000 constantly in arms, I suppose in a body, and disciplined in one part or other of the kingdom; the freeholders carrying their own arms, and bearing their own charges while they were up. This was a sufficient strength for the securing of the public peace and safety. Those that are Israelites indeed, must learn war; for we have enemies to grapple with, whom we are concerned constantly to stand upon our guard against. 2. He changed them every month; so that the whole number of the militia amounted to 288,000; perhaps about a fifth part of the able men of the kingdom. By being thus distributed into twelve courses, they were all instructed in, and accustomed to military exercises; and yet none were compelled to be in service, and at expenses, above one month in the year, which they might very well afford, unless upon extraordinary occasions, and then they might all be got together quickly. It is the wisdom of governors, and much their praise, while they provide for the public safety, to contrive how to make it effectual and yet easy, and as little as possible burthensome to the people. 3. Every course had a commander-in-chief over it, beside the subaltern officers that were rulers over thousands, and hundreds, and fifties; there was one general officer to each course or legion. All these twelve great commanders are mentioned among David's worthies and champions, 2 Sam. xxiii., and 1 Chron. xi. They had first signalized themselves by their great actions, and then they were advanced to those great preferments. It is well with a kingdom when honour thus attends merit. Benaiah is here called "a chief priest," ver. 4. But cohen signifying both a priest and a prince, it might better be translated here a "chief ruler," or (as in the margin) "a principal officer." Dodai had Mikloth, ver. 4, either for his substitute when he was absent or infirm, or for his successor when

Judah is or (as in the margin) "a principal officer," or for his wisdom he was absent or sinful, or for his

he was dead. Benaiah had his son under him, ver. 6. Asahel had his son after him, ver. 7; and by that it seems that this plan of the militia was laid in the beginning of David's reign: for Asahel was killed by Abner, while David reigned in Hebron. When his wars were over, he revived this method, and left the military affairs in this posture, for the peaceable reign of his son Solomon. When we think ourselves most safe, yet, while we are here in the body, we must keep in a readiness for spiritual conflicts: "Let not him that girdeth on the harness, boast as he that puts it off."

OFFICERS OF THE COURT.—1. The "rulers of the king's substance," (as they are called, ver. 31,) were such as had the oversight and charge of the king's tillage, his vineyards, his oliveyards, his herds, his camels, his asses, his flocks. Here are no officers for state, none for sport, no master of the wardrobe, no master of the ceremonies, no master of the horse, no master of the hounds, but all for substance, agreeable to the simplicity and plainness of those times. David was a great soldier, a great scholar, and a great prince, and yet a great husband of his estate, kept a great deal of his ground in his own hand, and stocked it, not for pleasure, but for profit; for the king himself is "served of the field," Eccl. v. 9. Those magistrates that would have their subjects industrious, must be themselves examples of industry, and application to business. We find, however, that afterward the poor of the land were thought good enough to be vine-dressers and husbandmen, 2 Kings xxv. 12. Now David put his great men to preside in these employments. 2. The attendants on the king's person. They were such as were eminent for wisdom, being designed for conversation. His uncle, who was a wise man, and a scribe, not only well skilled in politics, but well read in the scriptures, was his counsellor, ver. 32. Another who, no doubt, excelled in learning and prudence, was tutor to his children. Ahithophel, a very cunning man, was his counsellor: but Hushai, an honest man, was his companion and confidant. It does not appear that he had many counsellors; but those he had were men of great abilities. Much of the wisdom of princes is seen in the choice of their ministry. But David, though he had all these trusty counsellors about him, preferred his Bible before them all, Ps. cxix. 24: "Thy testimonies are my delight and my counsellors."—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The prudent management of secular affairs subserves the interests of godliness; provided it be kept in its proper place, and the favour and glory of God have a decided preference. In the kingdoms of this world, habitual readiness for war forms a better security of peace than any treaties or alliances: in like manner, nothing so much encourages Satan's assaults as our unwatchfulness; and while we stand armed with the whole armour of God, in the exercise of faith and preparation of heart for the conflict, we shall certainly be safe, and probably enjoy inward peace.—When we have exposed ourselves to wrath and chastening for our sins, we ought hu confess them and to desist from them: this will not make atonement for our but it prepares us for receiving the atonement made by the Saviour, and maki able returns for it.—Usefulness is the proper standard of valuableness: and estimates by this rule, will give the word of God, the salvation of Christ, and t gion, a decided preference to all other things; because infinitely more useful chosen counsellors prove the wisdom of princes: yet, some will be found wise n scribes, and eminent for worldly policy and plausibility, who are in fact very characters.—But the faithful, the upright, and godly, should be our friends and companions; and no king will be well advised in all things, or in those of the importance, who doth not make the testimonies of God "his delight and his coun however he may be surrounded by powerful family-connexions, faithful friends, a politicians.—Scott.

CHAP. XXVIII. DAVID'S SUCCESSOR.—David produces his own title first, an Solomon's, to the crown; both were undoubtedly jure divino—divine. They coul out such a title as no monarch on earth can; the Lord God of Israel chose ther immediately by prophecy, not providence, ver. 4, 5. No right of primogeniture tended; Detur digniori, not seniori—It went by worth, not by age. 1. Judah was eldest son of Jacob, yet God chose that tribe to be the ruling tribe; Jacob entail sceptre upon it, Gen. xlix. 10. 2. It does not appear that the family of Jesse w senior house of that tribe; from Judah it is certain that it was not, for Shelah was Pharez; whether from Nahshon and Salmon, is not certain. Ram, the father o shon, had an elder brother, 1 Chron. ii. 9, perhaps so had Boaz, Obed, Jesse; yet chose the house of my father." 3. David was the youngest son of Jesse, yet God him to make him king; so it seemed good unto him. God takes whom he like likes whom he makes like himself, as he did David, a man after his own heart. lomon was one of the youngest sons of David, and yet God chose him to sit upo throne, because he was the likeliest of them all to build the temple, the wisest and inclined. 5. He opens to them God's gracious purposes concerning Solomon, ver. 6, have chosen him to be my son." Thus he declares the decree, that the Lord had to Solomon, as a type of Christ, "Thou art my son," Ps. ii. 7, the son of my love he was called Jedidiah, because the Lord loved him, and Christ is his beloved Son. him God said, as a figure of him that was to come, 1. 10 [p]Take heed now; for the LORD hath chosen thee to build an house for the sanctuary: be strong, and do it.

11 ¶ Then David gave to Solomon his son [q]the pattern of [r]the porch, and of [s]the houses thereof, and of [t]the treasuries thereof, and of the [u]upper chambers thereof, and of the inner parlours thereof, and of [x]the place of the mercy-seat,

13 Also for [z]the courses of the priests and the Levites, and for all the work of the service of the house of the LORD, and for all [a]the vessels of service of the house of the LORD.

14 He gave of gold by weight for things of gold, for all instruments of all manner of service; silver also for all instruments of silver by weight, for all instruments of every kind of service:

15 Even the weight for [b]the candlesticks of gold, and for their lamps of gold, by weight for every candlestick, and for the lamps thereof: and for the candlesticks of silver by weight, both for the candlestick, and also for the lamps thereof, according to the use of every candlestick.

16 And by weight he gave gold for the [c]tables of shewbread, for every table; and likewise silver for the tables of silver:

17 Also [d]pure gold for the flesh-hooks, and [e]the bowls, and the cups: and for the golden basons[4] he gave gold by weight for every bason; and likewise silver by weight for every bason of silver:

18 And for [f]the altar of incense refined gold by weight; and gold for the pattern of [g]the chariot[5] of the cherubims, that spread out their wings, and covered the ark of the covenant of the LORD.

19 All this, said David, [h]the LORD made me understand in writing [i]by his hand upon me, even all the works of this pattern.

20 ¶ And David said to Solomon his son, [k]Be strong, and of good courage, and do it: [l]fear not, nor be dismayed: for the LORD God, even my God, will be with thee; [m]he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee, until thou hast finished all the work for the service of the house of the LORD.

21 And, behold, [n]the courses of the priests and the Levites, even they shall be with thee for all the service of the house of God: and there shall be with thee for [o]all manner of workmanship every [p]willing[6] skilful man, for any manner of service: [q]also the princes and all the people will be wholly at thy commandment.

3 Moreover, because [i]I have set my affection to the house of my God, [k]I have of mine own proper good, of gold and silver, which I have given to the house of my God, [l]over and above all that I have prepared for the holy house,

[2] Thus the choice of Solomon to the throne before his elder brothers proceeded entirely from God, not from David or from the people (see chap. xxix. 1; 1 Kings viii. 20; 2 Chr. i. 1). David clears up this matter to the people, for the purpose of proving to them that the fundamental law of nature, the right of elder birth, was not altered by him, but by God, who took the matter into his own disposal.—WILSON.

THE KING'S DYING ADDRESS TO HIS SON.—Ver. 9. The being and perfections of God are made known by his works and by his word: and we ought diligently to seek the knowledge of him from both these sources. That discovery of some of the divine perfections, which may be made by studying the works of creation and providence, may be naturally delightful to man; because it gratifies his love of knowledge, and excites his surprise, without affronting his pride, alarming his conscience, or offending his prejudices. But revelation gives us the whole character of God, as connected with his natural perfections and mysterious subsistence: and this not only in plain declarations, but in an historical and prophetical view of his providential government of the universe; in his holy law, "the ministration of condemnation," and in his blessed gospel, "the ministration of righteousness and of the Spirit." This knowledge of God, the natural man cannot receive. It implies the infinite justice and holiness of God, and the entire apostacy, rebellion, pollution, and misery of man; and shows every person on earth to be a criminal condemned to everlasting punishment, from which he cannot be delivered, except by the unmerited mercy of the Father, through the atonement of the Son, and by the sanctification of the Holy Spirit. All men therefore oppose, neglect, or pervert this knowledge of God, except as they are taught by him. Some notion of these things may be attained by an unhumbled sinner: but he sees them not as they really are, according to their nature and value; and his ideas no more agree to the true meaning of his own words, than the words of a man born blind do to his ideas, when he speaks about light and colours. This knowledge, therefore, will have no effect, unless a bad one on the state of his heart and the conduct of his life. But where God is truly known, he is also feared, believed, trusted, loved, worshipped, and obeyed, in proportion to that knowledge. Thus we learn the inestimable value of the Saviour's atonement, and of the sanctification of the Holy Ghost, and are influenced to walk conscientiously in all his ordinances and commandments. It brings a sinner to his proper place at the foot of the cross, and prostrate before the mercy-seat of a forgiving God, as a poor, helpless, worthless worm, an ignorant child, a poor suppliant, a condemned criminal, deserving nothing but wrath, yet expecting every thing needful or desirable from the infinitely free mercy and grace of God our Father, and the Lord Jesus Christ. Having been forgiven much, and receiving much, the pardoned sinner learns to love much: and experiencing the blessed effects of this knowledge of God on his own soul, he declares its excellency to others, that they too may seek and find so inestimable a treasure.—Thus David had known the Lord; and having for many years feared, trusted, loved, and worshipped him, he was about to remove to that better world, where knowledge, holiness, love, and felicity, are perfected: but before he went, he desired to give it as his parting counsel to his beloved Solomon, to cultivate the acquaintance of so kind, merciful, faithful, and powerful a friend; and to serve him with a perfect heart and a willing mind, or inward delight. But he also reminded him at the same time of the Lord's heart-searching knowledge, and of his justice and holiness, as well as of his mercy. A formal service, therefore, would not profit: if he sought God in a proper manner, he would be found of him; but if he finally renounced his service, he would "cast him off for ever," notwithstanding all his former kindness to him.—Scott.

PREPARATION FOR THE TEMPLE.—Ver. 11. We have, 1. A model of the building, because it was to be such a building as neither he nor his architects ever saw. Moses had a pattern of the tabernacle showed him in the mount, Heb. viii. 5, so had David of the temple, by the immediate hand of God upon him, ver. 19. It was given him in writing, probably by the ministry of an angel, or as clearly and exactly represented to his mind, as if it had been in writing. 2. Materials for the most costly of the utensils of the temple. That they might not be made any less than the patterns, he weighed out the exact quantity for each vessel, both of gold and silver, ver. 14. 3. Directions which way to look for help in this great undertaking. "Fear not opposition, fear not the charge, care, and trouble, fear not miscarrying in it, as in the case of Uzza; fear not the reproach of the foolish builder, that began to build, and was not able to finish. Be not dismayed, God will help thee, and thou must look up to him in the first place," ver. 20. "Good men will help thee, ver. 21. The priests and Levites will advise thee, and thou mayest consult with them. Thou hast good workmen, who are both willing and skilful;" and those are two very good properties in a workman, especially in those that work in the temple.—Henry.

CHAP. XXIX. DAVID'S LIBERALITY.—Ver. 3—9. David seems to have dedicated a certain proportion of all his spoils and gains to God, before he considered the residue as his own; and this proportion constituted the treasure before spoken of, chap. xxii. 14; but besides this, he gave, from his own treasury, about eighteen millions sterling of gold and silver. This he offered, not by constraint, or from ostentation, but because "he had set his affection to the house of his God," and thought he could never do enough towards promoting that good work. He was likewise desirous to see his subjects "abound in this grace also;" as they had been enriched by his victories, and never burdened with taxes; and he knew that it would be "fruit which would abound to their own account." Having set them the example, he only inquired who was willing to assist, and to consecrate his service unto the Lord, by contributing part of his wealth to that holy use; and immediately they offered about thirty millions of gold and silver, besides brass, iron, and

And [n]who then is willing to *consecrate his service this day unto the LORD?

6 ¶ Then [o]the chief of the fathers and princes of the tribes of Israel, and the captains of thousands and of hundreds, with the rulers over the king's work, offered willingly,

7 And gave for the service of the house of God of gold five thousand talents and ten thousand drams, and of silver ten thousand talents, and of brass eighteen thousand talents, and one hundred thousand talents of iron.

8 And they with whom precious stones were found gave them to the treasure of the house of the LORD, by the hand of [p]Jehiel the Gershonite.

9 Then the people rejoiced, for that [q]they offered willingly, because with [r]perfect heart they offered willingly to the LORD: and [s]David the king also rejoiced with great joy.

10 ¶ Wherefore [t]David blessed the LORD before all the congregation: and David said, [u]Blessed be thou,[2] [x]LORD God of Israel [y]our father, for ever and ever.

11 Thine, O LORD, [c]is the greatness, and the power, and the glory, and [d]the victory, and the [e]majesty: for [f]all that is in the heaven and in the earth is thine; [g]thine is the kingdom, O LORD, and thou art [h]exalted as head above all.

12 Both [i]riches and honour come of thee, and thou [k]reignest over all; and in thine hand is [l]power and might; and in thine hand it is to make great, and to [m]give strength unto all.

13 Now therefore, our God, [n]we thank thee, and praise thy glorious name.

14 But [o]who am I, and what is my people, [p]that we should [t]be able to offer so [q]willingly after this sort? for [r]all things come of thee, and of [‡]thine own have we given thee.

15 For [s]we are strangers before thee, and sojourners, as were all our fathers: [t]our days on the earth are as a shadow, and there is none [§]abiding.

16 O LORD our God, [u]all this store that we have prepared to build thee an house for thine holy name cometh of thine hand, and is all thine own.

17 I know also, my God, that thou [x]triest the heart, and [y]hast pleasure in uprightness. As for me, [z]in the uprightness of mine heart I have willingly offered all these things: and now have I seen with [a]joy thy people, which are [‖]present here, to offer willingly unto thee.

18 O [b]LORD God of Abraham, Isaac, and of Israel, our fathers, [c]keep this for ever [d]in the imagination of the thoughts of the heart of thy people, and *prepare their heart unto thee:

19 And [e]give unto Solomon my son a perfect heart, to keep thy commandments, thy testimonies, and thy statutes, and to do all these things, and to build the palace, for [f]the which I have made provision.

20 ¶ And David said to all the congregation, [g]Now bless the LORD your God. And all the congregation blessed the LORD God of their fathers, and [h]bowed down their heads, and [i]worshipped the LORD, and the king.

21 And they [k]sacrificed sacrifices unto the LORD, and offered burnt-offerings unto the LORD, on the morrow after that day, even a thousand bullocks, a thousand rams, and a thousand lambs, with their [l]drink-offerings, and sacrifices in abundance for all Israel:

22 And did [m]eat and drink before the LORD on that day with great gladness. And they made Solomon the son of David king [n]the second time,[3] [o]and anointed him unto the LORD to be the chief governor, and [p]Zadok[4] to be priest.

23 ¶ Then Solomon [q]sat on the throne of the LORD as king instead of David his father, and [r]prospered; and [s]all Israel obeyed him.

24 And [t]all the princes, and the mighty men, and [u]all the sons likewise of king David, [†]submitted themselves unto Solomon the king.

25 And the LORD [x]magnified Solomon exceedingly in the sight of all Israel, and [y]bestowed upon him such royal majesty as had not been on any king before him in Israel.

26 ¶ Thus David the son of Jesse reigned [z]over all Israel.

27 And the time that he reigned over Israel was [a]forty years; seven years reigned he in Hebron, and thirty and three years reigned he in Jerusalem.

28 And he died in [b]a good old age, [c]full of days, riches, and honour: and Solomon his son reigned in his stead.

29 Now [d]the acts of David the king, first and last, behold, they are written in the [‡]book of [e]Samuel[5] the seer, and in the book of [f]Nathan the prophet, and in the book of [g]Gad the seer, 30 With all his reign and [h]his might, and [i]the times that went over him, and over Israel, and over all the kingdoms of the countries.

precious stones; and instead of grudging the expense, the king and people all rejoiced together; for they were cordial in it, and offered willingly themselves, and rejoiced to see all the others offering with the same liberality.—The prosperity of Israel must have been immense under the reign of David; and it seems that there was also much true piety among the people, especially towards the close of his reign. We can scarcely form a conception of the magnificence of the temple, and adjacent edifices, about which such immense quantities of gold and silver were employed. But "the unsearchable riches of Christ" excel the splendour of the temple, infinitely more than that surpassed the meanest cottage on earth.—The refined silver seems to have been used in covering the inner walls of the chambers and other out-buildings; for those of the temple itself were plated with gold.

HIS PRAYER.—Ver. 10—19. Instead of boasting of these extraordinary oblations, David gave solemn thanks to the Lord, with vast enlargement of heart and copiousness of expression. "LORD God of Israel, our Father," may mean, either the "God of our father Israel, or Jacob; (ver. 18;) or, JEHOVAH our Father, the God of Israel." In this last view, the words may be considered as the first instance in Scripture of God being addressed in prayer as "Our Father." This is properly the language of the Spirit of adoption. As king of Israel, David was become great, powerful, and honourable; he had obtained victories, taken spoils, and been crowned with royal majesty: but what was all this, before Him who "inhabiteth eternity," and filleth immensity, and is underived, and independent of all; who possesses immutably every glorious and adorable perfection, and exercises almighty power, and absolute universal authority; and who, victorious over all his enemies, reigns in majesty which exceeds all description, or imagination! for "his is the kingdom, the power, and the glory, for ever, Amen." From this God alone David had received his wealth, honour, and power: this he acknowledged with grateful praise; but, contemplating the infinite glories of his great benefactor, and then turning his thoughts to himself and his people, the comparison affected him with a deep conviction of their meanness, weakness, and unworthiness; and he could not but wonder that the glorious God would condescend to notice such indigent and sinful creatures. "LORD," says he, "what are we, that we should offer so willingly after this sort!" Their existence was derived from God: he had graciously given them these treasures, and had disposed their hearts willingly to make this use of them; so that, in every way the whole praise belonged to him. As for them, they were strangers and sojourners; dying, because sinful, creatures. Indeed, all that they gave to the Lord to build his temple, was his own before; if they had attempted to keep it, death would soon have removed them; so that the only use which they could make of it to their own real advantage, was thus to consecrate it to the service of Him who gave it, and whose gracious acceptance of their oblation would add still more to their obligations. At the same time, David was conscious of his own uprightness and willingness in this oblation, as in the presence of that heart-searching God, who "hath pleasure in uprightness;" and with great joy he beheld his people showing every token of the same disposition. He well knew that this, as far as genuine, was the effect of the grace of God: and he most fervently prayed, that it might be evermore kept there by the same grace: that the hearts of them all, but especially the heart of Solomon, might be prepared for the Lord; and that he might accomplish the arduous important service before him.—Scott.

CONCURRENCE OF THE ASSEMBLY.—Ver. 20. They joined with David in the adoration of God. When he had done his prayer, he called to them to testify their concurrence: "Now bless the Lord your God," ver. 20, which accordingly they did, by "bowing down their heads," a gesture of adoration. Whoever is the mouth of the congregation, those only have the benefit who join with him, not by "bowing down the head," so much as by "lifting up the soul."

DAVID'S DECEASE.—1. The sacred historian gives a summary account of the years of his reign, ver. 26, 27. He reigned forty years, as Moses did, Othniel, Deborah, Gideon, Eli, Samuel, and Saul, who were before him, and Solomon after him. 2. He gives a short account of his death, ver. 28, that he died "full of days, riches, and honour;" that is, (1.) Loaded with them. He was very old, and very rich, and very much honoured both of God and man. He had been a man of war from his youth, and, as such, had his sword continually in his hand; yet he was not cut off in the midst of his days, but was preserved through all the dangers of a military life, lived to a good old age, and died in pence, died in his bed, and yet in the bed of honour. (2.) Satiated with them. He was "full of days, riches, and honour;" that is, he had enough of this world, and of the riches and honours of it, and knew when he had enough, for he was very willing to die and leave it, having said, Ps. xlix. 15, "God shall receive me;" and, Ps. xxiii. 4, "Thou art with me." A good man will soon be full of days, riches, and honour; but will never be satisfied with them; no satisfaction but in God's loving-kindness. 3. For a fuller account of David's life and reign, he refers his readers to the histories or records of those times, which were written by Samuel while he lived, and continued, after his death, by Nathan and Gad, ver. 29. There was related what was observable in his government at home, and his wars abroad, "the times," that is, the events of the "times that went over him," ver. 29, 30. These registers were then in being, but are now lost. Note, Good use may be made of those histories of the church, which are authentic, though not sacred, or of divine inspiration.—Henry.

The solemn offering of Solomon at Gibeon, 1. His choice of wisdom is blessed by God, 7. His strength and wealth, 13.

AND Solomon the son of David [a]was strengthened in his kingdom, and the [b]LORD his God was with him, and [c]magnified him exceedingly.

2 Then Solomon spake unto all Israel, [d]to the captains of thousands and of hundreds, and to the judges, and to every governor in all Israel, [e]the chief of the fathers.

3 So Solomon, and all the congregation with him, went to the high place that was at [f]Gibeon: for there was [g]the tabernacle of the congregation of God, which Moses [h]the servant of the LORD had made in the wilderness.

4 But [i]the ark of God had David brought up from Kirjath-jearim to the place which David had prepared for it: [k]for he had pitched a tent for it at Jerusalem.

5 Moreover, [l]the brazen altar, that [m]Bezaleel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, had made, *he put before the tabernacle of the LORD: and Solomon and the congregation sought unto it.[1]

6 And Solomon went up thither to the brazen altar before the LORD, which was at the tabernacle of the congregation, and offered [n]a thousand burnt-offerings upon it.

7 ¶ [o]In that night did God appear unto Solomon, and said unto him, [p]Ask what I shall give thee.

8 And Solomon said unto God, [q]Thou hast shewed great mercy unto David my father, and hast made me [r]to reign in his stead.

9 Now, O LORD God, [s]let thy promise unto David my father be established: for thou hast made me king over a people †like the dust of the earth in multitude.

10 [t]Give me now wisdom and knowledge, that I may [u]go out and come in before this people: [x]for who can judge this thy people, that is so great.

CHAP. I. SOLOMON'S EARLY REIGN.—Here is, I. Solomon's great prosperity, ver. 1. Though he had a contested title, yet God being with him, he was "strengthened in his kingdom;" his heart and hands were strengthened, and his interest in the people. God's presence will be our strength. II. His great piety and devotion. His father was a prophet, a psalmist, and he kept mostly at the ark; but Solomon having read much in his Bible concerning the tabernacle which Moses built, and the altars there, paid more respect to them than, it should seem, David had done. Both did well, and let neither be censured. Let not the man whose zeal is employed chiefly in one religious direction, despise him whose zeal is employed chiefly in another. Let them not judge or despise one another. 1. All his great men must thus far be good men, that they must join with him in worshipping God. He spake to the captains and judges, the governors and chief of the fathers, to go with him to Gibeon, ver. 2, 3. Authority and interest are well bestowed on those that will thus use them for the glory of God, and the promoting of religion. It is our duty to engage with whom we have influence in the solemnities of religion, and it is very desirable to have many join with us in those solemnities; the more the better, it is the liker to heaven. Solomon began his reign with this public pious visit to God's altar, and it was a very good omen. Magistrates are then likely to do well for themselves and their people, when they thus take God along with them at their setting out. 2. He offered abundance of sacrifices to God there, ver. 6, "a thousand burnt-offerings," and perhaps a greater number of peace-offerings, on which he and his company "feasted before the Lord." Where God sows plentifully, he expects to reap accordingly. His father David had left him flocks and herds in abundance, 1 Chron. xxvii. 29, 31, and thus he gave God his dues out of them. The ark was at Jerusalem, ver. 4, but the altar was at Gibeon, ver. 5, and thither he brought his sacrifices; for "it is the altar that sanctifieth every gift." 3. He prayed a good prayer to God: this, with the answer to it, we had before, 1 Kings iii. 5, &c. (1.) God bade him ask what he would: not only that he might put him in the right way of obtaining the favours that were intended him, ("Ask and ye shall receive, that your joy may be full,") but that he might try him, how he stood affected, and might discover what was in his heart. Men's characters appear in their choices and desires. What wouldst thou have? tries a man as much as, What wouldst thou do? Thus God tried whether Solomon was one of the "children of this world," that say, "Lord, lift up the light of thy countenance upon us." As we choose we shall have, and that is likely to be our portion to which we give the preference, whether the wealth and pleasure of this world, or spiritual riches and delights. (2.) Like a genuine son of David, he chooses spiritual blessings rather than temporal. His petition here is, "Give me wisdom and knowledge." He owns those to be spiritual gifts, and God the Giver of them, Prov. ii. 6. God gave the faculty of understanding, and to him we must apply ourselves for the furniture of it. Two things are here pleaded, which we had not in Kings, [1.] "Thou hast made me reign in my father's stead," ver. 8. "Lord, thou hast put me into this place; and therefore I can in faith ask of thee grace to enable me to do the duty of it." What service we have reason to believe God calls us to, we have reason to hope he will qualify us for. But that is not all; "Lord, thou hast put me into this place in the stead of David, the great and good man that filled it up so well; therefore give me wisdom, that Israel may not suffer damage by the change. Must I reign in my father's stead? Lord, give me my father's spirit." Note, The eminency of those that went before us, and the obligation that lies upon us to keep up and carry on the good work they were engaged in, should provoke us to a gracious emulation, and quicken our prayers to God for wisdom and grace, that we may do the work of God in our day, as faithfully and well as they did in theirs. [2.] "Let thy promise to David my father be established," ver. 9. He means the promise concerning his successor. "In performance of that promise, 'Lord, give wisdom.'" We do not find that wisdom was any of the things promised, but it was necessary in order to the accomplishment of what was promised, 2 Sam. vii. 13—15. The promise was, "He shall build a house for my name, I will establish his throne, he shall be my son," and "my mercy shall not depart from him." "Now, Lord, unless you give me wisdom, thy house will not be built, nor my throne established; I shall behave in a manner unbecoming my relation to thee as a father, shall forfeit thy mercy, and fool it away; therefore, 'Lord, give me wisdom.'" Note, First, God's promises are our best pleas in prayer; "Remember thy word unto thy servant." Secondly, Children may take the comfort of the promises of that covenant which their parents in their baptism laid claim to, and took hold of for them. Thirdly, The best way to obtain the benefit of the promises and privileges of the covenant, is to be earnest in prayer with God for wisdom and grace to do the duties of it. 4. He received a gracious answer to this prayer, ver. 11, 12.—Henry.

CHAP. II. SOLOMON'S TREATY WITH HURAM.—Ver. 3—10. We have here a more particular account of Solomon's message to Huram, (or Hiram,) king of Tyre, than was before given; and it appears that he thought it no impropriety to speak freely on religious subjects, in treating with a heathen prince about secular business. On the contrary, he laboured to give him very high and honourable thoughts of Israel's God, as great above all gods, and as one whom "the heaven of heavens could not contain;" he particularly explained to him his intentions in building a temple to the name of the Lord, score thousand to hew in the mountain, and three thousand and six hundred to oversee them.

3 ¶ And Solomon sent to [c]Huram the king of Tyre, saying, [f]As thou didst deal with David my father, and didst send him cedars to build him an house to dwell therein, even so deal with me.

4 Behold, [g]I build an house to the name of the LORD my God, [h]to dedicate it to him, and [i]to burn before him *sweet incense, and for [k]the continual shew-bread, and for [l]the burnt-offerings morning and evening, on the sabbaths, and on the new moons, and on [m]the solemn feasts of the LORD our God. This is an ordinance for ever to Israel.

5 And the house which I build is [n]great: for [o]great is our God above all gods.

6 But [p]who is [†]able to build him an house, seeing the heaven and heaven of heavens cannot contain him? [q]who am I then, that I should build him an house, [r]save only[1] to burn sacrifice before him?

7 Send me now therefore a man [s]cunning to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass, and in iron, and in purple, and crimson, and blue, and that can skill [‡]to grave with the cunning men that are with me in Judah and in Jerusalem, [t]whom David my father did provide.

8 [u]Send me also cedar trees, fir trees, [x]and [§]algum trees, out of Lebanon: for I know that thy servants can skill to cut timber in Lebanon: and, behold, my servants shall be with thy servants,

9 Even to prepare me timber in abundance: for the house which I am about to build shall be [‖]wonderful great.

10 And, behold, [y]I will give to thy servants,[2] the hewers that cut timber, twenty thousand measures of beaten wheat, and twenty thousand measures of barley, and twenty thousand [z]baths of wine, and twenty thousand baths of oil.

11 ¶ Then Huram the king of Tyre answered in writing, which he sent to Solomon, [a]Because the LORD hath loved his people, he hath made thee king over them.

12 [b]Huram said moreover, Blessed be the LORD God of Israel, [c]that made heaven and earth, who hath given to David the king a wise son, *endued with prudence and understanding, that might build [d]an house for the LORD, and an house for his kingdom.

13 And now I have sent a cunning man, endued with understanding, [e]of Huram my father's,

14 [f]The son of a woman of the daughters of Dan, and his father was a man of Tyre, [g]skilful to work in gold, and in silver, in brass, in iron, in stone, and in timber, in purple, in blue, and in fine linen, and in crimson; also to grave any manner of graving, and to find out every device which shall be put to him, with thy cunning men, and with the cunning men of my lord David thy father.

15 Now therefore the wheat, and the barley, the oil, and the wine, [h]which my lord hath spoken of, let him send unto his servants:

16 And [i]we will cut wood out of Lebanon, as [†]much as thou shalt need: and we will bring it to thee in floats by sea to [‡]Joppa;[3] and thou shalt carry it up to Jerusalem.

17 ¶ And Solomon [k]numbered all [§]the strangers that were in the land of Israel, [l]after the numbering wherewith David his father had numbered them; and they were found an hundred and fifty thousand and three thousand and six hundred.

18 And he set [m]threescore and ten thousand of them to be bearers of burdens, and fourscore thousand to be hewers in the mountain, and three thousand and six hundred overseers to set the people a work.

THEN [a]Solomon began to build the house of the LORD at Jerusalem [b]in mount Moriah,[1] *where the LORD appeared unto David his father, in the place that David had prepared in the thrashing-floor of [c]Ornan the Jebusite.

2 And he began to build [d]in the second day of the second month, in the fourth year of his reign.

4 And the porch that was in the front of the house, the length of it was according to the breadth of the house, twenty cubits, and the height was an hundred and twenty: and he overlaid it within with pure gold.

viz., that it was to be the stated place of those instituted ordinances, which were required by the law of God, given to Israel; that he might not misapprehend him, as if he supposed that JEHOVAH could be circumscribed in a temple, like the idols of the heathen: and he represented to him his own inability and unworthiness for such a service, except as mercifully assisted and accepted in it, by that gracious God who had chosen him for the work. Ver. 11, 12. The just sentiments contained in these verses, with the pious and benevolent spirit which they breathe, leave no doubt but that Huram was himself a spiritual worshipper of the true God.—Scott.

BUILDERS OF THE TEMPLE.—Ver. 17. Solomon would not employ the freeborn Israelites in the drudgery-work of the temple itself, not so much as to be overseers of it; in this he employed the strangers who were proselyted to the Jewish religion, who had not lands of inheritance in Canaan, as the Israelites had, and therefore applied themselves to trades, and got their living by their ingenuity and industry; there was at this time a vast number of them in the land, ver. 17, who, if they were of any of the devoted nations, perhaps fell within the case, and therefore fell under the law of the Gibeonites, to be hewers of wood for the congregation; if not, yet being in many cases provided for by the law of Moses, and put upon an equal footing with the native Israelites, they were bound in gratitude to do what they could for the service of the temple; yet no doubt they were well paid in money, or money's worth; the law was, "Thou shalt not oppress a stranger." The distribution of them we have here, ver. 2, and again, ver. 18; in all, 150,000. Canaan was a fruitful land, that found meat for so many mouths more than the numerous natives; and the temple a vast building, that found work for so many hands. Mr. Fuller suggests that the expedient peculiar to this structure, a framing all before-hand, must needs increase the work; I think it rather left so much the more room for this vast multitude of hands to be employed in it; for in the forest of Lebanon they might all be at work together, without crowding one another, which they could not have been upon mount Zion. And if there had not been such vast numbers employed, so large and curious a fabric, which was begun and ended in seven years, might, for aught I know, have been as long in building as St. Paul's.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—We ought always to attend to the work of God, in preference to our own indulgence or accommodation: and our hearts should be resolved for every service, that we may endure hardship, struggle with difficulties, and not to weariness or discouragement.—The greatest monarchs on earth are as nothing in comparison with the God of heaven; and they should deem it their highest honour to be his servants, and to speak of his glorious majesty.—The genuine love of God abounding in the heart, would intermix the savour of piety in the ordinary concerns and converse of life. Indeed, we should be neither afraid nor ashamed to embrace every opportunity of speaking honourably of Him, and of impressing the minds of men with a deep sense of his majesty and excellency, and of the importance of his favour, worship, and service.—It is a great part of our "wisdom towards them that are without," so to explain our meaning in every doctrine and ordinance, and so to guard our discourses about them, as may best prevent misapprehension or prejudice: and the neglect of this rule is not boldness or faithfulness, as some well-meaning zealots suppose, but indiscretion and folly.—In pleading the cause of God and religion, we should always speak humbly of ourselves; but unless we be humbled, our temper and conduct will betray the hypocrisy of our self-abasing language. May the Lord himself therefore "clothe us with humility!"—Possessions, endowments, or royal authority, are given men for the sake of others; and a wise and pious king is an evidence of the Lord's special love to the people. Who then can express the greatness of his love to his believing people, in giving them his only begotten Son to be their prince and Saviour! It is also a great mercy to have children endued with wisdom and understanding: and we should all desire to be blessings to those among whom we live, that they may bless God for us. We ought also to praise him for those blessings which are exclusively bestowed on others: and it is pleasant to observe how the friendship of pious men becomes the means of bringing those who were far off to know, love, and worship our God and Saviour.—Scott.

CHAP. III. SITE OF THE TEMPLE.—Here is, 1. Ver. 1. The place where the temple was built. Solomon was neither at liberty to choose, nor at a loss to fix, the place. It was before determined, 1 Chron. xxii. 1, which was an ease to his mind. (1.) It must be at Jerusalem; for that was the place where God had chosen to put his name there. The royal city must be the holy city; there must be "the testimony of Israel; for there are set the thrones of judgment," Ps. cxxii. 4, 5. (2.) It must be on mount Moriah; which, some think, was that very place in the land of Moriah where Abraham offered Isaac, Gen. xxii. 2. So the Targum says expressly, adding, "But he was delivered by the word of the Lord, and a ram provided in his place." That was typical of Christ's sacrifice of himself; therefore fitly was the temple, which was likewise a type of him, built there. (3.) It must be "where the Lord appeared to David," and "answered him, by fire," 1 Chron. xxi. 18, 26. There atonement was made once; and therefore, in remembrance of that, there atonement must still be made. There where God has met with me, it is to be hoped that he will still. (4.) It must be in the place which David had prepared, not only which he had purchased with his money, but which he had the length whereof was according to the breadth of the house, twenty cubits, and the breadth thereof twenty cubits: and he overlaid it with fine gold, amounting to six hundred talents.

9 And the weight of the nails[4] was fifty shekels of gold. And he overlaid the upper chambers with gold.

10 And in the most holy house he made [m]two cherubims of [5]image-work, and overlaid them with gold.

11 And the wings of the cherubims were twenty cubits long: one wing of the one cherub was five cubits, reaching to the wall of the house: and the other wing was likewise five cubits, reaching to the wing of the other cherub.

12 And one wing of the other cherub was five cubits, reaching to the wall of the house: and the other wing was five cubits also, joining to the wing of the other cherub.

13 The wings of these cherubims spread themselves forth twenty cubits: and they stood on their feet, and their faces were [t]inward.

14 ¶ And he made [n]the vail of blue, and purple, and crimson, and fine linen, and [*]wrought cherubims thereon.

15 ¶ Also he made before the house [o]two pillars[6] of thirty and five cubits [†]high, [p]and the chapiter that was on the top of each of them was five cubits.

16 And he made [q]chains, as in the oracle, and put them on the heads of the pillars; and made [r]an hundred pomegranates, and put them on the chains.

17 And he reared up the pillars before the temple, one on the right hand, and the other on the left; and called the name of that on the right hand [‡]Jachin, and the name of that on the left [§]Boaz.

CHAP. IV.

The altar of brass, 1. The molten sea, 2. The ten lavers, candlesticks, and tables, 6. The instruments of gold, 19.

MOREOVER he made [a]an altar of brass, twenty cubits the length thereof, and twenty cubits the breadth thereof, and ten cubits[1] the height thereof.

2 ¶ Also he made [b]a molten sea of ten cubits from [*]brim to brim, round in compass, and five cubits the height thereof; and a line of thirty cubits did compass it round about.

3 And under it was [c]the similitude of oxen, which did compass it round about: ten in a cubit, compassing the sea round about. Two rows of oxen were cast, when it was cast.

4 It [d]stood upon twelve oxen, [e]three looking toward the north, and three looking toward the west, and three looking toward the south, and three looking toward the east: and the sea was set above upon them, and all their hinder parts were inward.

5 And the thickness of it was an handbreadth, and the brim of it like the work of the brim of a cup, [†]with flowers of lilies; and it received and held [f]three thousand baths.[2]

6 ¶ He made also [g]ten lavers, and put five on the right hand, and five on the left, to wash in them: [‡]such things as they offered for the burnt-offering they washed in them; [h]but the sea was for the priests to wash in.

7 And he made [i]ten candlesticks of gold [k]according to their form, and set them in the temple, five on the right hand, and five on the left.

8 He made also [l]ten tables, and placed them in the temple, five on the right side, and five on the left. And he made an hundred [§]basons of gold.

9 ¶ Furthermore he made [m]the court of the priests, and the great court,[3] and doors for the court, and overlaid the doors of them with brass.

10 And [n]he set the sea on the right side of the east end, over against the south.

11 ¶ And Huram made [o]the pots, and the shovels, and the [§]basons. And Huram [*]finished the work that he was to make for king Solomon for the house of God;

12 To wit, [p]the two pillars, and [q]the pommels, and the chapiters which were on the top of the two pillars, and the two wreaths to cover the two pommels of the chapiters which were on the pillars;

13 And [r]four hundred pomegranates on the two wreaths; two rows of pomegranates on each wreath, to cover the two pommels of the chapiters which were upon the [†]pillars.

14 He made also [s]bases, and [‡]lavers made he upon the bases;

15 [t]One sea, and twelve oxen under it.

16 The [u]pots also, and the shovels, and the [x]flesh-hooks, and all their instruments, did [y]Huram [z]his father[4] make to king Solomon for the house of the LORD of [§]bright brass.

17 In the plain of Jordan did the king cast them, in the [§]clay ground between Succoth and [a]Zeredathah.

18 Thus Solomon made all these vessels in great abundance: for [b]the weight of the brass could not be found out.

19 ¶ And Solomon made [c]all the vessels that were for the house of God, [d]the golden altar also, and [e]the tables whereon the shewbread was set;

20 Moreover [f]the candlesticks with their lamps, that they should [g]burn after the manner before [h]the oracle, of pure gold; pitched upon by divine direction. It was Solomon's wisdom not to inquire out a more convenient place, but to acquiesce in the appointment of God, whatever might be objected against it. (5.) It must be in the threshing-floor of Ornan, which, if (as a Jebusite) it gives encouragement to the Gentiles, yet it obliges us to look upon temple-work as that which requires the labour of the mind, no less than thrashing-work does that of the body. 2. The time when it was begun; not till the fourth year of Solomon's reign, ver. 2. Not that the three first years were trifled away, or spent in deliberating whether they should build the temple or no; but they were employed in the necessary preparations for it, wherein three years would be soon gone, considering how many hands were to be got together, and set to work. Some conjecture that this was a sabbatical year, or year of release and rest to the land, when the people, being discharged from their husbandry, might more easily lend a hand to the beginning of this work; and then the year it was finished would fall out to be another sabbatical year, when they would likewise have leisure to attend the solemnity of the dedication of it. 3. The dimensions of it; in which Solomon was instructed, ver. 3, as he was in other things, by his father. "This was the foundation," (so it may be read,) "which Solomon laid for the building of the house." This was the rule he went by, so many cubits the length and breadth, after the first measure, that is, according to the measure first fixed, which there was no reason to make any alteration of, when the work came to be done; for the dimensions were given by divine wisdom: and "what God doeth, it shall be for ever; nothing can be put to it, or taken from it," Eccl. iii. 14. His first measure will be the last.

ITS ORNAMENTS.—As for the ornaments of the temple; the timber-work was very fine, and yet, within, it was "overlaid with pure gold," ver. 4, with "fine gold," ver. 5, and that embossed with "palm trees and chains." It was of gold of "Parvaim," ver. 6, the best gold. The "beams" and "posts," the "walls" and "doors," were "overlaid with gold," ver. 7. The most holy place, which was ten yards square, was all "overlaid with fine gold," ver. 8, even the "upper chambers," or rather the "upper floor or roof;" top, bottom, and sides, were all overlaid with gold. Every nail, or screw, or pin, with which the golden plates were fastened to the walls that were overlaid with them, weighed fifty shekels, or was worth so much; workmanship and all. A great many precious stones were dedicated to God, 1 Chron. xxix. 2, 8, and these were set here and there, where they would show to the best advantage. The finest houses now pretend to no better garnishing than good paint on the roof and walls; but the ornaments of the temple were more substantially rich. It was set with "precious stones," because it was a type of the new Jerusalem, which has therefore no temple in it, because it is all temple, the walls, gates, and foundations of which are said to be of "precious stones and pearls," Rev. xxi. 18, 19, 21.—Henry.

CHAP. IV. THE ALTAR.—There was the "brazen altar," ver. 1. The making of this was not mentioned in the Kings. On this all the sacrifices were offered, and it sanctified the gift. This altar was much larger than that which Moses made in the tabernacle: that was five cubits square, this was twenty cubits square. Now Israel was become both more numerous and more rich, and, it was to be hoped, more devout, (for every age should aim to be wiser and better than that which went before it,) it was expected that there would be a greater abundance of offerings brought to God's altar than had been; it is therefore made such a capacious scaffold, that it might hold them all, and none might excuse themselves from bringing those testimonies of their devotion, by alleging that there was not room to receive them. God had greatly enlarged their borders, it was therefore fit that they should enlarge his altars. Our returns should bear some proportion to our receivings. It was ten cubits high, so that the people who worshipped in the courts might see the sacrifices burnt, and their eye might affect their heart with sorrow for sin: "It is of the Lord's mercies that I am not thus consumed, and that this is accepted as an expiation of my guilt." They might thus be led to consider the great Sacrifice which should be offered, in the fulness of time, to take away sin, and abolish death, which the blood of bulls and goats could not possibly do. And with the smoke of the sacrifices their heart might ascend to heaven, in holy desires toward God and his favour. In all our devotions we must keep the eye of faith fixed upon Christ, the great Propitiation. How they went up to this altar, and carried the sacrifices up to it, we are not told; some think, by a plain ascent, like a hill; if by steps, doubtless they were so contrived as that the end of the law (mentioned Exod. xx. 26) might be answered.

THE MOLTEN SEA.—There was the molten sea, a very large brass pan, in which they put water for the priests to wash in, ver. 2, 5. It was put just at the entrance into the court of the priests, like the font at the church door. If it were filled to the brim, it would hold 3000 baths, as here, ver. 5; but, in common, there were only 2000 baths in it, 1 Kings vii. 26. The Holy Ghost by this signified, 1. Our great gospel privilege, that "the blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin," 1 John i. 7. To us there is a "fountain opened" for all believers, (who are spiritual priests, Rev. i. 5, 6,) nay, for "all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, to wash in," from sin, which is uncleanness. There is a fulness of merit in Jesus Christ for all those that by faith apply themselves to him for the purifying of their consciences, that they may serve the "living God," Heb. ix. 14.

The dedicated treasures, 1. The bringing up of the ark of the covenant, 2. God being praised, giveth a sign of his favour, 11.

THUS all the work that Solomon made for the house of the LORD was finished: and Solomon [a]brought in all the things that David his father had dedicated; and the silver, and the gold, and all the instruments, put he among the treasures of the house of God.

2 ¶ [b]Then Solomon assembled the elders of Israel, and all the heads of the tribes, [c]the chief of the fathers of the children of Israel, unto Jerusalem, to bring up the ark of the covenant of the LORD [d]out of [e]the city of David, which is Zion.

3 Wherefore all the men of Israel assembled themselves unto the king [f]in the feast which was in the seventh month.

4 And all the elders of Israel came; and [g]the Levites took up the ark.

5 And they brought up the ark, and [h]the tabernacle of the congregation,[1] and all the holy vessels that were in the tabernacle, these did the priests and the Levites bring up.

6 Also [i]king Solomon, and all the congregation of Israel that were assembled unto him before the ark, sacrificed sheep and oxen, which could not be told nor numbered for multitude.

7 And the priests brought in the ark of the covenant of the LORD unto his place, [k]to the oracle of the house, into the most holy place, even under the wings of the cherubims:

8 For the cherubims spread forth their wings over the place of the ark, and the cherubims covered the ark and [l]the staves thereof above.

9 And they drew out the staves of the ark, that [m]the ends of the staves were seen from the ark before the oracle; but they were not seen without. And [*]there it is unto this day.[2]

10 There was nothing in the ark [n]save the two tables which Moses put therein at Horeb, [†]when [o]the LORD made a covenant with the children of Israel, when they came out of Egypt.

11 ¶ And it came to pass, when the priests were come out of the holy place: (for all the priests that were [‡]present were [p]sanctified,[3] and did not then [q]wait by course:

12 Also [r]the Levites which were the singers, all of them of [s]Asaph, of Heman, of Jeduthun, with their sons and their brethren, being [t]arrayed in white linen, having [u]cymbals and psalteries and harps, stood at the east end of the altar, and with them [x]an hundred and twenty priests sounding with trumpets:)

13 It came even to pass, as the trumpeters and singers were [y]as one, to make one sound to be heard in praising and thanking the LORD; and when they lifted up their voice with [z]the trumpets and cymbals and instruments of musick, and praised the LORD, saying, For [a]he is good; for his mercy endureth for ever: that [b]then the house was filled with a cloud, even the house of the LORD;

14 So that [c]the priests could not stand to minister by reason of the cloud: for [d]the glory of the LORD had filled the house of God.

Solomon having blessed the people, blesseth God, 1; his prayer at the consecration of the temple, 12.

THEN said Solomon, [a]The LORD hath said that he would dwell in the thick darkness.

2 But [b]I have built an house of habitation for thee, and a place for thy dwelling for ever.

3 And the king [c]turned his face, and [d]blessed the whole congregation of Israel: and [e]all the congregation of Israel stood.

4 And he said, [f]Blessed be the LORD God of Israel, [g]who hath with his hands fulfilled that which he spake with his mouth to my father David, saying,

5 [h]Since the day that I brought forth my people out of the land of Egypt I chose no city among all the tribes of Israel to build an house in, that [i]my name might be there; [k]neither chose I any man to be a ruler over my people Israel:[1]

6 But I have [l]chosen Jerusalem, that my name might be there; and have [m]chosen David to be over my people Israel.

7 Now [n]it was in the heart of David my father to build an house for the name of the LORD God of Israel.

8 But the LORD said to David my father, Forasmuch as it was in thine heart to build an house for my name, [o]thou didst well in that it was in thine heart:

2. Our great gospel duty, which is, to cleanse ourselves by true repentance from all the pollutions of the flesh, and the corruption that is in the world. Our hearts must be sanctified, or we cannot sanctify the name of God. They that draw nigh to God must "cleanse their hands and purify their hearts," Jam. iv. 8. "If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me;" and he that "is washed," still needs to "wash his feet," to renew his repentance, whenever he "goes in to minister," John xiii. 10.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The furniture of the temple, compared with that of the tabernacle, plainly instructed God's ancient people, that his church would be gradually enlarged, and his worshippers immensely multiplied: and, blessed be God, in the person, sacrifice, and offices of Christ, there is an abundant sufficiency for any multitudes, who can ever come to the Father through him.—May the preaching of the gospel hold him forth, as crucified for sinners, to all the nations of the earth; and may his Spirit prepare the hearts of all the inhabitants to welcome his salvation; for all things else are now ready.—Scott.

CHAP. V. GOD IN HIS HOUSE.—Observe, 1. How God took possession of the temple; he "filled it with a cloud," ver. 13. (1.) Thus he signified his acceptance of this temple to be the same to him that the tabernacle of Moses was, and assured them that he would be the same in it; for it was by a cloud that he made his public entry into that, Exod. xl. 34. (2.) Thus he considered the weakness and infirmity of those to whom he manifested himself, who could not bear the dazzling lustre of the divine light, it would have overpowered them; he therefore "spreads a cloud upon it," Job xxvi. 9. Christ revealed things unto his disciples as they were able to bear them, and in parables which wrapped up divine things as in a cloud. (3.) Thus he would affect all that worshipped in his courts with holy reverence and fear. Christ's disciples were afraid when they entered into a cloud, Luke ix. 34. (4.) Thus he would intimate the darkness of that dispensation, by reason of which they could not steadfastly look to the end of those things which were now abolished, 2 Cor. iii. 13. 2. When he took possession of it. (1.) "When the priests were come out of the holy place," ver. 11. This is the way of giving possession. All must come out that the rightful owner may come in. Would we have God dwell in our hearts? We must leave room for him; let every thing else give way. We are here told that upon this occasion the whole family of the priests attended, and not any one particular course; "all the priests that were present were sanctified," ver. 11, because there was work enough for them all, when such a multitude of sacrifices were to be offered, and because it was fit that they should all be eye-witnesses of this solemnity, and receive the impressions of it. (2.) When the singers and musicians praised God, then the house was filled with a cloud. This is very observable; it was not when they "offered sacrifices," but when they "sang the praises of God," that God gave them this token of favour; for the sacrifice of praise "pleaseth the Lord" better than that of "an ox or bullock," Ps. lxix. 31. All the singers and musicians were employed, those of each of the three families; and, to complete the concert, 120 priests, with their trumpets, joined with them, all standing at the east end of the altar, on that side of the court which lay outmost toward the people, ver. 12. And when this part of the service began, the glory of God appeared. Observe, First, It was when they were unanimous, when they were as one, to make one sound. The Holy Ghost descended on the apostles when they met with one accord, Acts ii. 1. Where unity is, the Lord commands the blessing. Secondly, It was when they were lively and hearty, and "lifted up their voice to praise the Lord." Then we serve God acceptably, when we are fervent in spirit, serving him. Thirdly, It was when they were in their praises, celebrating the everlasting mercy and goodness of God. As there is no one saying oftener repeated in scripture than this, "His mercy endureth for ever," (twenty-six times in one psalm, Ps. cxxxvi., and often elsewhere,) so there is none more signally owned from heaven; for it was not the expression of some rapturous flights that the priests were singing when the glory of God appeared, but this plain song, "He is good, and his mercy endureth for ever." This should endear those words to us. God's goodness is his glory, and he is pleased when we give him the glory of it.—Henry.

CHAP. VI. SOLOMON'S PIETY.—Ver. 1—11. It is of great consequence, in all our religious actions, that we design well, and that our eye be single. If Solomon had built this temple in the pride of his heart, as Ahasuerus made his feast, only to "show the riches of his kingdom, and the honour of his majesty," it would not have turned at all to his account. But he here declares upon what inducements he undertook it, and they are such as not only justify, but magnify the undertaking. 1. He did it for the glory and honour of God; this was his highest and ultimate end in it. It was "for the name of the Lord God of Israel," ver. 10, to be "a house of habitation for him," ver. 2. He has indeed, as to us, "made darkness his pavilion," ver. 1; but let this house be the residence of that darkness; for it is in the upper world that he dwells in light, such as no eye can approach. 2. He did it in compliance with the choice God had been pleased to make of Jerusalem, to be the city in which he would record his name, ver. 6, "I have chosen Jerusalem." A great many stately buildings there were in Jerusalem for the king, his princes, and the royal family. If God choose that place, it is fit that there be a building for him, which may excel all the rest. Were men thus honoured there, let forth out of thy loins, he shall build the house for my name.

10 The LORD therefore hath [q]performed his word that he hath spoken: for [r]I am risen up in the room of David my father, and am set on the throne of Israel, [s]as the LORD promised, and have built the house for the name of the LORD God of Israel.

11 And in it have [t]I put the ark, wherein is the covenant of the LORD, that he made with the children of Israel.

12 ¶ And [u]he stood before the altar of the LORD, in the presence of all the congregation of Israel, and [x]spread forth his hands:

13 For Solomon had made a brasen [y]scaffold,[2] of five cubits *long, and five cubits broad, and three cubits high, and had set it in the midst of [z]the court: and upon it he stood, and [a]kneeled down upon his knees before all the congregation of Israel, and spread forth his hands toward heaven,

14 And said, [b]O LORD God of Israel, there is [c]no God like thee in the heaven, nor in the earth; which [d]keepest covenant, and shewest [e]mercy unto thy servants, that [f]walk before thee with all their hearts:

15 Thou which hast kept with thy servant David my father that which thou hast promised him; and [g]spakest with thy mouth, and hast fulfilled it with thine hand, as it is this day.

16 Now therefore, O LORD God of Israel, [h]keep with thy servant David my father that which thou hast promised him, [i]saying, [†]There shall not fail thee a man in my sight to sit upon the throne of Israel; yet so that thy children take heed to their way [k]to walk in my law, as thou hast walked before me.

17 Now then, [l]O LORD God of Israel, [m]let thy word be verified, which thou hast spoken unto thy servant David.

18 But [n]will God in very deed dwell with men on the earth? behold, [o]heaven and the heaven of heavens cannot contain thee; [p]how much less this house which I have built?[3]

19 [q]Have respect therefore to the prayer of thy servant, and to his supplication, O LORD my God, [r]to hearken unto the cry and the prayer which thy servant prayeth before thee:

20 That [s]thine eyes may be open upon this house day and night, upon the place whereof thou hast said that thou wouldest [t]put thy name there; to hearken unto the prayer which thy servant prayeth [‡]toward this place.

21 Hearken therefore unto the supplications of thy servant, and of thy people Israel, which they shall [§]make toward this place: hear thou from [u]thy dwelling place, even from heaven; and when thou hearest, [x]forgive.

22 ¶ If a man [y]sin against his neighbour, [l]and an oath be laid upon him to make him swear, and [z]the oath come before thine altar in this house;

23 Then hear thou [a]from heaven, and do, and judge thy servants, by [b]requiting the wicked, by recompensing his way upon his own head; and by [c]justifying the righteous, by giving him according to his righteousness.

24 ¶ And if thy people Israel be [*]put to the worse before the enemy, [d]because they have sinned against thee; and [e]shall return and confess thy name, and [f]pray and make supplication before thee [†]in this house;

25 Then hear thou from the heavens, and [g]forgive the sin of thy people Israel, and bring them again unto the land [h]which thou gavest to them and to their fathers.

26 ¶ When [i]the heaven is shut up,[4] and [k]there is no rain, because they have sinned against thee; yet [l]if they pray toward this place, and confess thy name, and [m]turn from their sin, when [n]thou dost afflict them;

27 Then hear thou from heaven, and forgive the sin of thy servants, and of thy people Israel, [o]when thou hast taught them the [p]good way, wherein they should walk; and [q]send rain upon thy land, which thou hast given unto thy people for an inheritance.

28 ¶ If there be [r]dearth in the land, if there be pestilence, if there be blasting, or mildew, [s]locusts, or caterpillars; if [t]their enemies besiege them in the [‡]cities of their land; [u]whatsoever sore or whatsoever sickness there be:

29 Then [x]what prayer or what supplication soever shall be made of any man, or of all thy people Israel, when every one shall [y]know his own sore and his own grief, and shall [z]spread forth his hands [§]in this house:

30 Then hear thou from heaven thy dwelling place, and forgive, and [a]render unto every man according unto all his ways, whose heart thou knowest; (for [b]thou only knowest the hearts of the children of men:)

31 That they may [c]fear thee, to walk in thy ways, [l]so long as they live in the land which thou gavest unto our fathers.

32 ¶ Moreover concerning [d]the stranger, which is not of thy people Israel, but [e]is come from a far [f]country[5] for thy great name's sake, and [f]thy mighty hand, and thy stretched out arm; [g]if they come and pray in this house;

33 Then hear thou from the heavens, even from thy dwelling place, and do according to all that the stranger calleth to thee for; [h]that all people of the earth may know thy name,

God be thus honoured. 3. He did it in pursuance of his father's good intentions, which he never had an opportunity to put in execution. "It was in the heart of David my father to build a house for God;" the project was his, be it known to his honour, ver. 7, and God approved of it, though he permitted him not to put it in execution, ver. 8; "Thou didst well that it was in thine heart." Temple-work is often thus done; one sows and another reaps, John iv. 37, 38; one age begins that which the next brings to perfection; and let not the wisest of men think it any disparagement to them, to pursue the good designs which those that went before them have laid, and to build upon their foundation. Every good piece is not an original. 4. He did it in performance of the word which God had spoken. God had said, "Thy son shall build the house for my name;" and now he had done it, ver. 9, 10. The service was appointed him, and the honour of it designed him, by the divine promise; so that he did not do it of his own head, but was called of God to do it. It is fit that he who appoints the work should have the appointing of the workmen; and those may go on in their work with great satisfaction, who see their call to it clear.

PETITIONS IN SOLOMON'S PRAYER—Here are petitions very pertinent. 1. That God would own this house, and have an eye to it, as the place of which he said that he would put his name there, ver. 20. He could not, in faith, have asked God to show such peculiar favour to this house above any other, if he himself had not said that it should be his rest for ever. The prayer that will speed, must be warranted by the word. We may therefore with humble confidence pray to God to be well pleased with us in Jesus Christ, because he has declared himself well pleased in him; "This is my beloved Son;" but he says not now of any house, "This is my beloved place." 2. That God would hear and accept the prayers which should be made in, or toward that place, ver. 21. He asks not that God should help them, whether they prayed for themselves or no, but that God would help them in answer to their prayers. Even Christ's intercessions do not supersede, but encourage our applications. He prays that God would hear from his dwelling-place, even from heaven; that is his dwelling-place still; not this temple; and hence help must come. "When thou hearest, forgive." Note, The forgiveness of one sin is that which makes way for all the other answers to our prayers. Removendo prohibens—The evil which it drives away, it keeps away. 3. That God would give judgment according to equity, upon all the appeals that should be made to him, ver. 23, 30. This we may in faith pray for, for we are sure it shall be done. God sitteth on the throne of righteousness. 4. That God would return in mercy to his people when they [illegible] straight unto him, ver. 25, 27, 38, 39. This we also may in faith pray for, [illegible] appointed declarations God has made of his readiness to accept penitents. 5. That God would bid the strangers welcome to this house, and answer their prayers, ver. 33; for if there be in duty, why should there not be in privilege, one law for the stranger, and one born in the land? Lev. xxiv. 22. 6. That God would, upon all occasions, own and plead the cause of his people Israel, against all the opposers of it, ver 35, "maintain their cause;" and again, ver. 39, If they be the Israel of God, their cause is the cause of God, and he will espouse it. Lastly, He concludes this prayer with some expressions which he had learned of his good father, and borrowed from one of his psalms. We had them not in the Kings, but here we have them, ver. 41, 42. The whole word of God is of use to direct us in prayer; and how can we express ourselves in better language to God, than that of his own Spirit? But these words were of use, in a special manner, to direct Solomon, because they had reference to this very work that he was now doing. We have them, Ps. cxxxii. 8—10. He prays, ver. 41, (1.) That God would take possession of the temple, and keep possession; that he would make it his resting-place. "Thou and the ark;" what will the ark do without the God of the ark? Ordinances, without the God of the ordinances? (2.) That he would make the ministers of the temple public blessings, "clothe them with salvation," that is, not only save them, but make them instrumental to save others, by offering the sacrifices of righteousness. (3.) That the service of the temple might turn abundantly to the joy and satisfaction of all the Lord's people. "Let thy saints rejoice in goodness," that is, in the "goodness of thy house," Ps. lxv. 4. Let all that come hither to worship, like the eunuch, go away rejoicing. He pleads two things, ver. 42, First, His own relation to God: "'Turn not away the face of thine anointed.' Lord, thou hast appointed me to be king, and wilt not thou own me?" Secondly, God's covenant with his father: "Remember the mercies of David thy servant." The piety of David toward God, so some understand it, so the word sometimes signifies, his pious care of the ark and concern for it; see Ps. cxxxii. 1, 2, &c. Or the promises of God to David, which were mercies to him, his great support and comfort in all his troubles. We may plead as Solomon does here, with an eye to Christ. We deserve that God should turn away our face, that he should reject us and our prayers; but we come in the name of the Lord Jesus, "thine anointed, thy Messiah," so the word is; "thy Christ," so the LXX. Him thou hearest always, and wilt never "turn away his face." We have no righteousness of our own to plead, but, Lord, "remember the mercies of David thy servant," that is God's Servant, Isa. xlii. 1, and is called "David," Ezek. xxxiv. [illegible] mercies, and accept of us on the account of them. [illegible] his Father's honour, and man's salvation [illegible] Remember the promises of the everlasting covenant.

CHAP. VII.

God giving testimony to Solomon's prayer, the people worship him, 1. Solomon's sacrifice, 5.

NOW [a]when Solomon had made an end of praying, [b]the fire came down from heaven, and consumed the burnt-offering and the sacrifices; and [c]the glory of the LORD filled the house.

2 And [d]the priests could not enter into the house of the LORD, because the glory of the LORD had filled the LORD's house.

3 And when all the children of Israel saw how the fire came down, and the glory of the LORD upon the house, [e]they bowed themselves with their faces to the ground upon the pavement, and worshipped, and praised the LORD, saying, [f]for he is good; for his mercy endureth for ever.

4 ¶ Then the king and all the people offered sacrifices before the LORD.

5 And king Solomon offered [g]a sacrifice of twenty and two thousand oxen, and an hundred and twenty thousand sheep: so the king and all the people [h]dedicated the house of God.

6 And [i]the priests waited on their offices: [j]the Levites also with instruments of musick of the LORD,[1] [k]which David the king had made to praise the LORD, [l]because his mercy endureth for ever, when David praised by their *ministry; and [m]the priests sounded trumpets before them, and all Israel stood.

7 Moreover Solomon [n]hallowed the middle of the court that was before the house of the LORD: for there he offered burnt-offerings, and the fat of the peace-offerings, because [o]the brasen altar which Solomon had made was not able to receive the burnt-offerings, and the meat-offerings, and the fat.

8 ¶ Also at the same time Solomon [p]kept the feast seven days, and all Israel with him, [q]a very great congregation, from [r]the entering in of Hamath unto the river of Egypt.

9 And in the eighth day they made a †solemn assembly:[2] for they kept the dedication of the altar [s]seven days, and the feast seven days.

10 And on the [t]three and twentieth day of the seventh month he sent the people away into their tents, [u]glad and merry in heart [x]for the goodness that the LORD had shewed unto David, and to Solomon, and to Israel his people.

11 Thus [y]Solomon finished the house of the LORD, and the king's house: and [z]all that came into Solomon's heart to make in the house of the LORD, and in his own house, he prosperously effected.

12 ¶ And [a]the LORD appeared to Solomon by night, and said unto him, [b]I have heard thy prayer, and [c]have chosen this place to myself for [d]an house of sacrifice.

13 If [e]I shut up heaven that there be no rain, or if [f]I command the locusts to devour the land, or if [g]I send pestilence among my people;

14 If [h]my people, ‡which are called by my name, shall [i]humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and [k]turn from their wicked ways; then [l]will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin, and will [m]heal their land.

15 Now [n]mine eyes shall be open, and mine ears attent unto the prayer [§]that is made in this place.

Christ, and which are called "the sure mercies of David," Isa. lv. 3, and Acts xiii. 34. This must be all our desire, and all our hope, all our prayer, and all our plea, for it is all our salvation.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—It is a great mercy to be enabled to go through important services to the church, in simple obedience, and in dependence on the Lord; and to witness their accomplishment with humble gratitude to the Giver of both the will, the ability, and the success; adoring his power, faithfulness, and goodness in every part of it, without expressing self-importance or self-complacency. For pride and ostentation, if allowed to intrude, rob God of his glory, and mar the acceptance, or the comfort, of the most useful and excellent undertakings. Here then the main guard should be placed, by those who are employed as instruments for the good of others: this, this above all the rest, should dictate their constant prayers; and all who wish success to their attempts, should join in prayer for them, that they may be kept humble, in proportion as they are honoured by God for usefulness.—When a good work is well finished, it is not done with: when the sermon is preached, the letter written, or the book sent to the press, or even well received by the public, its real utility depends on the Lord's consequent blessing. Then it ought to be dedicated to him, committed to his hands, and his blessing should be sought upon it; and in this case we may confidently expect that the fruit which by his grace we have produced, will remain for the durable good of many, when we are gone to our long home.—Scott.

CHAP. VII. SOLOMON'S PRAYER ANSWERED.—Ver. 1. Here is, 1. The gracious return which God immediately made to Solomon's prayer. The "fire came down from heaven, and consumed the sacrifice." In this way God testified his acceptance of Moses, Lev. ix. 24; of Gideon, Judg. vi. 21; of David, 1 Chron. xxi. 26; of Elijah, 1 Kings xviii. 38, and, in general, to accept the burnt-sacrifice, is, in the Hebrew phrase, to turn it to ashes, Ps. xx. 3. The fire came down here, not upon the killing of the sacrifices, but the praying of the prayer. This fire intimated that God was, (1.) Glorious in himself; for "our God is a consuming Fire," terrible even in his holy places. This fire breaking forth (as it is probable) out of the thick darkness, made it the more terrible, as on mount Sinai, Exod. xxiv. 16, 17. The sinners in Zion had reason to be afraid at this sight, and to say, "Who among us shall dwell near this devouring fire?" Isa. xxxiii. 14. And yet, (2.) Gracious to Israel; for this fire, which might justly have consumed them, fastened upon the sacrifice which was offered in their stead, and consumed that; by which God signified to them, that he accepted their offerings, and that his anger was turned away from them. Let us apply this, First, To the sufferings of Christ; when it pleased the Lord to bruise him, and put him to grief, in that he showed his good-will to men, having laid on him the iniquity of all. His death was our life, and he was made sin and a curse, that we might inherit righteousness and a blessing. That sacrifice was consumed, that we might escape: "Here am I, let these go away." Secondly, To the sanctification of the Spirit, who descends like fire, burning up our lusts and corruptions, those beasts that must be sacrificed, or we are undone; and kindling in our souls a holy fire of pious and devout affections, always to be kept burning on the altar of the heart. The surest evidence of God's acceptance of our prayers, is the descent of this holy fire upon us; "Did not our hearts burn within us?" Luke xxiv. 32. As a further evidence that God accepted Solomon's prayer, still "the glory of the Lord filled the house." The heart that is thus filled with a holy awe and reverence of the divine glory, in consequence of God's manifesting himself in his greatness, and (which is no less his glory) in his goodness, is thereby owned as a living temple.

BLESSING PROMISED TO SOLOMON.—Ver. 12. God accepted Solomon's prayer, appeared by the fire from heaven. But a prayer may be accepted, and yet not answered in the letter of it; and therefore God appeared to him in the night, as he did once before, chap. i. 7, and after a day of sacrifice too, as then; and gave him a particular answer to his prayer. We had the substance of it before, 1 Kings. ix. 2—9. 1. He promised to own this house for "a house of sacrifice to Israel," and a "house of prayer for all people," Isa. lvi. 7; ver. 12, 16, "My name shall be there for ever," that is, "There will I make myself known, and there will I be called upon." 2. He promised to answer the prayers of his people, that should at any time be made in that place, ver. 13—15. (1.) National judgments are here supposed, ver. 13; famine and pestilence. By the locusts devouring the land, may be meant enemies as greedy as locusts, and laying all waste. (2.) National repentance, prayer, and reformation are required, ver. 14. God expects that his people who are called by his name, if they have dishonoured his name by their iniquity, should honour it by accepting the punishment of their iniquity. They must humble themselves under his hand, must pray for the removal of the judgment, must seek the face and favour of God; and yet all this will not do, unless they turn from their wicked ways, and return to the God from whom they have revolted. (3.) National mercy is then promised; that God will forgive their sin, which brought the judgment upon them, and then heal their land, redress all their grievances. Pardoning mercy makes way for healing mercy, Ps. ciii. 3; Matt. ix. 2. 3. He promised to perpetuate Solomon's kingdom, upon condition that he persevered in his duty, ver. 17, 18. If he hoped for the benefit of God's covenant with David, he must imitate the example of David. But he sets before him death as well as life, the curse as well as the blessing.

this house, that [p]my name may be there for ever: and [q]mine eyes and mine heart shall be there perpetually.

17 And as for thee, [r]if thou wilt walk before me, as David thy father walked, and do according to all that I have commanded thee, and shalt [s]observe my statutes and my judgments;

18 Then [t]will I stablish the throne of thy kingdom, according [u]as I have covenanted with David thy father, saying, There [x]shall not [1]fail thee a man to be ruler in Israel.

19 But [y]if ye turn away, and forsake my statutes and my commandments, which I have set before you, and [z]shall go and serve other gods, and worship them;

20 Then [a]will I pluck them up by the roots out of my land which I have given them; and this house, which I have sanctified for my name, will I cast out of my sight, and will make it to be [b]a proverb and a byword among all nations.

21 And [c]this house, which is high, shall be [d]an astonishment to every one that passeth by it; so that he shall say, [e]Why hath the LORD done thus unto this land, and unto this house?

22 And it shall be answered, [f]Because they forsook the LORD God of their fathers, which brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, and laid hold on other gods, and worshipped them, and served them: [g]therefore hath he brought all this evil upon them.

AND it came to pass [a]at the end of twenty years, wherein Solomon had built the house of the LORD, and his own house,

2 That [b]the cities[1] which Huram had restored to Solomon, Solomon built them, and caused the children of Israel to dwell there.

3 And Solomon went to [c]Hamath-zobah, and prevailed against it.

4 And [d]he built Tadmor in the wilderness,[2] and all the store cities, which he built in Hamath.

5 Also he built [e]Beth-horon the upper, and Beth-horon the nether, fenced cities, with walls, gates, and bars;

6 And [f]Baalath, and all [g]the store cities that Solomon had, and all the [h]chariot cities, and the cities of the horsemen, and [*]all that Solomon desired to build in Jerusalem, [i]and in Lebanon, and throughout all the land of his dominion.

7 ¶ As for [j]all the people that were left of [k]the Hittites, and the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, which were not of Israel,

8 But of their children, who were left after them in the land, [l]whom the children of Israel consumed not, them did Solomon make [m]to pay tribute until this day.

9 But [n]of the children of Israel did Solomon make no servants for his work; but [o]they were men of war, and chief of his captains, and captains of his chariots and horsemen.

10 And these were the chief of king Solomon's officers, even [p]two hundred and fifty, that bare rule over the people.

11 ¶ And Solomon [q]brought up the daughter of Pharaoh out of the city of David unto the house that he had built for her: for he said, My wife shall not dwell in the house of David king of Israel,[3] because the places are [†]holy, whereunto the ark of the LORD hath come.

12 ¶ Then Solomon offered burnt-offerings unto the LORD [r]on the altar of the LORD, which he had built before the porch, 13 Even after a certain rate [s]every day, offering according to the commandment of Moses, on the sabbaths, and on the new moons, and on the solemn feasts, [t]three times in the year, even in the feast of unleavened bread, and in the feast of weeks, and in the feast of tabernacles.

14 ¶ And he appointed, according to the order of David his father, [u]the courses of the priests to their service, and [x]the Levites to their charges, to praise and minister before the priests, as the duty of every day required: [y]the porters also by their courses at every gate: for [‡]so [z]had David [a]the man of God commanded.[4]

15 And [b]they departed not from the commandment of the king unto the priests and Levites concerning any matter, or concerning [c]the treasures.

16 ¶ Now [d]all the work of Solomon was prepared unto the day of the foundation of the house of the LORD, and until it was finished. So the house of the LORD was perfected.

17 ¶ Then went Solomon to [e]Ezion-geber, and to [f]Eloth, at the sea side in the land of Edom.

18 And [g]Huram sent him by the hands of his servants ships, and servants that had knowledge of the sea; and they went with the servants of Solomon to Ophir, and took thence four hundred and fifty talents of gold, and brought them to king Solomon.

(1.) He supposes it possible that though they had this temple built to the honour of God, yet they might be drawn aside to worship other gods, ver. 19. He knew their proneness to backslide into that sin. (2.) He threatens it as certain, that if they did so, it would certainly be the ruin of both church and state. First, It would be the ruin of their state, ver. 20. "Though they have taken deep root, and taken root long, in this good land, yet I will pluck them up by the roots, extirpate the whole nation, pluck them up as men pluck up weeds out of their garden, which are thrown to the dunghill." Secondly, It would be the ruin of their church. This sanctuary would be no sanctuary to them, to protect them from the judgments of God, as they imagined, saying, "The temple of the Lord are we," Jer. vii. 4. "This house, which is high, not only for the magnificence of its structure, but for the designed ends and uses of it, shall be an astonishment, it shall come down wonderfully, Lam. i. 9, to the amazement of all the neighbours."—Henry.

CHAP. VIII. SOLOMON'S PALACE FOR HIS QUEEN.—One reason why Solomon built a palace on purpose for the queen, and removed her and her court to it, was, because he thought it by no means proper that she should "dwell in the house of David," ver. 11, considering that that had been a place of great piety, and perhaps her house was a place of great vanity. She was proselyted, it is likely, to the Jewish religion: but it is a question whether all her servants were. Perhaps they had among them the idols of Egypt, and a great deal of profaneness and debauchery. Now, though Solomon had not zeal and courage enough to suppress and punish what was amiss there, yet he so far consulted the honour of his father's memory, that he would not suffer that place to be thus profaned, where the ark of God had been, and where holy David had prayed many a good prayer, and sung many a sweet psalm. Not that all the places where the ark had been were so holy, as never to be put to a common use, for then the houses of Abinadab and Obed-edom must have been so; but, the place where it had been so long, and had been so publicly attended on, was so venerable, that it was not fit to be the place of so much gaiety, not to say iniquity, as was to be found, I fear, in the court that Pharaoh's daughter kept. Note, Between things sacred and things common the ancient land-marks ought to be kept up. It was an outer court of the temple that was the "court of the women."

ROYAL SUPPORT OF PUBLIC WORSHIP.—Ver. 14. Here is Solomon's devotion. The building of the temple was in order to the service of the temple; whatever cost he was at in the structure, if he had neglected the worship that was to be performed there, he would have failed in his purpose. Assisting the devotion of others will not atone for our own neglects. When Solomon had built the temple, 1. He kept up the holy sacrifices there, according to the law of Moses, ver. 12, 13. In vain had the altar been built, and in vain had fire come down from heaven, if sacrifices had not been constantly brought as the food of that altar, and the fuel of that fire. There were daily sacrifices, "a certain rate every day," as duly as the day came; weekly sacrifices on the Sabbath, double to what was offered on other days; monthly sacrifices "on the new moons;" and yearly sacrifices at the three solemn feasts. They are spiritual sacrifices that are now required of us, which we are to bring daily and weekly; and it is good to be in a settled method of devotion. 2. He kept up the holy songs there, according to the "law of David," who is here called "the man of God," as Moses was, because he was both instructed and authorised of God to make these establishments; and Solomon took care to see them observed, "as the duty of every day required," ver. 14. Solomon, though a wise and great man, and the builder of the temple, did not attempt to amend, alter, or add to, what the man of God had, in God's name commanded, but closely adhered to that, and used his authority to have that duly observed; and then "none departed from the commandment of the king, concerning any matter," ver. 15. He answered God's laws, and then all obeyed his orders. When the service of the temple was put into this good order, then, it is said, "The house of the Lord was perfected," ver. 16. The work was the main matter, not the place; the temple was unfinished till all this was done.—Henry.

CHAP. IX. QUEEN OF SHEBA'S VISIT TO SOLOMON.—Ver. 1. This passage of story has been considered in the Kings: yet, because our Saviour has proposed it as an example to us, in our inquiries after him, Matt. xii. 42, we must not pass it over without observing briefly, 1. "Those who honour God, he will honour," 1 Sam. ii. 30. Solomon had greatly honoured God in building, beautifying, and dedicating the temple; all his wisdom, and all his wealth, were employed for the making of that a consummate piece: and now God made his wisdom and wealth to redound greatly to his reputation. The way to have both the credit and comfort of all our endowments, and all our enjoyments, is, to consecrate them to God, and use them for him. 2. Those who know the worth of true wisdom will grudge no pains or cost to compass it. The queen of Sheba put herself to a great deal of trouble and expense to hear the wisdom of Solomon; and yet, learning from him to serve God, and do her duty, she thought herself well paid for her pains. Heavenly wisdom is that "pearl of great price," for [illegible] if we part with all, we make a good bargain. [illegible] so he ought to minister the same for the [illegible]

4 And [m]the meat of his table, and [n]the sitting of his servants, and the attendance of his ministers, and their apparel; his [*]cupbearers also, and their apparel; and [o]his ascent by which he went up into the house of the LORD; [p]there was no more spirit in her.

5 And she said to the king, It was a true [†]report which I heard in mine own land of thine [‡]acts, and of thy wisdom:

6 Howbeit [q]I believed not their words, until I came, and mine eyes had seen it: and, behold, [r]the one half of the greatness of thy wisdom was not told me: for thou [s]exceedest the fame that I heard.

7 [t]Happy are thy men, and happy are these thy servants, which stand continually before thee, and hear thy wisdom.

8 [u]Blessed be the LORD thy God, [x]which delighted in thee to set thee on his throne, to be king for the LORD thy God: [y]because thy God loved Israel, to establish them for ever, therefore made he thee king over them, [z]to do judgment and justice.

9 And [a]she gave the king an hundred and twenty talents of gold, and [b]of spices great abundance, and precious stones: neither was there any such spice as the queen of Sheba gave king Solomon.

10 And the servants also of Huram, and the servants of Solomon, [c]which brought gold from Ophir, brought [d]algum trees and precious stones.

11 And the king made of the algum trees [§]terraces to the house of the LORD, and to the king's palace, and [e]harps and psalteries for singers: and there were none such seen before in the land of Judah.

12 And king Solomon gave to the queen of Sheba [f]all her desire, whatsoever she asked, beside that which she had brought unto the king.[1] So she turned and went away to her own land, she and her servants.

13 ¶ Now [g]the weight of gold that came to Solomon in one year was six hundred and threescore and six talents of gold;

14 Beside that which chapmen and merchants brought. And all the kings of Arabia and [‖]governors of the country brought gold and silver to Solomon.

15 ¶ And king Solomon made [h]two hundred targets of beaten gold: six hundred shekels of beaten gold went to one target.

16 And three hundred shields made he of beaten gold: three hundred shekels of gold went to one shield. And the king put them [i]in the house of the forest of Lebanon.

17 ¶ Moreover the king made [k]a great throne of ivory, and overlaid it with pure gold.

18 And there were six steps to the throne, with a footstool of gold,[2] which were fastened to the throne, and [*]stays on each side of the sitting place, and [l]two lions standing by the stays:

19 And [m]twelve lions stood there on the one side and on the other upon the six steps. There was not the like made in any kingdom.

20 ¶ And all [n]the drinking vessels of king Solomon were of gold, and all the vessels of the house of the forest of Lebanon were of [†]pure gold: [‡]none were of silver; [o]it was not any thing accounted of in the days of Solomon.

21 For the king's ships went to [p]Tarshish with the servants of Huram: every three years once came the ships of Tarshish bringing gold, and silver, [§]ivory, and apes, and [q]peacocks.

22 And king Solomon [r]passed all the kings of the earth in riches and wisdom.

23 ¶ And all the kings of the earth [s]sought the presence of Solomon, to hear his wisdom, that [t]God had put in his heart.

24 And they brought [u]every man his present,[3] vessels of silver, and vessels of gold, and raiment, harness and spices, horses, and mules, a rate year by year.

25 ¶ And Solomon had [x]four thousand stalls for horses and chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen; whom he bestowed in the chariot cities, and with the king at Jerusalem.

26 ¶ And he [y]reigned over all the kings from [z]the river even unto the land of the Philistines, and to the border of Egypt.

27 And [a]the king [*]made silver in Jerusalem as stones, and cedar trees made he [b]as the sycamore trees that are in the low plains in abundance.

28 And they [c]brought unto Solomon horses out of Egypt, and out of all lands.

29 ¶ Now [d]the rest of the acts of Solomon, first and last, are they not written in the [e]book of [f]Nathan the prophet, and in the prophecy of [g]Ahijah the Shilonite, and in the visions of [h]Iddo the seer against Jeroboam the son of Nebat?

Solomon was communicative of his wisdom, and willing to teach others what he knew himself. Being taught of God, freely he had received, and freely he gave. Let them that are rich in wisdom, as well as wealth, learn "to do good," and "be ready to distribute." "Give to every one that asketh." 4. Good order in a family, a great family, especially in the things of God, and a regular discharge of the duties of religious worship, are highly expedient, and to be much admired wherever found. The queen of Sheba was exceedingly affected to see the propriety with which Solomon's servants attended him, and with which both he and they attended in the house of God. David's ascent to the house of the Lord was also pleasant and interesting, Ps. xlii. 4. 5. Those are happy who have the opportunity of a constant converse with such as are knowing, wise, and good. The queen of Sheba thought Solomon's servants happy, who continually "heard his wisdom;" for it seems even to them he was communicative. And it is observable, that the posterity of those who had places in his court were willing to have the names of their ancestors forgotten, and thought themselves sufficiently distinguished and dignified when they were called the "children of Solomon's servants," Ezra ii. 55; Neh. vii. 57; so eminent were they, it was honour enough to be named from them. 6. We ought to rejoice, and give God thanks, for the gifts, graces, and usefulness of others. The queen of Sheba blessed God for the honour he put upon Solomon, and the favour he did to Solomon in advancing him to the throne, ver. 8. By giving God the praise of the prosperity of others, we share in the comfort of it; whereas, by envying the prosperity of others, we lose the comfort even of our own. The happiness both of king and kingdom she traces up to the fountain of all bliss, the divine favour: it was because "thy God delighted in thee," and because he "loved Israel." Those mercies are doubly sweet which we can taste the kindness and good-will of God in, as our God. 7. It becomes those that are wise and good to be generous according to their place and power. The queen of Sheba was so to Solomon, Solomon was so to her, ver. 9, 12.

Splendour of Solomon's Reign.—Ver. 11—30. 1. Never any prince appeared in public with greater splendour than Solomon did, which, to those that judge by the sight of the eye, as most people do, would very much recommend him. He had 200 targets, and 300 shields, all of beaten gold, carried before him, ver. 15, 16, and sat upon a most stately throne, ver. 17—19, "There was not the like in any kingdom." The lustre wherein he appeared was typical of the spiritual glory of the kingdom of the Messiah, and but a faint representation of his throne, which is above every throne. Solomon's pomp was all artificial; and therefore our Saviour prefers the natural beauty of the "lilies of the field" before it, Matt. vi. 29, "Solomon in all his glory was not arrayed like one of these. 2. Never any prince had greater plenty of gold and silver, though there were no gold or silver mines in his own kingdom. Either he made himself master of the mines in other countries, and, having a populous country, sent hands to dig out those rich metals; or, having a fruitful country, he exported the commodities of it, and with them fetched home all this gold that is here spoken of, ver. 13—21. 3. Never any prince had such presents brought him by all his neighbours as Solomon had: "All the kings of Arabia, and governors of the country, brought him gold and silver," ver. 14. Not as tribute which he extorted from them, but as free-will offerings, to procure his favours, or in a way of exchange for some of the productions of his husbandry, corn, or cattle. All the kings of the earth brought him presents, that is, all in those parts of the world, ver. 24, 28, because they coveted his acquaintance and friendship. Herein he was a type of Christ, to whom, as soon as he was born, the wise men of the east brought presents, "gold, frankincense, and myrrh," Matt. ii. 11, and to whom all that are about him must bring presents, Ps. lxxvi. 11; Rom. xii. 1. 4. Never any prince was so renowned for wisdom, so courted, so consulted, so admired, ver. 23. "The kings of the earth" (for it was too great a favour for common persons to pretend to) "sought to hear his wisdom;" either his natural philosophy, or his skill in physic, or his state policy, or his rules of prudence for the conduct of human life, or perhaps the principles of his religion, and the reasons of it. The application which they then made to Solomon to hear his wisdom, will aggravate, shame, and condemn men's general contempt of Christ and his gospel. Though in them are "hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, yet none of the princes of this world" desire to know them, for they are foolishness to them, 1 Cor. ii. 8, 14. It is very observable that no mention is here made of Solomon's departure from God in his latter days, not the least hint given of it. (1.) Because the Holy Ghost would teach us not to take delight in repeating the faults and follies of others. If those that have been in reputation for wisdom and honour, misbehave, though it may be of use to take notice of their misconduct, for warning to ourselves and others, yet we must not be forward to mention it, once speaking of it is enough; why should that unpleasing string be again struck upon? Why can we not do as the sacred historian here does, speak largely of that in others which is praiseworthy, without saying any thing of their blemishes, yea, though they have been gross and obvious. This is but doing as we would be done by. (2.) Because, though he fell, yet he was not utterly cast down. Therefore his sin is not again recorded; because it was repented of, and pardoned, and so became as if it had never been. Scripture silence sometimes speaks. I am willing to believe that its silence here, concerning the sin of Solomon, is an intimation that none of the sins he committed were

30 And [g]Solomon reigned in Jerusalem over all Israel forty years.

31 And Solomon [h]slept with his fathers, and he was buried in the city of David his father: and Rehoboam his son reigned in his stead.

CHAP. X.

Rehoboam refusing the old men's counsel, 1, ten tribes revolt, 16; and he fleeth, 18.

AND [a]Rehoboam went to Shechem: for to [b]Shechem were [c]all Israel come to make him king.

2 And it came to pass when [d]Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who was in Egypt, whither he had fled from the presence of Solomon the king, heard it, that Jeroboam returned out of Egypt.

3 And [e]they sent and called him. So Jeroboam and all Israel came and spake to Rehoboam, saying,

4 Thy [f]father made our yoke grievous: now therefore ease thou somewhat the [g]grievous servitude of thy father,[1] and his heavy yoke that he put upon us, and we will serve thee.

5 And he said unto them, [h]Come again unto me after three days. And the people departed.

6 ¶ And king Rehoboam [i]took counsel with the old men that had stood before Solomon his father while he yet lived, saying, [k]What counsel give ye me to return answer to this people?

7 And they spake unto him, saying, [l]If thou be kind to this people, and please them, and [m]speak good words to them, they will be thy servants for ever.

8 But [n]he forsook the counsel which the old men gave him, and took counsel with the young men that were brought up with him, that stood before him.

9 And he said unto them, [o]What advice give ye that we may return answer to this people, which have spoken to me, saying, [p]Ease somewhat the yoke that thy father did put upon us?

10 And the young men that were brought up with him spake unto him, saying, [q]Thus shalt thou answer the people that spake unto thee, saying, Thy father made our yoke heavy, but make thou it somewhat lighter for us; thus shalt thou say unto them, [r]My little finger shall be thicker than my father's loins.

11 For whereas [s]my father *put a heavy yoke upon you, [t]I will put more to your yoke: my father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with [u]scorpions.

12 ¶ So Jeroboam and all the people came to Rehoboam on the third day, as the king bade, saying, [x]Come again to me on the third day.

13 And the king [y]answered them roughly; and king Rehoboam [z]forsook the counsel of the old men,

14 And answered them after [a]the advice of the young men, saying, [b]My father made your yoke heavy, but I will add thereto: my father chastised you with whips, but I will chastise you with scorpions.

15 So the king hearkened not unto the people: for [c]the cause was of God, [d]that the LORD might perform his word, which he spake by the hand of [e]Ahijah the Shilonite to Jeroboam the son of Nebat.

16 ¶ And when all Israel saw that the king would not hearken unto them, the people answered the king, saying, [f]What portion have we in David? and we have none inheritance in [g]the son of Jesse: every man to your tents, O Israel: and now, [h]David, see to thine own house. [i]So all Israel went to their tents.

17 But [k]as for the children of Israel that dwelt in the cities of Judah, Rehoboam reigned over them.

18 Then king Rehoboam sent [l]Hadoram that was over the tribute; and the children of Israel [m]stoned him with stones, that he died. But king Rehoboam [n]made speed to get him up to his chariot, to flee to Jerusalem.

19 And [o]Israel rebelled against the house of David [p]unto this day.

CHAP. XI.

Rehoboam raising an army to subdue Israel, is forbidden by Shemaiah, 1; his wives, 18.

AND [a]when Rehoboam was come to Jerusalem, he gathered of the house of Judah and Benjamin [b]an hundred and fourscore thousand chosen men, which were warriors, to fight against Israel, that he might bring the kingdom again to Rehoboam.

2 But the word of the LORD came [c]to Shemaiah [d]the man of God, saying,

3 Speak unto Rehoboam the son of Solomon, king of Judah, and [e]to all Israel in Judah and Benjamin, saying,

4 Thus saith the LORD, Ye shall not go up, nor fight [f]against your brethren: [g]return every man to his house: [h]for this thing is done of me. And [i]they obeyed the words of the LORD, and returned from going against Jeroboam.

5 ¶ And Rehoboam dwelt in Jerusalem, and [j]built cities for defence in Judah.[1]

6 He built even [k]Beth-lehem, and [l]Etam, and [m]Tekoa,

CHAP. X. REHOBOAM'S FOLLY.—Ver. 1—15. Many ruin themselves and their interests by trampling upon and provoking their inferiors. Rehoboam thought that, because he was king, he might rule it as his father had done, have what he would, and do what he would, and carry all before him. But, though he wore his father's crown, he wanted his father's head-piece, and ought to have considered that, being quite a different man from what his father was, he ought to take other measures: such a wise man as Solomon may do as he will, but such a fool as Rehoboam must do as he can. The high-mettled horse may be kicked and spurred by him that has the art of managing him; but if an unskilful horseman do it, it is at his peril. Rehoboam paid dear for threatening and talking big, and thinking to carry it with a high hand. It was Job's wisdom, as well as his virtue, that he "despised not the cause of his man-servant, or maid-servant," when they argued with him, Job xxxi. 13, but heard them patiently, considered their reasons, and gave them a soft answer. And the like tender consideration of those in subjection, and a forwardness to make them easy, will be the comfort and praise of all in authority, in the church, in the state, and in families.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The wisest of mere men in some things act imprudently, especially when, by sin, they provoke God to leave them to themselves: nay, the most equitable princes may be betrayed into partial, oppressive, or unwarrantable measures: and this is the general consequence of being drawn by their favourites or their passions into lavish expenses. Thus, some cause of complaint will exist in every kingdom, of which turbulent and ambitious men will avail themselves. For whilst we all need so many allowances for ourselves, we are naturally indisposed to make allowances for others. Indeed, very many would be dissatisfied, even if God were to place over them perfectly wise and righteous governors; for do not they murmur against his own most righteous dispensations? Do they not regard his holy law as a heavy yoke, a grievous servitude? and are they not ungrateful for his manifold goodness? Nay, the very kingdom of the Prince of peace, though his throne is established in mercy, doth not give satisfaction. Numbers "will not have him to reign over them;" numbers neglect his service because they think him an austere Lord; numbers renounce their professed subjection to him, and prefer the yoke of sin and Satan; and, alas! the impatience, the negligence, the reluctancy to [illegible] service, which most Christians discover, evince that they want somewhat [illegible] of his yoke. Yet his wisdom, righteousness, truth, goodness, and [illegible] say, his burden light;" and the whole blame of our uneasiness rests upon ourselves alone. This reflection should teach us to "abhor ourselves," and to pray continually, "turn thou me, and so shall I be turned." And being so culpable ourselves, we should learn to bear with the perverseness of others, and to prefer lenient to violent measures. But nothing manifests greater folly than affronting, menacing language, when united with indecision and weakness in perilous circumstances.—No man can bequeath his prosperity, any more than his wisdom, to his heirs; though our children will generally be affected by our conduct. Let us then seek those good things which will be our own for ever; and implore the blessing of God upon our posterity, in preference to wealth or worldly exaltation: let us lay our account with vicissitudes and vexations on earth, and with fickleness and ingratitude from man: and let us learn to depend on the power, faithfulness, and love of that God who, in correcting his children, or punishing his enemies, will never fail of performing his largest promises to those who trust in him.—Scott.

CHAP. XI. JEROBOAM'S IMPIETY.—Ver. 13. See here, 1. How Rehoboam was strengthened by the accession of the priests and Levites, and all the devout and pious Israelites, to him; even all that were true to their God and their religion. But Jeroboam cast them off; that is, he set up such a way of worship as he knew they could not in conscience comply with, which obliged them to withdraw from his altar, and at the same time he would not allow them to go up to Jerusalem, to worship at the altar there; so that he totally "cast them off from executing the priests' office," ver. 14. And very willing he was that they should turn themselves out of their places, that room might be made for those mean and scandalous persons whom he "ordained priests for the high places," ver. 15. Compare 1 Kings xii. 31. No marvel if he that cast off God cast off his ministers; they were not for his purpose, would not do whatever he bid them do, would not "serve his gods, nor worship the golden image which he had set up."—Henry.

ITS CONSEQUENCES.—Ver. 13—17. When Jeroboam had established the worship of the golden calves, and prevented his subjects from going to Jerusalem, it is probable that all the priests and Levites unanimously protested against this idolatry; and were therefore laid aside, to make way for a more compliant priesthood. As Jeroboam established no other idolatry than that of the calves, the language here employed teaches us, that the worship paid to them was actually rendered to devils; though he professed, and probably intended by them, to worship the God of Israel. [illegible] in a way which he had expressly prohibited, and which was infinitely [illegible] and therefore it was only acceptable to Satan and his [illegible] word rendered devils in this text of [illegible]

13 ¶ And the priests and the Levites that were in all Israel [*]resorted to him out of all their coasts.

14 For the Levites left [b]their suburbs and [c]their possession, and came to Judah and Jerusalem: for [d]Jeroboam and his sons had cast them off from executing the priest's office unto the LORD:

CHAP. XII.

Rehoboam forsaking God, is punished by Shishak, 1; his reign and death, 13.

AND it came to pass, [a]when Rehoboam had established the kingdom, and had strengthened himself, [b]he forsook the law of the LORD,[1] and [c]all Israel with him.

2 And it came to pass, that in the fifth year of king Rehoboam [d]Shishak king of Egypt came up against Jerusalem, [e]because they had transgressed against the LORD,

3 With [f]twelve hundred chariots, and threescore thousand horsemen: and the people were [g]without number that came with him out of Egypt; the [h]Lubims, the Sukkiims, and the [i]Ethiopians.

4 And he took [k]the fenced cities which pertained to Judah, and [l]came to Jerusalem.

5 Then came [m]Shemaiah the prophet to Rehoboam, and to the princes of Judah, that were gathered together to Jerusalem because of Shishak, and said unto them, Thus saith the LORD, [n]Ye have forsaken me, and therefore have I also [o]left you in the hand of Shishak.

6 Whereupon the princes of Israel and the king [p]humbled themselves; and they said, [q]The LORD is righteous.

7 And when [r]the LORD saw that they humbled themselves, the word of the LORD came to Shemaiah, saying, They have humbled themselves; therefore I will not destroy them, but I will grant them [*]some deliverance; [s]and my wrath shall not be poured out upon Jerusalem by the hand of Shishak.

8 Nevertheless [t]they shall be his servants; that [u]they may know my service,[2] and the service of the kingdoms of the countries.

9 So [v]Shishak king of Egypt came up against Jerusalem, and [x]took away the treasures of the house of the LORD, and the treasures of the king's house; he took all: he carried away also [y]the shields of gold which Solomon had made.

10 Instead of which king Rehoboam made [z]shields of brass, and committed them to the hands of [a]the chief of the guard, that kept the entrance of the king's house.

11 And when the king entered into the house of the LORD, the guard came and fetched them, and brought them again into the guard chamber.

12 And [b]when he humbled himself, the wrath of the LORD turned from him, that he would not destroy him altogether: and [†]also in Judah things went well.

13 ¶ So king Rehoboam strengthened himself in Jerusalem, and reigned: for [c]Rehoboam was one and forty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned seventeen often, in heathen writers, has a good sense; that is, it is used for the objects of their worship; but these were evil spirits; and the word has always a bad meaning in Scripture, and denotes abominable idols, and evil spirits as worshipped under their names. Holy angels are never called demons. It is not certain whether Jeroboam had deprived the priests and Levites of their dues, to maintain his new priesthood: but it seems that, for the present, they might have retained their cities, suburbs, and possessions, if they would have remained inactive; yet their situation would have been extremely ensnaring and perilous, and it afforded them little or no prospect of usefulness. In the days of David and Solomon, they had become generally attached to the worship of God at the sanctuary, as well as to the royal family of Judah; and as a body they seem to have been more pious and zealous than at any other period: they therefore magnanimously determined, with one consent, to desert their cities and possessions, and entirely to leave the apostate Israelites, thus "shaking off the very dust of their feet for a testimony against them."—Jeroboam probably was glad to be rid of them: but they were cordially welcomed by the king and people of Judah; and doubtless were provided for among their brethren, whose emoluments must thus have been greatly reduced. It is probable that scarcely any, either of the priests or Levites, remained behind on this occasion, for we read nothing of them in the subsequent history of Israel. This must be allowed to have been as noble a testimony for the cause of God, against apostates and idolaters, as any history hath recorded of a whole body of professed ministers.—Along with them numbers of the pious Israelites left their estates, and came to unite with the tribes of Judah and Benjamin. They might bring away with them many of their effects; and as the land afforded room enough for them, their numbers and treasures greatly strengthened the kingdom of Judah, and rendered it almost equal in force to that of Israel. But the chief advantage was, that nearly all the true religion of the nation was concentrated in that division of it. Accordingly, for three years the kingdom of Judah was greatly strengthened; whilst the king and the people in general adhered to the worship of God, as in the days of David, and in the best times of Solomon: but afterwards matters took another turn. It is not probable that Solomon would have been thus joined with David, as the good pattern which Rehoboam and his subjects followed, if he had persevered and perished in his apostacy. Ver. 18—21. Rehoboam imitated his father in multiplying wives, but not to the same enormous excess: and he does not appear to have married any heathen women.—Abealom, here mentioned, seems to have been a Benjamite; for Gibeah belonged to the tribe of Benjamin. Ver. 22—23. Rehoboam acted from partial affection, and by his own authority, in advancing Abijah above his elder brethren; whereas God himself chose Solomon to be king in preference to David's other sons. It is probable that Rehoboam's conduct gave umbrage to his other sons; and that he dispersed them, in the fenced cities, in honourable and affluent situations, to prevent their uniting against Abijah: but perhaps he also confided in them, to retain these cities in their duty, and to defend them against the common enemy. Whatever were his motive, it was deemed good policy by his contemporaries.—Scott.

CHAP. XII. INVASION OF SHISHAK.—Ver. 2. It is probable that Shishak was of another family than Pharaoh, whose daughter Solomon had married; and was excited to this invasion by the reports of the immense treasures which that prince had collected at Jerusalem, with the division in his dominions, and the weakness of Rehoboam's administration. But the Lord gave him power to execute his rapacious purposes, which he would not have done, if the people had not transgressed against him. Ver. 3, 4. It is likely that several of Rehoboam's sons were slain, or taken captive, by Shishak, when he took the cities in which they governed. Ver. 5, 6. Whilst the king and his nobles were consulting what measures to adopt in this dangerous extremity, and perhaps were about to surrender to the conqueror, the prophet, in a few words, reminded them that Shishak's power over them was the effect of the Lord's righteous indignation, who was contending with them for their apostacy. The time and circumstances indeed of their affliction evidently proclaimed this truth, yet they had not before attended to it: but this message had an immediate effect upon them; for they humbled themselves, and acknowledged the justice of God in their punishment. An external reformation, and a regard to the worship at the temple, during the remainder of Rehoboam's reign, were consequent to this humiliation; but it went no further, at least with him. Ver. 7—11. It is probable that Shishak had intended to give up the city to be plundered by his army: but God suddenly disposed him to greater moderation and clemency, than could possibly have been expected from such a man in his circumstances. So that he contented himself with emptying the treasures of the temple and of the king, and carrying away the golden shields which Solomon had made for magnificence rather than for use and he did not proceed to rob the temple of its sacred vessels. Neither did he deprive the inhabitants of their private property; but perhaps he exacted a sum of money, in token of their becoming his servants. He was, however, permitted thus far to prevail, that Rehoboam and his subjects might experience the different effects of keeping close to the worship of God, as in the prosperous days of David and Solomon; and of renouncing his service, and in consequence being reduced under the power of the conqueror, and preserved from entire ruin merely by his unexpected clemency, on their unreserved submission.—Scott.

CHAP. XIII.

Abijah succeeding, maketh war against Jeroboam, 1; and overcometh him, 13.

NOW [a]in the eighteenth year of king Jeroboam began Abijah to reign over Judah.

2 He reigned three years in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was [b]Michaiah the daughter of Uriel of [c]Gibeah. [d]And there was war between Abijah and Jeroboam.

3 And Abijah set [*]the battle in array with an army of valiant men of war, even [e]four hundred thousand chosen men: Jeroboam also set the battle in array against him with [f]eight hundred thousand chosen men, being mighty men of valour.

4 ¶ And Abijah stood up upon mount [g]Zemaraim, which is in mount Ephraim, and said, [h]Hear me,[1] thou Jeroboam, and all Israel;

5 [i]Ought ye not to know that [j]the LORD God of Israel gave the kingdom over Israel [k]to David for ever, even to him and to his sons by [l]a covenant of salt?

6 Yet Jeroboam the son of Nebat, the servant of Solomon the son of David, is risen up, and hath [m]rebelled against his lord.

7 And there are gathered unto him [n]vain men, [o]the children of Belial, and have strengthened themselves against Rehoboam the son of Solomon, when Rehoboam was [p]young and tenderhearted, and [q]could not withstand them.

8 And now ye think to withstand [r]the kingdom of the LORD in the hand of the sons of David; and ye be [s]a great multitude, and there are [t]with you golden calves, which Jeroboam made you for gods.

9 Have ye not [u]cast out the priests of the LORD, the sons of Aaron, and the Levites, and have [v]made you priests after the manner of the nations of other lands? so that whosoever cometh to [†]consecrate himself [x]with a young bullock and seven rams, the same may be a priest of them that are [y]no gods.

10 But as for us, [z]the LORD is our God, and we have not forsaken him; and [a]the priests, which minister unto the LORD, are the sons of Aaron, and the Levites wait upon their business:

11 And [b]they burn unto the LORD every morning and every evening burnt-sacrifices and [c]sweet incense: the [d]shew-bread also set they in order upon the pure table; and [e]the candlestick of gold with the lamps thereof, to burn every evening: for [f]we keep the charge of the LORD our God; but ye have forsaken him.

12 And, behold, [g]God himself is with us [h]for our captain, and [i]his priests with sounding trumpets to cry alarm against you. O children of Israel, [k]fight ye not against the LORD God of your fathers; for [l]ye shall not prosper.

13 ¶ But Jeroboam caused [m]an ambushment[2] to come about behind them: so they were before Judah, and the ambushment was behind them.

14 And when Judah [n]looked back, behold, the battle was before and behind: and they [o]cried unto the LORD, and [p]the priests sounded with the trumpets.

15 Then the men of Judah gave a shout: and [q]as the men of Judah shouted,[3] it came to pass, that [r]God smote Jeroboam and all Israel before Abijah and Judah.

16 And the children of Israel fled before Judah: and [s]God delivered them into their hand.

17 And Abijah and his people slew them with a great slaughter: so there fell down slain of Israel [t]five hundred thousand chosen men.

18 Thus the children of Israel were brought under at that time, and the children of Judah prevailed, [u]because they relied upon the LORD God of their fathers.

19 And Abijah pursued after Jeroboam, and [x]took cities from him, Beth-el with the towns thereof, and Jeshanah with the towns thereof, and [y]Ephraim with the towns thereof.

20 Neither did Jeroboam recover strength again in the days of Abijah: and [z]the LORD struck him, and [a]he died.

21 ¶ But Abijah [b]waxed mighty, and married [c]fourteen wives, and [d]begat twenty and two sons, and sixteen daughters.

22 And the rest of the acts of Abijah, and his ways, and his sayings, are written in the [‡]story of the prophet [e]Iddo.

CHARACTER OF REHOBOAM.—The story of Rehoboam's reign is here concluded, much as the story of the other reign concludes. Two things especially are observable here. 1. That he was at length well "fixed in his kingdom," ver. 13. His fenced cities in Judah did not answer his expectation, so he now "strengthened himself in Jerusalem," and made it his business to fortify that; and there he reigned seventeen years in "the city which the Lord had chosen to put his name there." This intimates his honour and privilege, that he had his royal seat in the holy city, which yet was but an aggravation of his impiety; near the temple, but far from God. Frequent skirmishes there were between his subjects and Jeroboam's, such as amounted to "continued wars," ver. 15; but he held his own, and reigned; and, as it should seem, did not so grossly 'forsake the law of God" as he had done, ver. 1, in his fourth year. 2. That he was never rightly fixed in his religion, ver. 14; he never quite cast off God; and yet in this he did evil, that he "prepared not, he engaged not, his heart to seek the Lord." See what the fault is laid upon. (1.) He did not serve the Lord, because he did not seek the Lord. He did not pray, as Solomon did, for wisdom and grace. If we prayed better, we should be every way better. Or, he did not consult the word of God, did not seek to that as his oracle, nor take directions from that. (2.) He made nothing of his religion, because he did not set his heart to it; never minded it with any closeness of application, had never any hearty disposition to it, nor ever came up to a steady resolution in it.—Henry.

CHAP. XIII. WAR BETWEEN JEROBOAM AND ABIJAH.—Ver. 4—12. Jeroboam seems to have been the aggressor in this war: yet Abijah had marched into his country; and from a hill, whence Jeroboam and many of the Israelites could hear him, he spake to them as one who wished to bring the contest to an amicable conclusion. At least this seems to have been his ostensible design; though his speech was well suited to encourage his own troops, and to dismay those of Jeroboam. Abijah bears a bad character in Kings; yet, on this occasion, he spoke religiously; and he seems to have had a kind of confidence in God, grounded on the maintenance of his ordinances, and the number of pious worshippers, in his kingdom. The basis of his address was truth; but there was much false colouring in his manner of stating it, according to the too general custom of eloquent orators. For the covenant respecting the kingdom, made with David in behalf of his posterity, (except as it related to the Messiah,) was conditional; and neither Solomon, Rehoboam, nor Abijah, had been attentive to the restipulations. "A covenant of salt" is one solemnly ratified by a sacrifice and a feast, at both of which salt was used; that is to say, an "unchangeable covenant;" but the Lord evidently did not consider himself irreversibly engaged to continue the kingdom of all Israel to David's posterity.—Jeroboam had indeed acted wickedly in his manner of seizing and governing the kingdom of Israel: yet, it had been granted to him by God himself, and Abijah never mentioned that circumstance. The persons who revolted from Rehoboam, and made Jeroboam king, had acted with great precipitation and ingratitude; but perhaps it was not candid to call them indiscriminately "vain men, the children of Belial." Rehoboam had given them no small provocation; he was surely old enough to have behaved more wisely, if he had not been actuated by a proud domineering disposition: and it was not so much owing either to his lenity, his timidity, or his weakness, that he had not prosecuted his pretensions by war: as to the Divine prohibition. But Abijah's words were more forcible, when he exposed the apostacy and idolatry of the kingdom of Israel; their impiety and sacrilege in excluding the priests of the Lord from their possessions; and the shameful manner in which any worthless man was made a priest, who could and would bring the sacrifice appointed by way of consecration: for, by these crimes Jeroboam and his subjects were drawing down the vengeance of heaven upon them. But what Abijah urged, concerning the state of true religion in Judah, was not strictly just; and, as spoken by him, it savoured of ostentation. Abijah himself was not a godly man; and idolatry was evidently connived at in his days. Yet it was true that the men of Judah had the priests, ordinances, and worship of God among them; that there were numbers of pious worshippers in the land; that their's was the more righteous cause; that the LORD was on their side, and their Captain, whilst the Israelites fought against him; and that the presence of the priests blowing the sacred trumpets, according to the law, was a token of his presence with them, and favour to them. The expression, "after the manner of the nations," ver. 9, shows that the laws of Moses were not made according to the customs of the Gentiles, as many suppose; but entirely distinct from them: and that the similarity which in many instances has been traced actually arose from the idolaters, in several particulars, adopting or imitating the usages of Israel.

PIETY SUPERIOR TO POLICY.—Ver. 13—22. Jeroboam, like a profane politician, disregarded all Abijah's pleas, and rested his whole dependence on the valour of his troops, and the skilfulness of his arrangements. Whilst Abijah therefore was speaking about peace, he was preparing for action: and to make, as he supposed, sure of [illegible] to the superiority of his numbers he added an ambushment, that he might [illegible] and destroy the whole army of Judah, probably intending to seize upon [illegible] also. But the people cried unto the Lord in this extremity, [illegible] from him alone; whilst the sounding of the sacred [illegible] with confidence of success: and, according to [illegible]

CHAP. XIV.

Asa destroyeth idolatry, 1; he overcometh Zerah, and spoileth the Ethiopians, 9.

SO Abijah [a]slept with his fathers, and they buried him in the city of David: and [b]Asa his son reigned in his stead. In his days the land was quiet ten years.

2 And Asa did that which was [c]good and right in the eyes of the LORD his God:

3 For [d]he took away the altars of the strange gods, and [e]the high places, and [f]brake down the [g]images, and [g]cut down the groves:

4 And [h]commanded Judah to [i]seek the LORD God of their fathers, and [k]to do the law and the commandment.

5 Also he took away out of all the cities of Judah the high places and the [†]images: and the kingdom was quiet before him.

6 ¶ And [l]he built fenced cities in Judah: [m]for the land had rest, and he had no war in those years; because [n]the LORD had given him rest.

7 Therefore [o]he said unto Judah, Let us build these cities, and make about them walls, and towers, gates, and bars, [p]while the land is yet before us; because we have sought the LORD our God, [q]we have sought him, and [r]he hath given us rest on every side. So they built and prospered.

8 ¶ And Asa had an army of men that bare targets and spears: [s]out of Judah three hundred thousand; and out of Benjamin, that bare shields and drew bows, two hundred and fourscore thousand: all these were mighty men of valour.

9 ¶ And there came out against them [t]Zerah the Ethiopian with an host of a thousand thousand, and three hundred chariots; and came unto [u]Mareshah.

10 Then Asa went out against him, and they set the battle in array in the valley of [x]Zephathah at Mareshah.

11 And Asa [x]cried unto the LORD his God, and said, LORD, it is [y]nothing with thee to help, whether with many, or with [a]them that have no power: help us, O LORD our God; for we [b]rest on thee, and [c]in thy name we go against this multitude. O LORD, thou art our God; [d]let not [‡]man prevail against thee.

12 So [e]the LORD smote[1] the Ethiopians before Asa, and before Judah; and the Ethiopians fled.

13 And Asa and the people that were with him pursued them unto [f]Gerar: and the Ethiopians were overthrown, that they could not recover themselves,[2] for they were [§]destroyed [g]before the LORD and before [h]his host; and they carried away very much spoil.

14 And they smote all the cities round about Gerar; for [i]the fear of the LORD came upon them: and they spoiled all the cities; for there was [k]exceeding much spoil in them.

15 They smote also [l]the tents of cattle, and [m]carried away sheep and camels in abundance, and returned to Jerusalem.

CHAP. XV.

Asa, with others, makes a solemn covenant with God, 4; he removeth Maachah his mother from being queen for her idolatry, 16.

AND [a]the Spirit of God came upon Azariah the son of Oded:

2 And he went out [*]to meet Asa, and said unto him, [b]Hear ye me, Asa,[1] and all Judah and Benjamin; The LORD is with you, while ye be with him; and [d]if ye seek him, he will be found of you; but [e]if ye forsake him, he will forsake you.

3 Now for [f]a long season Israel hath been without the [g]true God, and without [h]a teaching priest, and [i]without law.

4 But when they [j]in their trouble did turn unto the LORD God of Israel, and sought him, he was [k]found of them.

5 And in those times there was [l]no peace to him that went out, nor to him that came in, but [m]great vexations were upon all the inhabitants of the countries.

6 And [n]nation was [†]destroyed of nation, and city of city: for [o]God did vex them with all adversity.

7 Be [p]ye strong therefore, and let not your hands be weak: for [q]your work shall be rewarded.

8 ¶ And when Asa heard these words, and the prophecy of [r]Oded the prophet,[2] he [s]took courage, and put away [t]the [‡]abominable idols out of all the land of Judah and Benjamin, and out of [u]the cities which he had taken from mount Ephraim, and renewed [x]the altar of the LORD, that was before the porch of the LORD.

9 And he gathered all Judah and Benjamin, and [y]the strangers with them out of Ephraim and Manasseh, and out of Simeon: for [z]they fell to him out of Israel in abundance, when [a]they saw that the LORD his God was with him.

10 So they gathered themselves together at Jerusalem in [b]the third month, in the fifteenth year of the reign of Asa.

11 And they [c]offered unto the LORD [§]the same time, of the spoil which they had brought, [d]seven hundred oxen, and seven thousand sheep.

12 And [e]they entered into a covenant to [f]seek the LORD God of their fathers with all their heart and with all their soul:

Israelites in such a manner, that they were unable to resist or to flee; and thus five hundred thousand were slain in one day, which is the largest slaughter that history records to have been ever made in any one battle. This decisive blow gave Judah so great a superiority, that it can only be ascribed to a divine interposition, that the kingdom of Israel was not entirely subverted. Many cities, however, were subdued, and among the rest Beth-el fell into the hands of the victor; yet we do not read that he removed the golden calf, and probably the city was soon conceded to Jeroboam. That prince, however, never recovered from this blow, for the Lord soon after smote him, and he died: yet Abijah died nearly two years before him, and did not long enjoy the fruits of his victory, for which he made very ungrateful returns. Though destitute of piety, he seems to have possessed great vigour and capacity. During his short reign he became very powerful; he had a numerous family; and his ways and sayings were so remarkable as to be particularly recorded by the prophet Iddo; of whom, however, we have no further knowledge.—Scott.

CHAP. XIV. ASA'S PIETY.—Ver. 2, 1. He removed and abolished idolatry. Since Solomon admitted it in the latter end of his reign, nothing had been done to suppress it, and so, we presume, it had got ground; strange gods were worshipped, and had their altars, images, and groves; and the temple-service, though kept up by the priests, chap. xiii. 10, was neglected by many of the people. Asa, as soon as he had power in his hands, made it his business to destroy all those idolatrous altars and images, ver. 3, 5, they being a great provocation to a jealous God, and a great temptation to a careless unthinking people. He hoped, by destroying the idols, to reform the idolaters, which he aimed at rather than to ruin them. 2. He revived and established the pure worship of God; and since the priests did their part in attending God's altars, he obliged the people to do theirs, ver. 4; "He commanded Judah to seek the Lord God of their fathers," and not the gods of the heathen, and "to do the law and the commandments;" that is, to observe all divine institutions, which many had utterly neglected. In doing this, "the land was quiet before him," ver. 5, though they were much in love with their idols, and very loath to leave them, yet the convictions of their consciences aided with the commands of Asa, and they could not for shame refuse to comply with them.—Henry.

HIS VICTORY.—Ver. 9—15. It is by no means certain, whether the Ethiopians or Cushites of Africa, or those near Arabia, are here intended: but they who suppose the former to be meant, conjecture that Zerah had subjugated his neighbours, the Egyptians; had taken possession of the cities and territories bordering on Egypt; and that he intended still further to extend his conquests, when he had seized upon the kingdom of Judah.—Asa's army was formidable, though not equal to Zerah's immense preparations. He, however, placed no confidence in them, but relied only on the protection of God. His prayer is the genuine language of faith. He was conscious that his aim had been to glorify the Lord, and promote his worship in the time of his prosperity; and this encouraged him to look upon God as his reconciled Friend and Father. Having put himself and his people under his protection, he was persuaded that none could prevail against them without seeming at least to prevail against God. If his army had been superior to that of the enemy, it could not have secured the victory; if it had consisted of a few enfeebled dispirited troops, the Lord could have helped by them: for it was "nothing with him to help with many, or with them that had no power." Either way he desired to confide wholly in the almighty, and to give him the glory of the victory. The event accorded to his faith: the Lord fought by Asa's subjects as his host, ver. 13; the Ethiopians were entirely overthrown and dispersed; the spoil which had been deposited in Gerar of the Philistines, and in other cities in that vicinity, was taken; and this most formidable invasion greatly enriched Judah.—Scott.

CHAP. XV. AZARIAH THE PROPHET.—Ver. 1—7. It is not easy to determine what times or events were intended by the prophet in these verses. Some think that he referred to the state of Israel in the days of the Judges, when the people for a long time generally forsook, and almost forgot the true God; the priests were not public teachers as they ought to have been, and the law was greatly neglected. At the same time the people were exposed to the invasions of various enemies, who destroyed each other, yet alternately harassed and oppressed them: because, for their sins, "God did vex them with all adversity;" and consequently there was no peace to those who journeyed or went out upon business. Now these times of trouble and vexation seemed to be returning again, (after the prosperity and peace enjoyed under David and Solomon,) in the divisions, apostasies, idolatries, and calamities of the preceding reigns. And the people might be assured, that the Lord would deal with them by the same measure as he had dealt with their fathers: if they forsook his worship, and ran into idolatry and implety, they would be left to all their former miseries; but if they returned to God and served him, he would protect and prosper them: even as when Israel under the Judges, in their trouble, sought the Lord, he was always ready to remove their afflictions. This seems the most satisfactory interpretation. But others suppose that the prophet referred to the state of the kingdom of Israel: they had rejected the true God, expelled the teaching priesthood, and cast off the law of the Lord; and their subsequent calamities

Asa, by a league with the Syrians, diverteth Baasha from building of Ramah, 1; he seeketh not to God, but to the physicians, 11; his death and burial, 13.

IN the six and thirtieth year of the reign of Asa [a]Baasha king of Israel came up against Judah, and built Ramah, [b]to the intent that he might let none go out or come in to Asa king of Judah.

2 Then Asa [c]brought out silver and gold out of the treasures of the house of the LORD and of the king's house, and sent to Ben-hadad king of Syria, that dwelt at *Damascus, saying,

3 There is [d]a league between me and thee,[1] as there was between my father and thy father: behold, I have sent thee silver and gold; go, [e]break thy league with Baasha king of Israel, that he may depart from me.

4 And Ben-hadad [f]hearkened unto king Asa, and sent the captains of [†]his armies against the cities of Israel; and they smote [g]Ijon, and [h]Dan, and Abelmaim, and all the [i]store cities of Naphtali.

5 And it came to pass, when Baasha heard it, [j]that he left off building of Ramah, and let his work cease.

6 Then Asa the king took all Judah; and [k]they carried away the stones of Ramah, and the timber thereof, wherewith Baasha was building; and he built therewith [l]Geba and [m]Mizpah.

7 ¶ And at that time [n]Hanani the seer[2] came to Asa king of Judah, and said unto him, [o]Because thou hast relied on the king of Syria, and not [p]relied on the LORD thy God, [‡]therefore is [q]the host of the king of Syria escaped out of thine hand.

8 Were not [r]the Ethiopians and the Lubims [‡]a huge host, with very many chariots and horsemen? yet, [s]because thou didst rely on the LORD, he delivered them into thine hand.

9 For [t]the eyes of the LORD run to and fro throughout the whole earth, [§]to shew himself strong in the behalf of them [u]whose heart is perfect toward him. Herein [v]thou hast done foolishly: therefore from [x]henceforth thou shalt have wars.

10 Then Asa was [y]wroth with the seer, and [z]put him in a prison house; for he was in a rage with him because of this thing. And Asa ‖oppressed some of the people [a]the same time.

11 ¶ And, behold, [b]the acts of Asa, first and last, lo, they are written in the book of the kings [c]of Judah and Israel.

12 And Asa in the thirty and ninth year of his reign was [d]diseased in his feet, until his disease was exceeding great: yet [e]in his disease he sought not to the LORD, but to the [f]physicians.

13 ¶ And Asa [g]slept with his fathers, and died in the one and fortieth year of his reign.

14 And they buried him in [h]his own sepulchres, which he had [*]made for himself in the city of David, and laid him in the bed which was filled with [l]sweet odours, and divers kinds of spices prepared by [k]the apothecaries' art; and they made [l]a very great burning for him.[3]

CHAP. XVII.

Jehoshaphat reigneth well, and prospereth, 1; he sendeth Levites to teach in Judah, 7; his captains and armies, 12.

AND [a]Jehoshaphat his son reigned in his stead, [b]and strengthened himself against Israel.

2 And he [c]placed forces in all the fenced cities of Judah, and set garrisons in the land of Judah, and [d]in the cities of Ephraim, which Asa his father had taken.

3 And [e]the LORD was with Jehoshaphat, because [f]he walked in the first ways[1] of [*]his father David, and [g]sought not unto Baalim;

4 But sought to the LORD God of his father, and [h]walked in his commandments, and [i]not after the doings of Israel.

5 Therefore [k]the LORD established the kingdom in his hand; and all Judah [†]brought to Jehoshaphat [l]presents; and [m]he had riches and honour in abundance.

were intended as a warning for Judah; yet even whenever Israel should repent and seek God, he would be found of them.—Others again suppose the passage to be prophetic of the Babylonish captivity, and even of the present dispersion and future conversion of the Jews, to which the words are doubtless applicable. Perhaps the prophet had some reference to God's general method of dealing with Israel in all ages, and then no wonder that his expressions are descriptive of several distinct transactions. It is plain, however, that warning and encouragement were intended for Asa and his subjects; and the prophet's scope was to excite them properly to improve their present success, by attempting a more effectual reformation, which would assuredly be rewarded with proportionable prosperity. Perhaps the prophet was called Oded, as well as his father, and Azariah by way of distinction: though some think that Oded confirmed the words of his son by a prophecy to the same effect.—Scott.

CHAP. XVI. FAILURE OF ASA'S FAITH.—Ver. 7—10. Asa's misconduct entirely originated from unbelief. Had he relied on the Lord, he would have defended him against the Israelites, and enabled him likewise to prevail against the king of Syria, who was then in league with Baasha, by which he might have enriched his treasures, instead of emptying them to purchase his assistance. This was the more inexcusable in him, seeing he had before experienced the prevalence of faith and prayer in his victory over the Ethiopians. Indeed, Asa could not be ignorant of God's omnipresent and ever-watchful providence, by which he notices all the wants, dangers, and trials of those who uprightly trust and serve him; and is ever at hand to give speedy assistance to them, as the case may require. In this Asa greatly failed; and the prophet plainly told him that he had acted foolishly, and thenceforth should have wars. His subsequent conduct seems to be without parallel in Scripture. No one decidedly pious man, as I recollect, is recorded to have so resented a reproof from a prophet in the name of God, as to have used severity against him for it; yet the expressions concerning Asa's character are so strong that we must consider him as an exception, and a lamentable proof that there is no kind of sin which a believer is not capable of committing, if left to himself; so that we must not form our judgment of men's characters from any detached actions, but the general tenour of their conduct.—In his rage he committed the prophet to prison, or rather, he "put him into the stocks," for that is the meaning of the original word. Perhaps excusing himself to others, and to his own conscience, by criminating the prophet as rude, intermeddling, and insolent: and, perhaps, when some of the people censured his conduct, he oppressed them also, as determined to crush all opposition by violent means. It is probable, however, that he speedily released the prophet; and as he lived at least fifteen years after this event, (for so long he lived after Baasha's death,) and as we do not find that he oppressed or persecuted any person except on this occasion, we may conclude that he repented, and adhered to the service of God to the close of his life. But, having openly dishonoured him, the latter part of his reign was obscure, inglorious, and troublesome.—It is not said what wars he was engaged in, but probably they were more perplexing to him than fatal to his people. Ver. 12. "Asa had the gout, which increased to such a height that he died of it; which was a just punishment for putting the prophet's feet in the stocks." Under this excruciating correction he relapsed into his former sin of relying on man, and not on the Lord. If he consulted physicians, properly so called, his sin entirely consisted in his reliance on them, instead of seeking a blessing from God on the means which they employed. But perhaps they were such persons as attempted, by charms, or other superstitious devices, to alleviate his pain; and then the thing itself, likewise, was exceedingly sinful. As the Lord has been pleased to throw a cloud upon his memory, we will not further attempt to penetrate it; though, we trust, that he did not die without repenting of this sin also. Ver. 13, 14. Some have considered this funeral as an argument of the improper state of Asa's heart, even at death, supposing that he appointed it for himself, out of vain glory, and in conformity to heathen customs. Indeed, it is said, that he digged a sepulchre for himself, as Manasseh and others also did, but probably the pomp of his interment, which had nothing idolatrous or unlawful in it, was intended by the people as an expression of respect for his memory, for, notwithstanding the blemishes recorded in this chapter, he had been an excellent, valuable, and successful prince.—Scott.

CHAP. XVII. THE GOOD JEHOSHAPHAT.—What a useful man he was; not only a good man, but a good king: he not only was good himself, but did good in his generation, did a great deal of good. 1. He took away the "teachers of lies," so images are called, Heb. ii. 18, the "high places" and "the groves," ver. 6. It is meant of those in which idols were worshipped; for those that were dedicated to the true God only were not taken away, chap. xx. 33. It was only idolatry that he abolished; nothing debauched the nation more than those idolatrous groves or images which he took away. 2. He sent forth teachers of truth. When he inquired into the state of religion in his kingdom, he found his people generally very ignorant, they "knew not that they did evil;" even in the last good reign, there had been little care taken to instruct them in their duty; and therefore Jehoshaphat resolves to begin his work at the right end, deals with them as reasonable creatures, will not lead them blindfolded, no, not into a reformation, but endeavours to have them well taught, [illegible] that was the way to 8 And with them he sent Levites, even Shemaiah, and Nethaniah, and Zebadiah, and Asahel, and Shemiramoth, and Jehonathan, and Adonijah, and Tobijah, and Tob-adonijah, Levites; and with them Elishama and Jehoram, [s]priests.

17 And of Benjamin;[3] Eliada a mighty man of valour, and with him [h]armed men with bow and shield two hundred thousand.

18 And next him was Jehozabad, and with him an hundred and fourscore thousand ready prepared for the war.[4]

19 These waited on the king, beside those whom the king [i]put in the fenced cities throughout all Judah.

NOW Jehoshaphat had [a]riches and honour in abundance, and [b]joined affinity with Ahab.

2 And [*]after certain years [c]he went down to Ahab to Samaria. And [d]Ahab killed sheep and oxen for him in abundance, and for the people that he had with him, and [e]persuaded him to go up with him to [f]Ramoth-gilead.

3 And Ahab king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat king of Judah, Wilt thou go with me to Ramoth-gilead? And he answered him, [g]I am as thou art,[1] and my people as thy people; and we will be with thee in the war.

4 ¶ And Jehoshaphat said unto the king of Israel, [h]Enquire, I pray thee, at the word of the LORD to-day.

5 Therefore the king of Israel gathered together of [i]prophets four hundred men, and said unto them, [j]Shall we go to Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall I forbear? And they said, [k]Go up; for God will deliver it into the king's hand.

6 ¶ But Jehoshaphat said, [l]Is there not here a prophet of the LORD [†]besides, that we might enquire of him?

7 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, There is yet [m]one man by whom we may enquire of the LORD: but [n]I hate him; for he never prophesied [o]good unto [p]me, but always evil: the same is Micaiah the son of Imla. And Jehoshaphat said, [q]Let not the king say so.

8 And the king of Israel called for one of his [†]officers, and said, [§]Fetch quickly Micaiah the son of Imla.

9 And the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat king of Judah [r]sat either of them on his throne, [s]clothed in their robes, and they sat in ‖a void place at the entering in of the gate of Samaria: and [t]all the prophets prophesied before them.

10 And Zedekiah the son of Chenaanah had made him [u]horns of iron,[2] and said, [x]Thus saith the LORD, With these thou shalt push Syria until [*]they be consumed.

11 And [y]all the prophets prophesied so, saying, Go up to Ramoth-gilead, and prosper: for the LORD shall deliver it into the hand of the king.

12 And the messenger that went to call Micaiah spake of him, saying, [z]Behold, the words of the prophets declare good to the king with one [†]assent; let thy word therefore, I pray thee, be like one of theirs, and speak thou good.

13 And Micaiah said, As the LORD liveth, [a]even what my God saith, that will I speak.

14 And when he was come to the king, the king said unto him, Micaiah, shall we go to Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall I forbear? And he said, [b]Go ye up, and prosper, and they shall be delivered into your hand.

have them well cured; in this good work he employed, (1.) His princes; those about him he sent forth, "to teach in the cities of Judah," ver. 7. He ordered them, in the administration of justice, not only to correct the people when they did ill, but to teach them how to do better, and to give a reason for what they did, that the people might be informed of the difference between good and evil. The princes or judges upon the bench have a great opportunity of teaching people their duty to God and man, and it is not out of their province, for the laws of God are to be looked upon as laws of the land. (2.) The "Levites" and "priests" went "with the princes," and "taught in Judah, having the book of the law with them," ver. 8, 9. They were teachers by office, Deut. xxxiii. 10, it was part of the work for which they had their maintenance; the priests and the Levites had little else to do. But it seems they had neglected it, pretended, perhaps, that they could not get the people to hear them. What an abundance of good may be done when Moses and Aaron thus go hand in hand in the doing of it, when princes with their power, and priests and Levites with their scripture learning, agree to teach the people the good knowledge of God and their duty! These itinerant judges, and itinerant preachers, together, were instrumental to diffuse a blessed light throughout the cities of Judah. But it is said, "they had the book of the law of the Lord with them," First, For their own direction, that from thence they might fetch all the instructions they gave to the people, and not "teach for doctrines the commandments of men." Secondly, For the conviction of the people, that they might see that they had a divine warrant for what they said, and delivered to them that only which they received from the Lord. Note, Ministers, when they go to teach the people, should have their Bibles with them.—How happy he was in the favour of his God, who signally owned and blessed him. "The Lord was with him," ver. 3. "The word of the Lord was his helper," so the Chaldee paraphrase. "The Lord established the kingdom in his hand," ver. 5. Those stand firm that have the presence of God with them. If the "beauty of the Lord our God be upon us," that will "establish the work of our hands," and establish us in our integrity. How happy he was, "in the affections of his people," ver. 5; "All Judah brought him presents" in acknowledgment of his kindness in sending preachers among them.—Henry.

CHAP. XVIII. JEHOSHAPHAT'S SINFUL ALLIANCE WITH AHAB.—Ver. 1—34. Here is, 1. Jehoshaphat growing greater. It was said before, chap. xvii. 5, he had "riches and honour in abundance;" and here it is said again: his wealth and honour increased upon him by piety and good management. But, 2. Not growing wiser, else he would not have joined with Ahab, that degenerate Israelite who had sold himself to work wickedness. What good could he get by a man that was so bad? What good could he do to a man that was so obstinately an idolater, a persecutor? With him he joined in affinity, that is, married his son Jehoram to Ahab's daughter, Athaliah, the worst match that ever was made by any of the house of David; I wonder what Jehoshaphat could promise himself by it; (1.) Perhaps pride made the match, as it does many a one which speeds accordingly. His religion forbade him to marry his son to a daughter of any of the heathen princes that were about him, "Thou shalt not take their daughters to thy sons;" and having riches and honour in abundance, he thought it a disparagement to marry him to a subject. A king's daughter it must be, and therefore Ahab's, little considering that Jezebel was his mother. (2.) Some think he did it in policy, hoping by this expedient to unite the kingdoms in his son, Ahab perhaps flattering him with hopes that he would make him his heir, when he intended no such thing. This match drew Jehoshaphat, First, Into an intimate familiarity with Ahab; he made him a visit at Samaria. And Ahab, proud of the honour which Jehoshaphat did him, gave him a very splendid entertainment, according to the splendour of those times; he "killed sheep and oxen for him," plain meat, "in abundance," ver. 2. In this Jehoshaphat did not walk so closely as he should have done in the ways of his father David, for he "hated the congregation of evil-doers, and would not sit with the wicked," Ps. xxvi. 5, nor desired to "eat of their dainties," Ps. cxli. 4. Secondly, Into a league with Ahab against the Syrians. Ahab persuaded him to join forces with him in an expedition for the recovery of Ramoth-gilead, a city in the tribe of Gad, on the other side Jordan. Did not Ahab know that that, and all the other cities of Israel, did, of right, belong to Jehoshaphat, as heir of the house of David? With what face then could he ask Jehoshaphat to assist him in recovering it for himself, whose title to the crown was usurped and precarious? Yet Jehoshaphat, an easy man, yields to go with him; "I am as thou art," ver. 3. Some men's kindnesses are dangerous, as well as their society infectious. The feast Ahab made for Jehoshaphat was designed only to wheedle him into this expedition. The "kisses of an enemy are deceitful."

LESSONS OF INSTRUCTION.—Ver. 4—27. We may take occasion to think, 1. Of the great duty of acknowledging God in all our ways, "and inquiring at his word," whatever we undertake. Jehoshaphat was not willing to proceed till he had done this, ver. 4. By particular believing prayer, by an unbiassed consulting of the scripture and our own consciences, and by an observant regard to the hints of providence, we may make such inquiries, and very much to our satisfaction. 2. Of the great danger of bad company even to good men; those that have most wisdom, grace, and resolution, cannot be sure that they cannot converse familiarly with wicked people, and get no hurt

15 ¶ And the king said to him, How many times [c]shall I adjure thee that thou say nothing but the truth to me in the name of the LORD?

16 Then [d]he said, I did see all Israel scattered upon the mountains, [e]as sheep that have no shepherd: and the LORD said, These have no [f]master; let them return therefore every man to his house in peace.

17 And the king of Israel said to Jehoshaphat, [g]Did I not tell thee that he would not prophesy good unto me, [‡]but evil?

18 Again he said, Therefore [h]hear the word of the LORD;[3] [i]I saw the LORD sitting upon his throne, and [j]all the host of heaven standing on his right hand and on his left.

19 And the LORD said, [k]Who shall entice Ahab king of Israel, that he may [l]go up and fall at Ramoth-gilead? And one spake saying after this manner, and another saying after that manner.

20 Then [m]there came out a spirit, and stood before the LORD, and said, I will entice him. And the LORD said unto him, Wherewith?

21 And he said, I will go out, and be [n]a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets.[4] And the LORD said, [o]Thou shalt entice him, and thou shalt also prevail: go out, and do even so.

22 Now therefore, behold, [p]the LORD hath put a lying spirit in the mouth of these thy prophets, [q]and the LORD hath spoken evil against thee.

23 ¶ Then [r]Zedekiah the son of Chenaanah came near, and smote Micaiah upon the cheek, and said, [s]Which way went the Spirit of the LORD from me to speak unto thee?

24 And Micaiah said, [t]Behold, thou shalt see on that day when thou shalt go [§]into an inner chamber to hide thyself.

25 Then the king of Israel said, Take ye Micaiah, [u]and carry him back to Amon the governor of the city, and to Joash the king's son:

26 And say, Thus saith the king, [x]Put [y]this fellow in the prison, and feed him with [z]bread of affliction and with water of affliction, [a]until I return in peace.

27 And Micaiah said, [b]If thou certainly return in peace, then hath not the LORD spoken by me. And he said, [c]Hearken, all ye people.

28 ¶ So [d]the king of Israel and Jehoshaphat the king of Judah went up to Ramoth-gilead.

29 And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, [e]I will disguise myself, and will go to the battle; but [f]put thou on thy robes. So [g]the king of Israel disguised himself; and they went to the battle.

Wicked devices proceed from wicked men; but that they prevail and take effect, is owing to the hand of God directing and ordering what shall be the issue of them. ## CHAP. XIX.

AND Jehoshaphat the king of Judah returned to his house [a]in peace to Jerusalem.

2 And [b]Jehu the son of [c]Hanani [d]the seer went out to meet him, and said to king Jehoshaphat, [e]Shouldest thou help the ungodly, and love them that [f]hate the LORD? therefore [g]is wrath upon thee from before the LORD.

3 Nevertheless there are [h]good things found in thee, in that thou hast taken away the groves out of the land, and hast [i]prepared thine heart to seek God.

4 ¶ And Jehoshaphat dwelt at Jerusalem: and he [*]went out again through the people from [k]Beer-sheba to [l]mount Ephraim,[1] and [m]brought them back unto the LORD God of their fathers.

5 ¶ And [n]he set judges in the land throughout all the fenced cities of Judah, city by city;

6 And said to the judges, [o]Take heed what ye do: for [p]ye judge not for man, but for the LORD, who is with you in the [†]judgment.

7 Wherefore now [q]let the fear of the LORD be upon you; take heed and do it: for there is [r]no iniquity with the LORD our God, nor [s]respect of persons, nor [t]taking of gifts.[2] by them. Jehoshaphat here, in complaisance to Ahab, sits in his robes, patiently hearing the false prophets speaking lies in the name of the Lord, ver. 9, can scarcely find in his heart to give him a too mild and gentle reproof for hating a prophet of the Lord, ver. 7, and dares not rebuke that false prophet who basely abused that faithful seer, nor oppose Ahab who committed him to prison. 3. Of the unhappiness of those who are surrounded with flatterers, especially flattering prophets, who cry peace to them, and prophesy nothing but smooth things. Thus was Ahab cheated into his ruin, and justly; for he hearkened to such, and preferred them that humoured him, before a good prophet that gave him fair warning of his danger. Those do best for themselves, that give their friends leave, and particularly their ministers, to deal plainly and faithfully with them, and take it not only patiently but kindly. That counsel is not always best for us that is most pleasing to us. 4. Of the power of Satan, by the divine permission, "in the children of disobedience." One lying spirit can make 400 lying prophets, and make use of them to deceive Ahab, ver. 21. The devil becomes a murderer by being a liar, and destroys men by deceiving them. 5. Of the justice of God in giving those up to strong delusions, to believe a lie, who will not receive the love of the truth, but rebel against it, ver. 21. Let the "lying spirit prevail" to entice those to their ruin that will not be persuaded to their duty and happiness. 6. Of the hard case of faithful ministers, whose lot it has often been to be hated, and persecuted, and ill-treated, for being true to their God, and just and kind to the souls of men. Micaiah, for discharging a good conscience, was buffeted, imprisoned, and condemned to the bread and water of affliction. But he could with assurance appeal to the issue, as all those may do who are persecuted for their faithfulness, ver. 27.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—We should follow peace with all men: but we ought to have no intimacies with the workers of iniquity; for their caresses, flatteries, and feasts are more dangerous than their most imbittered rage; and in fact they are frequently the result of politic enmity, and at best proceed from mercenary self-love. Indeed, the most enormous wickedness is often veiled under a show of piety.—A vast majority of professed ministers, in many ages and places, have been teachers of lies; who, while they acted their parts with the name of God in their mouths, have secretly been prompted by Satan, "deceiving and being deceived." We should therefore be careful not only to "inquire of the LORD," but careful likewise by whom we inquire of him, and, likewise, that we inquire his will, before we commit ourselves by engagements that may be contrary to it.—They who flatter the humours of the rich and great will be most favoured; and they that offend their pride, or disturb their consciences, will be hated, and may lay their account with hard usage: nay, such pious persons as associate with ungodly people, must often witness and seem to approve of very abominable things. The event, however, will show faithful teachers in their proper light; so that even the wicked will be constrained to allow the propriety of their conduct. In the mean time, let them go on with confidence in God, simply declaring his whole message, and patiently bearing the cross; for "great will be their reward in heaven."—Satan is allowed to deceive those who reject the testimony of God's prophets.—No policy can avert the stroke of the Lord's vengeance, when the time arrives; nor can his people ever be destitute of a refuge. He both can and will extricate them even from those difficulties and perils into which they have sinfully brought themselves, when they earnestly and humbly call upon him: and, as he hath all hearts in his hand, he can easily rescue them in their most urgent distresses.—"O LORD God of hosts, blessed is the man that putteth his trust in thee!"—Scott.

CHAP. XIX. JEHOSHAPHAT'S ADMINISTRATION—Ver. 1. This peaceful return home exceeded Jehoshaphat's expectations, and was contrary to his deserts: and he was thus discriminated from Ahab, to whom he had said, "I am as thou art." Ver. 2. Jehu was the son of Hanani, who was cast into prison by Asa for reproving him; yet he was not afraid of bringing a similar message to Jehoshaphat. That prince's alliance with a notorious idolater was a bad example to his subjects, which exceedingly tended to counteract his endeavours for reformation; and Ahab's expedition was undertaken in defiance of the word of God, and attended with such circumstances, as rendered Jehoshaphat inexcusable in helping him. For this misconduct, "wrath was upon him from before the LORD:" not the wrath of an enemy or avenging judge, but that of an offended father; and the fatal effects of this affinity upon his family and kingdom, were as awful evidences of this wrath as could be experienced by one that did not finally perish. Ver. 4. Jehoshaphat went no more to Samaria, but stayed at home, and attended to the affairs of his own kingdom. Being assured that the Lord had graciously accepted of his endeavours for reformation, he made a circuit through his kingdom to perfect that work; and it seems that the people had relapsed into idolatry, regarding his intimacy with Ahab as a kind of dispensation to such as choose to avail themselves of it. Ver. 5-11. In process of time, irregularities and abuses in the magistracy had interrupted the regular administration of justice: but Jehoshaphat carefully reduced this likewise into order; and took care that judges, and courts of justice, should be established in every considerable town, for the benefit of the neighbourhood; but with appeal to the superior courts at Jerusalem. It seems that in all these courts the priests and Levites were joined with the principal persons of the other tribes: for the law of God was in an especial manner the statute law of the realm; according to which both ecclesiastical causes, or the "judg-

Jehoshaphat, invaded by the Moabites, proclaimeth a fast, 1; his prayer, 5; the overthrow of his enemies, 22; his reign, 31.

IT came to pass [a]after this also, that [b]the children of Moab, and the children of Ammon, and with them other besides the Ammonites, [c]came against Jehoshaphat to battle.

2 Then there came some that told Jehoshaphat, saying, There cometh a great multitude against thee from [d]beyond the sea on this side Syria; and, behold, they be in [e]Hazazon-tamar, which is [f]En-gedi.

3 And Jehoshaphat [g]feared, and set *himself to [h]seek the LORD, and [i]proclaimed a fast throughout all Judah.

4 And Judah gathered themselves together, to [j]ask help of the LORD: even out of all [k]the cities of Judah they came to seek the LORD.

5 ¶ And [l]Jehoshaphat stood in the congregation of Judah and Jerusalem, in the house of the LORD, before the new court.

6 And said, [m]O LORD God of our fathers, art not thou [n]God in heaven? and [o]rulest not thou over all the kingdoms of the heathen? and [p]in thine hand is there not power and might, so that [q]none is able to withstand thee?

7 Art not thou [r]our God, who didst [s]drive out the inhabitants of this land before thy people Israel, and [t]gavest it to the seed of Abraham [u]thy friend for ever?

8 And they dwelt therein, and have [v]built thee a sanctuary therein for thy name, saying,

9 [x]If, when evil cometh upon us, as the sword,[1] judgment, or pestilence, or famine, we stand before this house, and in thy presence, (for [y]thy name is in this house,) and cry unto thee in our affliction, then thou wilt hear and help.

10 And now, behold, the children of Ammon and Moab and mount Seir, [z]whom thou wouldest not let Israel invade, when they came out of the land of Egypt, but they turned from them, and destroyed them not;

11 Behold, I say, [a]how they reward us, to come [b]to cast us out of thy possession, which thou hast given us to inherit.

12 O our God, [c]wilt thou not judge them? for [d]we have no might against this great company that cometh against us; [e]neither know we what to do: but [f]our eyes are upon thee.

13 And [g]all Judah stood before the LORD, with their little ones, their wives, and their children.

14 ¶ [h]Then upon Jahaziel, the son of Zechariah, the son of Benaiah, the son of Jeiel, the son of Mattaniah, a Levite of the sons of Asaph, [i]came the Spirit of the LORD in the midst of the congregation;

15 And he said, Hearken ye, all Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem, and thou king Jehoshaphat, Thus saith the LORD unto you, [k]Be not afraid nor dismayed by reason of this great multitude; for [l]the battle is not yours, but God's.

16 Tomorrow go ye down[2] against them: behold, they come up by the [l]cliff of Ziz; and ye shall find them at the end of the [g]brook, before the wilderness of Jeruel.

17 Ye shall [m]not need to fight in this battle: set yourselves, [n]stand ye still, and see the salvation of the LORD with you, O Judah and Jerusalem: fear not, nor be dismayed; tomorrow go out against them: [o]for the LORD will be with you.

18 And Jehoshaphat [p]bowed his head with his face to the ground: and all Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem fell before the LORD, worshipping the LORD.

19 And [q]the Levites of the children of the Kohathites, and of the children of the [r]Korhites, stood up to praise the LORD God of Israel with [s]a loud voice on high.

20 ¶ And they rose early in the morning, and went forth into the wilderness of [t]Tekoa: and as they went forth, Jehoshaphat stood and said, [u]Hear me, O Judah, and ye inhabitants of Jerusalem: [x]Believe in the LORD your God, so shall ye be established; [y]believe his prophets,[3] so shall ye prosper.

[3] Belief is in Scripture always supposed to arise and begin from a willingness to know and be informed in the will of God, and to end in actual obedience to His commands so made known. ment of the LORD," the pleas of the crown or "the king's matters," and common pleas or "controversies," were to be determined. This settlement was completed when the king and his attendants returned to Jerusalem from the circuit of the land: and both in the country and at Jerusalem, the king solemnly exhorted, and charged the magistrates to do the duty of their office in the fear of the Lord; as acting by his authority, in his presence, under his protection, copying his impartial justice and equity, and looking forward to the account which they must shortly render to him. Some interpret blood and blood of relationship and titles to estates; but it seems rather to mean causes concerning murder, maiming, or accidentally killing any one.—The judges were required to warn the people not to transgress; as for other reasons, so, lest their brethren should be involved in the consequences of their crimes.—Scott.

CHAP. XX. JEHOSHAPHAT'S PREPARATIONS AGAINST AN INVASION.—Ver. 2—13. No mention is made of his mustering his forces, which yet it is most probable that he did, for God must be trusted in the use of means. But his great care was, to obtain the favour of God, and secure him on his side, which perhaps he was the more solicitous about, because he had been lately told that there was "wrath upon him from before the Lord," chap. xix. 2. But he is of the mind of his father David. If we must be corrected, yet "let us not fall into the hands of man." 1. He feared; consciousness of guilt made him fear; those that have least sin are most sensible of it: the surprise added to the fright. Holy fear is a spur to prayer and preparation, Heb. xi. 7. 2. "He set himself to seek the Lord," and, in the first place, to make him his friend. They that would seek the Lord so as to find him, and to find favour with him, must set themselves to seek him, must do it with fixedness of thought, with sincerity of intention, and with the utmost vigour and resolution to continue seeking him. 3. He "proclaimed a fast throughout all Judah," appointed a day of humiliation and prayer, that they might join together in confessing their sins, and "asking help of the Lord." Fasting from bodily refreshments, upon such extraordinary occasions, is a token of self-judging for the sins we have committed, (we own ourselves unworthy of the bread we eat, and that God might justly withhold it from us,) and of self-denial for the future; fasting for sin implies a resolution to fast from it, though it has been to us as a sweet morsel. Magistrates are to call the people to the duty of fasting and prayer upon such occasions that it may be a national act, and so may obtain national mercies. 4. The people readily assembled out of all the cities of Judah in the court of the temple, to join in prayer, ver. 4, and they "stood before the Lord," as beggars at his door, with their wives and children; they and their families were in danger, and therefore they bring them with them to seek the Lord. "Lord, we are indeed a provoking people, that deserve to be abandoned to ruin; but here are little ones that are innocent, let not them perish in the storm." Nineveh was spared for the sake of "the little ones," Jonah iv. 2. The place they met in was the "house of the Lord," before "the new court," which was perhaps lately added to the former courts, that, as some think, which was called the "court of the women;" thus they came within reach of that gracious promise which God made, in answer to Solomon's prayer, chap. vii. 15, "Mine ears shall be attentive to the prayer that is made in this place." Jehoshaphat himself was the mouth of the congregation to God, and did not devolve the work upon his chaplains. Though the kings were forbidden to burn incense, they were allowed to pray and preach; as Solomon, and Jehoshaphat here.

HIS BATTLE ARRAY.—Ver. 21. Never was army drawn out to the field of battle so as Jehoshaphat's army was. He had soldiers "ready prepared for war," chap. xvii. 18, but here is no notice taken of their military equipment, their swords or spears, their shields or bows. But Jehoshaphat took care, 1. That faith should be their armour; as they went forth, instead of calling them to handle their arms, and stand to them, to keep ranks, observe orders, and fight valiantly, he bids them "believe in the Lord God," and give credit to his word in the mouth of his prophets, then they should "prosper" and "be established," ver. 20. That is true courage which faith inspires a man with; nor will any thing contribute more to the establishing of the heart, in shaking times, than a firm belief of the power, and mercy, and promise of God. The heart was "fixed," that thus "trusteth in the Lord," and is kept in perfect peace. In our spiritual conflicts, this is the victory, this is the prosperity, even our faith. 2. That praise and thanksgiving should be their vanguard, ver. 21. Jehoshaphat called a council of war, and it was resolved to appoint "singers to go out before the army," to charge in the front, who had nothing else to do but to praise God, to praise his holiness, which is his beauty; to praise him as they did in the temple, that beauty of holiness, with that ancient and good doxology, which eternity itself will not wear thread-bear, "Praise the Lord; for his mercy endureth for ever." By this strange advance toward the field of battle, Jehoshaphat intended to express his firm reliance upon the word of God, (which enabled him to triumph before the battle,) to animate his own soldiers, to confound the enemy, and to engage God on their side; for praise pleases God better than all "burnt-offering and sacrifice."

HIS VICTORY.—Ver. 23. Never was army so unaccountably destroyed as that of the enemy; not by thunder, or hail, or the sword of an angel, not by dint of sword, or strength of arm, or any surprising alarm, like that which Gideon gave the Midianites; people, he [a]appointed singers unto the LORD, and [‖]that should praise [b]the beauty of holiness[4] as they went out before the army, and to say, [c]Praise the LORD; for his mercy endureth for ever.

22 ¶ And [*]when they began [†]to sing and to praise, [d]the LORD set ambushments[5] against the children of Ammon, Moab, and mount Seir, which were come against Judah; and they [‡]were smitten.

23 For the children of Ammon and Moab stood up against the inhabitants of [e]mount Seir, utterly to slay and destroy them: and when they had made an end of the inhabitants of Seir, every one helped [§]to destroy another.

24 And when Judah came toward the watch tower in the wilderness, they looked unto the multitude, and, behold, [f]they were dead bodies fallen to the earth, and [‖]none escaped.

25 And when Jehoshaphat and his people came to take away the spoil of them, [g]they found among them in abundance both riches with the dead bodies, and [h]precious jewels, which they stripped off for themselves, more than they could carry away: and they were three days in gathering of the spoil, it was so much.

26 ¶ And on the fourth day they assembled themselves in the valley of [*]Berachah; for there they [i]blessed the LORD: therefore [j]the name of the same place was called The valley of Berachah [k]unto this day.

27 Then they returned, every man of Judah and Jerusalem, and Jehoshaphat in the [†]forefront of them, to go again to Jerusalem with joy; for [l]the LORD had made them to rejoice over their enemies.

28 And they came to Jerusalem [m]with psalteries and harps and trumpets, unto the house of the LORD.

29 And [n]the fear of God was on all the kingdoms of those countries, when [o]they had heard that the LORD fought against the enemies of Israel.

30 So the realm of Jehoshaphat was quiet: for [p]his God gave him rest round about.

31 ¶ And [q]Jehoshaphat reigned over Judah: he was thirty and five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned twenty and five years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Azubah the daughter of Shilhi.

32 And [r]he walked in [s]the way of Asa his father, and [t]departed not from it, doing that which was right in the sight of the LORD.

33 Howbeit [u]the high places[6] were not taken away: for as yet the people [x]had not prepared their hearts unto the God of their fathers.

CHAP. XXI.

Jehoram succeedeth Jehoshaphat, 1; his wicked reign, 5; his incurable disease, 18.

NOW [a]Jehoshaphat slept with his fathers, and [b]was buried with his fathers in the city of David. And [c]Jehoram his son reigned in his stead.

2 And he had brethren the sons of Jehoshaphat, Azariah,[1] and Jehiel, and Zechariah, and Azariah, and Michael, and Shephatiah: all these were the sons of Jehoshaphat king of Israel.[2]

3 And their father [d]gave them great gifts of silver, and of gold, and of precious things, with fenced cities in Judah: but the kingdom gave he to Jehoram; because he was the first born.

4 Now when Jehoram was risen up to the kingdom of [*]his father, he strengthened himself, and [e]slew all his brethren with the sword, and divers also of the princes of Israel.[3]

5 ¶ Jehoram was thirty and two years old when he began to reign, and [f]he reigned eight years in Jerusalem.

6 And he walked [g]in the way of the kings of Israel, like as did the house of Ahab: for [h]he had the daughter of Ahab to wife: and he wrought that which was evil in the eyes of the LORD.

7 Howbeit [i]the LORD would not destroy the house of David, [k]because of the covenant that he had made with David, and [l]as he promised to give a [*]light to him and to his sons for ever.

8 ¶ In his days [m]the Edomites revolted from under the [†]dominion of Judah, [n]and made themselves a king.

9 Then Jehoram went forth with his princes, and all his chariots with him: and he rose up by night, and smote the Edomites which compassed him in, and the captains of the chariots.

but the Lord set ambushments against them, either hosts of angels, or, as Bishop Patrick thinks, their own ambushments, whom God struck with such confusion, that they fell upon their own friends as if they had been enemies, and "every one helped to destroy another," so that "none escaped." This God did, "when his people began to sing and to praise," ver. 22, for he delights to furnish those with matter for praise that have hearts for it. We read of his being "angry at the prayers of his people," Ps. lxxx. 4, but never at their "praises." When they did but begin the work of praise God perfected the work of their deliverance. What ground there was for their jealousies one of another, does not appear, perhaps there was none; but so it was, that the Ammonites and the Moabites fell foul upon the Edomites, and cut them off, and then they fell out with one another, and cut one another off, ver. 32. Thus God often makes wicked people instruments of destruction to one another; and what alliances can be so firm as to keep those together whom God designs to dash in pieces one against another? See the mischievous consequences of divisions which neither of the contending parties can give any good account of the reason of. Those are wretchedly infatuated to their ruin, that fall foul upon their friends as if they were enemies.

HIS THANKSGIVING.—Ver. 26. Never was victory celebrated with more solemn and enlarged thanksgivings. 1. They kept a day of praise in the camp, before they drew their forces out of the field. Many thanksgivings, no doubt, were offered up to God immediately; but on the fourth day they assembled in a valley, where they blessed God with so much zeal and fervency, that that day's work gave a name to the place, the valley of "Berachah," that is, "of blessing." The remembrance of this work of wonder was hereby perpetuated for the encouragement of succeeding generations to trust in God. 2. Yet they did not think this enough, but came in solemn procession, all in a body, and Jehoshaphat at the head of them, to Jerusalem, that the country, as they passed along, might join with them in their praises, and that they might give thanks for the mercy there where they had by prayer obtained it, "in the house of the Lord," ver. 27, 28. Praising God must not be the work of a day only; but our praises, when we have received mercy, must be often repeated, as our prayers were, when we were in the pursuit of it. Every day we must bless God; as long as we live, and while we have any being, we must praise him, spending our time in that work in which we hope to spend our eternity. Public mercies call for public acknowledgments, in the courts of the Lord's house. —Henry.

CHAP. XXI. JEHORAM'S BARBARITY.—Ver. 4. Jehoram was a most barbarous brother to his father's sons. As soon as he had settled himself in the throne, he slew all his brethren with the sword, either by false accusation, under colour of law, or rather by assassination; by some wicked hand or other he got them all murdered; pretending (it is likely) that he could not think himself safe in the government till they were taken out of the way. Those that mean ill themselves, are commonly, without cause, jealous of those about them. The wicked fear where no fear is, or pretend to do so, in order to conceal their malice. Jehoram, it is likely, hated his brethren, and slew them, for the same reason that Cain hated Abel, and slew him, because their piety condemned his impiety, and won them that esteem with the people which he had lost. With them he slew divers of the princes of Israel, who adhered to them, or were likely to avenge their death. The princes of Judah, those who had taught the good knowledge of the Lord, chap. xvii. 7, are here called "princes of Israel," as before "fathers of Israel," chap. xix. 8, because they were Israelites indeed, men of integrity. The sword which the good father had put into their hands, this wicked son sheathed in their bowels. Wo unto him that thus "foundeth a kingdom in blood," Hab. xi. 12; it will prove a foundation that will sink the superstructure.—Henry.

ELIJAH'S LETTER.—Ver. 12. If the account of Elijah's translation be given according to the order of time in which it occurred, it happened before Jehoram reigned alone. But the spirit of prophecy might direct Elijah to prepare this writing before his translation, in the foresight of Jehoram's crimes; it might be left to Elisha, or some other prophet, to transmit it to him; and coming in that extraordinary manner, it would have a peculiarly awful energy.—Some, however, have not improperly conjectured, that Elisha, and not Elijah, is intended.—The opinion, found in Josephus, the Septuagint, and elsewhere, that this letter was sent by Elijah from heaven, only shows, that the papists have not the honour of being the first inventors of such legendary tales.—Scott.

JEHORAM'S MISERABLE END.—Ver. 20. He died in awful torment, and was buried in disgrace. He reigned but eight years, and then "departed without being desired." Nobody valued him while he lived, none lamented him when he died, but wished no greater loss might ever come to Jerusalem. To show what little affection or respect they had for him, they would not "bury him in the sepulchres of the kings," as thinking him unworthy to be numbered among them, who had governed so ill. The excluding of his body from the sepulchres of his fathers might be ordered by providence, as an intimation of the everlasting separation of the souls of the wicked after death from the spirits of just men. This further disgrace they put upon him, that they "made no burning for him, like the burning of his fathers," ver. 19. His memory was far from being sweet and precious to them, and therefore they did not honour it with any sweet

10 So the Edomites revolted from under the hand of Judah unto this day. The same time also did [o]Libnah revolt from under his hand; [p]because he had forsaken the LORD God of his fathers.

11 Moreover [q]he made high places in the mountains of Judah, and [r]caused the inhabitants of Jerusalem to commit [s]fornication, and [t]compelled Judah thereto.

12 ¶ And there came [u]a writing to him from [x]Elijah the prophet, [y]saying, Thus saith the LORD God of David thy father, Because thou hast not walked [z]in the ways of Jehoshaphat thy father, nor [a]in the ways of Asa king of Judah,

13 But hast walked [b]in the way of the kings of Israel, and hast made Judah and the inhabitants of Jerusalem to go a [c]whoring, like to the whoredoms of the house of Ahab, and also [d]hast slain thy brethren of thy father's house, which were better than thyself:

14 Behold, with a great [1]plague[5] will the LORD smite [e]thy people, and [f]thy children, and thy wives, and all thy goods:

15 And thou shalt have great sickness [g]by disease of thy bowels, until [h]thy bowels fall out by reason of [i]the sickness day by day.

16 ¶ Moreover [k]the LORD stirred up against Jehoram the spirit of the [l]Philistines, and of the Arabians, that were near the Ethiopians:

17 And they came up into Judah, and brake into it, and [§]carried away all the substance that was found in the king's house, and [m]his sons also, and his wives; so that there was never a son left him, save [n]Jehoahaz, the youngest of his sons.

18 ¶ And after all this the LORD smote him in his bowels with [o]an incurable disease.[6]

19 And it came to pass, that in process of time, after the end of two years, his bowels fell out by reason of his sickness: so he died of sore diseases. And his people [p]made no burning for him, like the burning of his fathers.

20 [q]Thirty and two years old was he when he began to reign, and he reigned in Jerusalem eight years, and departed without [‖]being desired. Howbeit they buried him in the city of David, but not in the sepulchres of the kings.

CHAP. XXII.

Ahaziah succeeding reigneth wickedly, 1; he is slain by Jehu, 5. Athaliah usurpeth the kingdom, 10.

AND [a]the inhabitants of Jerusalem made [b]Ahaziah his youngest son king in his stead: for the band of men that came with the Arabians to the camp had [c]slain all the eldest. So Ahaziah the son of Jehoram king of Judah reigned.

2 [d]Forty and two years old was Ahaziah when he began to reign, and he reigned one year in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was [e]Athaliah the daughter of Omri.

3 He also walked in the ways of the house of Ahab: for [f]his mother was [g]his counsellor to do wickedly.

4 Wherefore he did evil in the sight of the LORD like the house of Ahab: for [h]they were his counsellors after the death of his father to his destruction.

5 ¶ He [i]walked also after their counsel, and [k]went with Jehoram the son of Ahab king of Israel to war against Hazael king of Syria at [l]Ramoth-gilead: and the Syrians smote Joram.

6 And he returned to be healed in Jezreel because of the wounds [*]which were given him at Ramah, when he fought with Hazael king of Syria. And [m]Azariah the son of Jehoram king of Judah went down [n]to see Jehoram the son of Ahab at Jezreel, because he was sick.

7 And the [†]destruction of Ahaziah [o]was of God by coming to Joram: for when he was come, [p]he went out with Jehoram against Jehu the son of Nimshi, whom [q]the LORD had anointed to cut off the house of Ahab.

8 And it came to pass, that, [r]when Jehu was executing judgment upon the house of Ahab, and found the princes of Judah, and the sons of the brethren of Ahaziah, that ministered to Ahaziah, he slew them.

9 And [s]he sought Ahaziah: and they caught him, (for he was hid [t]in Samaria,)[1] and brought him to Jehu: and when they had slain him, they buried him: [u]Because, said they, he is [x]the son of Jehoshaphat, who sought the LORD with all his heart. So [y]the house of Ahaziah had no power to keep still the kingdom.

10 ¶ But when [z]Athaliah the mother of Ahaziah saw that her son was dead, she arose and destroyed all the seed royal of the house of Judah.

11 But [a]Jehoshabeath, the daughter of the king,[2] took Joash the son of Ahaziah, and stole him from among the king's sons that were slain, and put him and his nurse in a [b]bed chamber. So Jehoshabeath, the daughter of king Jehoram, the wife of [c]Jehoiada the priest, (for she was the sister of Ahaziah,) hid him from Athaliah, so that [d]she slew him not.

12 And he was with them [e]hid in the house of God six years: and [f]Athaliah reigned over the land.

odours or precious spices; though we may suppose that his dead body, after so long and loathsome a disease, needed something to perfume it. The generality of the people, though prone to idolatry, yet had no true kindness for their idolatrous kings. Wickedness and profaneness make men despicable, even in the eyes of those who have but little religion themselves, while natural conscience itself often gives honour to those who are truly pious. They that "despise God shall be lightly esteemed," as Jehoram was.—Henry.

CHAP. XXII.—THE WICKED AHAZIAH AND HIS VILE COUNSELLORS.—The history of Ahaziah's reign is briefly summed up in two clauses, ver. 3, 4. His mother and her relations were his counsellors to do wickedly, and it was to his destruction. 1. He did wickedly. Though by a special providence of God he was preserved alive, when all his brethren were slain, and reserved for the crown, notwithstanding he was the youngest of them; though "the inhabitants of Jerusalem," when they had buried his father ingloriously, made him king, in hopes he would take warning by that not to tread in his steps, but would do better for himself and his kingdom; yet he was not influenced by the favours either of God or man, but "walked in the house of Ahab, did evil in the sight of the Lord," like them, ver. 3, 4; that is, he worshipped the same false gods that they worshipped, Balaam and Ashtaroth, supposing, (as the learned Bishop Patrick thinks,) that, by these demons, as mediators, they might have easier access to the supreme "Numen," the God of Israel, or that "these they might resort" to "at all times," and "for all matters," as being "nearer at hand," and "not of so high a dignity," but of a "middle nature," between the immortal God and mortal men—deified heroes; so they worshipped them as the church of Rome does saints and angels. That was sufficiently bad; but I wish there was no reason to suspect worse; I am apprehensive that they looked upon Jehovah, the God of their fathers, to be altogether such a one as these Baalim, and them to be as great and as good as he, nay, upon one account more eligible, inasmuch as these Baalim encouraged all manner of lewdness and sensuality, which the God of Israel strictly forbade. 2. He was counselled by his mother and her relations to do so. "She was his counsellor," ver. 3, and so were "they, after the death of his father," ver. 4. While his father lived, he took care to keep him to idolatry; but when he was dead, the house of Ahab feared lest his father's miserable end might deter him from it, and therefore they were very industrious to keep him close to it, and to make him "seven times" more a "child of hell than themselves." "The counsel of the ungodly" is the ruin of many young persons, when they are setting out in the world. This young prince might have had better advice, if he had pleased, from the princes and the judges, the priests and Levites, that had been famous in his good grandfather's time for teaching the knowledge of God; but the house of Ahab humoured him, and "he walked after their counsel," gave himself up to be led by them, and did just as they would have him. Thus do they debase and destroy themselves, that forsake the divine guidance. 3. He was counselled by them to his destruction. So it proved. Those that counsel us to do wickedly, counsel us to our destruction; while they fawn and flatter, and pretend friendship, they are really our worst enemies. They that debauch young men destroy them. (1.) It was bad enough that they exposed him to the sword of the Syrians, drawing him in to join with Joram king of Israel, in an expedition to Ramoth-gilead, where Joram was wounded; an expedition that was not for his honour. Those that give us bad counsel in the affairs of religion, if regarded by us, may justly be made of God our counsellors, to do foolishly in our own affairs. But that was not all. (2.) By engaging him in an intimacy with Joram king of Israel, they involved him in the common ruin of the house of Ahab. He came on a visit to Joram, ver. 6, just at the time that Jehu was executing the judgment of God upon that idolatrous family, and so was cut off with them, ver. 7—9. Here, [1.] See and dread the mischief of bad company, and of joining in with sinners. If not the infection, yet let the destruction, be feared; "Come out from Babylon," that falling house, Rev. xviii. 4. [2.] See and acknowledge the justice of God. His providence brought Ahaziah, just at this fatal juncture, to see Joram, that he might fall with him, and be taken as in a snare. This we had an account of before, 2 Kings ix. 27, 28. It is here added, that he was decently buried, (not as Jehoram, whose dead body was cast into Naboth's vineyard, 2 Kings ix. 26,) and the reason given is, because he was the son, that is, the grandson of good Jehoshaphat, "who sought the Lord with his heart." Thus is he remembered with honour long after his death, and some respect showed even to his degenerate unworthy seed for his sake. "The memory of the just is blessed, but the name of the wicked shall rot."—Henry.

CHAP. XXIII. JEHOIADA.—Ver. 1. The instrument and chief manager of the restoration is Jehoiada. 1. He here appears to be a man of great conduct; that reserved the young prince for so many years, till he was fit to appear in public, and till the nation was grown weary of the usurper; prepared his work beforehand, and then effected it with admirable secrecy and expedition. When God has work to do, he will qualify and animate men for it. 2. A man of great interest. The captains joined with him, ver. 1. The Levites, and the chief of the fathers of Israel, came at his call to Jerusalem, ver. 2, and were there ready to receive his orders. See what a command wisdom and virtue will give men. "The Levites and all Judah did as Jehoiada commanded, ver. 8, and, which

AND in the [a]seventh year Jehoiada strengthened himself, and took the captains of hundreds, Azariah the son of Jeroham, and Ishmael the son of Jehohanan, and Azariah the son of Obed, and Maaseiah the son of Adaiah, and Elishaphat the son of Zichri, into [b]covenant with him.

2 And they [c]went about in Judah, and gathered the Levites out of all the cities of Judah, and [d]the chief of the fathers of Israel, and they came to Jerusalem.

3 And all the congregation [e]made a covenant with the king in the house of God. And he said unto them, Behold, the king's son shall reign, [f]as the LORD hath said of the sons of David.

4 This is the thing that ye shall do; A third part of you [g]entering on the sabbath, of the priests and of the Levites, shall be [h]porters of the [*]doors;

5 And a third part shall be at [i]the king's house; and a third part at [k]the gate of the foundation: and all the people shall be in the courts of the house of the LORD.

6 But let none come into the house of the LORD, save the priests, and [l]they that minister[1] of the Levites; they shall go in, for they are holy: but all the people shall keep the watch of the LORD.

7 And [m]the Levites shall compass the king round about, every man with his weapons in his hand; and [n]whosoever else cometh into the house, he shall be put to death: but be ye with the king when he cometh in, and when he goeth out.

8 So [o]the Levites and all Judah did according to all things that Jehoiada the priest had commanded, and took every man his men that were to come in on the sabbath, with them that were to go out on the sabbath: for Jehoiada the priest dismissed not [p]the courses.

9 Moreover Jehoiada the priest delivered to the captains of hundreds, [q]spears, and bucklers, and shields, that had been king David's,[2] which were in the house of God.

10 And he set all the people, every man having his weapon in his hand, from the right [†]side of the temple to the left side of the temple, [r]along by the altar and the temple, by the king round about.

11 Then [s]they brought out the king's son, and [t]put upon him the crown,[3] and gave him [u]the testimony, and made him king. And Jehoiada and his sons [x]anointed him, and said, [‡]God save the king.

12 ¶ Now [y]when Athaliah heard the noise of the people running and praising the king, [z]she came to the people into the house of the LORD:

13 And she looked, and, behold, [a]the king stood at his pillar at the entering in, [b]and the princes and the trumpets by the king: and [c]all the people of the land rejoiced, and [d]sounded with trumpets, also [e]the singers with instruments of musick, and such as taught to sing praise. Then Athaliah rent her clothes, and said, [§]Treason, Treason.

14 Then Jehoiada the priest brought out the captains of hundreds that were set over the host, and said unto them, Have her forth of the ranges; and [f]whoso followeth her, let him be slain with the sword. For the priest said, [g]Slay her not in the house of the LORD.

15 So they laid hands on her; and when she was come to the entering [h]of the horse gate[4] by the king's house, [i]they slew her there.

16 ¶ And Jehoiada [k]made a covenant[5] between him, and between all the people, and between the king, [l]that they should be the LORD's people.

17 Then all the people went to [m]the house of Baal, and brake it down, and [n]brake his altars and his images in pieces, and [o]slew Mattan the priest of Baal before the altars.

18 Also Jehoiada appointed the offices of the house of the LORD by the hand of the priests the Levites,[6] [p]whom David had distributed in the house of the LORD, to offer the burnt offerings of the LORD, [q]as it is written in the law of Moses, with rejoicing and with singing, as it was ordained [‖]by David.

19 And he set the [r]porters at the gates of the house of the LORD, that none which was unclean in any thing should enter in.

20 And he took [s]the captains of hundreds, and the nobles, and the governors of the people, and all the people of the land, and brought down the king from the house of the LORD: and they came through the high gate into the king's house, and set the king upon the throne of the kingdom.

21 And [t]all the people of the land rejoiced: and the city was quiet, after that they had slain Athaliah with the sword.

Joash reigneth well all the days of Jehoiada, 1; Jehoiada being dead, 15, Joash falleth to idolatry, 17; he is slain by his servants, 25.

JOASH [a] was seven years old when he began to reign, and he reigned forty years in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was Zibiah of Beer-sheba.

2 And [b]Joash did that which was right in the sight of the LORD [c]all the days of Jehoiada the priest.[1]

3 And Jehoiada [d]took for him [e]two wives; and he begat sons and daughters.

4 ¶ And it came to pass after this, that is strange, all that were intrusted with the secret kept their own counsel till it was executed. Thus "the words of the wise are heard in quiet," Eccl. ix. 17. 3. A man of great faith. It was not only common equity, (much less his wife's relation to the royal family,) that put him upon this undertaking, but a regard to the word of God, and the divine entail of the crown, ver. 3. "The king's son shall reign," must reign, "as the Lord hath said." His eye to the promise, and dependence upon that, added a great deal of glory to this undertaking. 4. A man of great religion. This matter was to be done in the temple, which might occasion some breach of rule, and the necessity of the case might be thought to excuse it; but he gave special order that none of the people should come into the house of the Lord, but the priests and Levites only, who were holy, upon pain of death, ver. 6, 7. Never let sacred things be profaned, no not for the support of civil rights. 5. A man of great resolution. When he had undertaken this business, he went through with it, "brought out the king, crowned him, and gave him the testimony," ver. 11. He ventured his head, but it was in a good cause, and therefore he went on boldly.

CORONATION OF JOASH, AND ITS HAPPY RESULTS.—Ver. 12—21. Here is, 1. The people pleased, ver. 12, 13. When the king stood at his pillar, whose right it was to stand there, "all the people of the land rejoiced to see a rod sprung out of the stem of Jesse." Isa. xi. 1. When it seemed a withered root in a dry ground, to see what they despaired of ever seeing, a king of the house of David; what a pleasing surprise was it to them! They ran in transports of joy to see this sight, praised the king, and praised God, for they had with them such as "taught to sing praise." 2. Athaliah slain. She ran herself upon the point of the sword of justice; for, imagining her interest much better than it was, she ventured "into the house of the Lord," at that time, and cried, "Treason, treason!" But nobody seconded her, or sided with her: "the pride of her heart deceived her;" she thought all her own, whereas none were cordially so. Jehoiada, as protector in the king's minority, ordered her to be slain, ver. 14, which was done immediately, ver. 15; only care was taken that she should not be "slain in the house of the Lord;" that sacred place must not be so far disgraced, nor that wicked woman so far honoured. 3. The original contract agreed to, ver. 16. In the Kings it was said, Jehoiada made a covenant between the Lord, the people, and the king, 2 Kings xi. 17. Here it is said to be between himself, the people, and the king; for he, as God's priest, was his representative in this transaction, or a sort of mediator, as Moses was. 4. Baal destroyed, ver. 17. They would not have done half their work, if they had destroyed the worship of the king's right only, and not the usurper of God's right; if they had assaulted the house of the king, and not that of the altar. 5. The temple service revived, ver. 18, 19. This had been neglected in the last reigns, the priest and people wanting either power or zeal to keep it up, when they had princes that were disaffected to it. But Jehoiada "put the offices of the house of the Lord" into the proper course and proper hands again, which, in the late times, had been disturbed and invaded. 6. The civil government re-established, ver. 20. They brought the king in state to his own palace, and set him "upon the throne of the kingdom," to give law, and give judgment, either in his own person, or by Jehoiada his tutor.—Henry.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.—The Lord commonly effects great and important changes by those persons whom he hath furnished with wisdom, courage, piety, and integrity; and who intend to do his will and promote his glory, and not to advance their own interests. In the greatest emergencies, care ought to be taken that sacred things be not profaned, and that every one concur in a manner consistent with his character and calling: and as ministers are by profession holy persons, they should be careful to exhibit holy examples.—Civil transactions should be managed with a regard to the word and worship of God; and whilst men's hearts overflow with good wishes for their princes, commendations of them, or joy in their advancement, they should remember to terminate all in thanksgivings and praises unto God. This is peculiarly becoming, when persecuting tyrants and usurpers are removed, and equitable rulers come in their places: the work is the Lord's, whatever instruments he is pleased to employ. Such national mercies should be acknowledged by public reformations; and by a concurrence of all ranks, in solemnly yielding themselves up to be the Lord's people, and in establishing his worship and ordinances according to his word. Where this is neglected, the joy and singing, which takes place upon great deliverances, or the accession of kings to the throne, will commonly be shortlived, and will terminate in complaints, discords, and calamities.—Scott.

CHAP. XXIV. USEFUL LESSONS FROM THE HISTORY OF JOASH.—Ver. 1—14. Men may go far in the external performances of religion, and keep long to them, merely by the power of their education, and the influence of their friends, who yet have no hearty affection for divine things, nor any inward relish of them. Foreign inducements may push men on to that which is good, who are not actuated by a living principle of grace in their hearts. 2. In the shows of devotion, it is possible that those who have only the form of godliness, may outstrip those who have the power of it. Joash is more solicitous and more zealous about the repair of the temple than Jehoiada himself, whom he reproves for his remissness in that matter, ver. 6. It is [illegible] temples than to be temples to God. 8. The repairing of churches [illegible] which all in their place

Joash was minded to *repair the house of the LORD.

5 And he gathered together the priests and the Levites, and said to them, Go out unto the cities of Judah, and [f]gather of all Israel money to repair the house of your God from year to year, and see that ye hasten the matter. [g]Howbeit the Levites hastened it not.

6 And the king called for Jehoiada the chief, and said unto him, [h]Why hast thou not required of the Levites to bring in out of Judah and out of Jerusalem [i]the collection[2] according to the commandment of Moses the servant of the LORD, and of the congregation of Israel, for the [k]tabernacle of witness?

7 For the [l]sons of Athaliah,[3] [m]that wicked woman, had broken up the house of God; and also all the dedicated things of the house of the LORD [n]did they bestow upon Baalim.

8 And [o]at the king's commandment they made a chest, and set it without at the gate of the house of the LORD.[4]

9 And they made a [†]proclamation through Judah and Jerusalem, to bring in to the LORD the [p]collection that Moses the servant of God laid upon Israel in the wilderness.

10 And all the princes and all the people [q]rejoiced, and brought in, and cast into the chest, until they had made an end.

11 Now it came to pass, that [r]at what time the chest was brought unto the king's office by the hand of the Levites, and when they saw that there was much money, the king's scribe and the high priest's officer came and emptied the chest, and took it, and carried it to his place again. Thus they did day by day, and gathered money in abundance.

12 And the king and Jehoiada [s]gave it to such as did the work of the service of the house of the LORD, and hired [t]masons and carpenters to repair the house of the LORD, and also such as wrought iron and brass to mend the house of the LORD.

13 So the workmen wrought, and [‡]the work was perfected by them, and they set the house of God [u]in his state, and strengthened it.

14 And when they had finished it, they brought the rest of the money before the king and Jehoiada, whereof were made [x]vessels for the house of the LORD, even [y]vessels to minister, and [§]to offer withal, and spoons, and vessels of gold and silver. And they [z]offered burnt offerings in the house of the LORD continually [a]all the days of Jehoiada.

15 ¶ But Jehoiada waxed old, and was [b]full of days when he died; [c]an hundred and thirty years old was he when he died.[5]

16 And they buried him [d]in the city of David among the kings, [e]because he had done good in Israel, both toward God, and toward his house.

17 ¶ Now [f]after the death of Jehoiada came [g]the princes of Judah, and made obeisance to the king. Then the king hearkened unto them.

18 And [h]they left the house of the LORD God of their fathers, and served groves and idols: and [i]wrath came upon Judah and Jerusalem for this their trespass.

19 Yet [k]he sent prophets to them, to bring them again unto the LORD; and they testified against them: but they would not [l]give ear.

20 And [m]the Spirit of God [n]came upon Zechariah [o]the son of Jehoiada the priest, which stood above the people, and said unto them, Thus saith God, [p]Why transgress ye the commandments of the LORD, that ye cannot prosper? [q]because ye have forsaken the LORD, he hath also forsaken you.

21 And they [r]conspired against him,[6] and [s]stoned him with stones at the commandment of the king, in the court of the house of the LORD.

22 Thus Joash the king [t]remembered not the kindness which Jehoiada his father had done to him, but slew his son. And when he died, he said, [u]The LORD look upon it, and require it.

23 ¶ And it came to pass ‖at the end of the year, that [x]the host of Syria came up against him: and they came to Judah and Jerusalem, and destroyed [y]all the princes of the people from among the people, and sent all the spoil of them unto the king of *Damascus.

24 For the army of the Syrians [z]came with a small company of men, and the LORD [a]delivered a very great host into their hand, because they had forsaken the LORD God of their fathers. [b]So they executed judgment against Joash.

25 And when they were departed from him, (for they left him in [c]great diseases,) [d]his own servants conspired against him[7] [e]for the blood of the sons[8] of Jehoiada the priest, and slew him on his bed, and he died: and they buried him in the city of David, but they buried him [f]not in the sepulchres of the kings.

26 And these are they that conspired against him; [†]Zabad the son of Shimeath an Ammonitess, and Jehozabad the son of [‡]Shimrith a Moabitess.

27 ¶ Now concerning his sons, and the greatness of the [§]burdens laid upon him, and the [§]repairing of the house of God, behold, they are written in the ‖story of the book of the kings. And [b]Amaziah his son reigned in his stead.

should promote, for the decency and conveniency of religious assemblies. The learned tell us that, in the Christian church, anciently, part of the tithes were applied that way. 4. Many a good work would be done that now lies undone, if there were but a few active men to stir in it and put it forward. When Joash found that money did not come in as he expected, one way, he tried another way, and that answered the intention. Many have honesty enough to follow that have not zeal enough to lead, in that which is good. The throwing of money into a chest, through a hole in the lid of it, was a way that had not been used before, and perhaps the very novelty of the thing made it a successful expedient for the raising of money: a great deal was thrown in, and with a great deal of cheerfulness; they all rejoiced, ver. 10. An invention to please people's humour may sometimes bring them to their duty. Wisdom herein is profitable to direct.—Henry.

APOSTACY OF JOASH.—Ver. 17, 18. Jehoiada had acquired his influence over Joash during his childhood: and his near relation to the king, and the vast obligations which he had conferred upon him, concurred with his age, gravity, reputation, piety, and wisdom, to support him in authority. So that, whilst he lived, neither Joash, nor his courtiers, ventured to follow, or even to declare, their inclinations to idolatry, but externally conformed to Jehoiada's regulations. As soon, however, as he was removed, they threw off the mask; and the nobles paid court to Joash, and perhaps flattered him, as at length freed from priestly dominion, tuition, grave lectures, and restraints, and as now a king indeed; and intimated, that he would have no objection to relax the rigour of Jehoiada's administration, in matters of religion. Perhaps they only proposed that he should tolerate their sacrificing upon the high places, as more convenient and agreeable to them, than always coming to Jerusalem: but he, being won by their homage, as well as induced by his own inclinations, joined with them even in more avowed idolatry; in consequence of which, they soon experienced some tokens of the Divine displeasure.—Scott.

MARTYRDOM OF ZECHARIAH.—Mark the barbarous treatment they gave this prophet for his kindness and faithfulness in delivering this message to them, ver. 21. By the conspiracy of the princes, or some of their party, and "by the commandment of the king," who thought himself affronted by this fair warning, they stoned him to death immediately; not, under colour of law, accusing him as a blasphemer, a traitor, or a false prophet, but in a popular tumult, "in the court of the house of the Lord"—as horrid a piece of wickedness as perhaps any we read of in all the history of the kings. The person was sacred, a priest; the place sacred, the court of the temple, the inner court, "between the porch and the altar;" the message yet more sacred, we have reason to think that they knew it came from the spirit of prophecy: the reproof was just, the warning fair, both backed with scripture, and the delivery very gentle and tender; and yet so impudently and daringly do they defy God himself, that nothing less than the blood of the prophet can satisfy their indignation at the prophecy. "Be astonished, O heavens, at this," and "tremble, O earth," that ever such a villany should be committed by men, by Israelites, in contempt and violation of every thing that is just, honourable, and sacred! That a king, a king in covenant with God, should command the murder of one whom it was his office to protect and countenance! The Jews say, There were seven transgressions in this; for they killed a priest, a prophet, a judge, they shed innocent blood, polluted the court of the temple, the Sabbath, and the day of expiation; for, on that day, their tradition says, this happened. Mark the aggravation of this sin; that this Zechariah, who suffered martyrdom for his faithfulness to God and his country, was the son of Jehoiada, who had done so much good in Israel, and particularly had been as a father to Joash, ver. 22. The affront done by it to God, and the contempt put on religion, are not so particularly taken notice of, as the ingratitude there was in it to the memory of Jehoiada. He remembered not the kindness of the father, but slew the son for doing his duty, and what the father would have done, if he had been there. Call a man ungrateful, and you can call him no worse.

PUNISHMENT ON KING AND PEOPLE.—1. A small army of Syrians made themselves masters of Jerusalem, destroyed princes, plundered the city, and sent the spoil of it to Damascus, ver. 23, 24. God's people, while they kept in with God, had often been conquerors, when the enemy had the advantage of the greater number; but now, on the contrary, an inconsiderable handful of Syrians routed a "very great host of Israelites, because they had forsaken the Lord God of their fathers;" and then they were not only put upon the level with their enemies, but opposed them with the utmost disadvantage; for their God not only departed from them, but turned to be their enemy, and fought against them. The Syrians were employed as instruments in God's hand to "execute judgments against Joash," though they little thought so, Isa. x. 6, 7, and see Deut. xxxii. 30. 2. God smote him with great diseases, of body, or mind, or both; either like his grandfather, (chap. xxi. 18,) or like Saul, an evil spirit from God troubling him. 3. His own servants conspired against him. Perhaps he began to hope his disease would be cured, he was but a middle-aged man, and might recover it; but "he that cometh up out of the pit, shall fall into the snare;" when he thought he should escape death by sickness, he met it by the sword; they slew him in his bed, for the blood of the sons of Jehoiada; by which it should seem that he did not only slay Zechariah, but others of the sons of Jehoiada for his sake. Perhaps they that slew him intended to take vengeance for that blood; this, however, was what God intended, in permitting

Amaziah beginneth to reign well, 1: having hired an army of Israelites against the Edomites, at the word of a prophet he loseth an hundred talents, and dismisseth them, 5: he overthroweth the Edomites, 11: he provoketh Joash to his overthrow, 17.

A.M. 3166. B.C. 838.

AMAZIAH was [a]twenty and five years old when he began to reign, and he reigned twenty and nine years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Jehoaddan of Jerusalem.

2 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, [b]but not with a perfect heart.[1]

3 ¶ Now it came to pass, when the kingdom was *established to him, that [c]he slew his servants that had killed the king his father.

4 But he slew not their children, but did [d]as it is written in the law in the book of Moses, where the LORD commanded, saying, The fathers shall not die for the children, neither shall the children die for the fathers, but every man shall die for his own sin.

5 ¶ Moreover Amaziah gathered Judah together, and made them [e]captains over thousands, and captains over hundreds, according to the houses of their fathers, throughout all Judah and Benjamin: and he numbered them [f]from twenty years old and above, and found them three hundred thousand choice men,[2] able to go forth to war, that could handle spear and shield.

6 He hired also an hundred thousand mighty men of valour out of [g]Israel, for an hundred talents of silver.

7 But there came [h]a man of God to him, saying, O king, let not the army of Israel go with thee; [i]for the LORD is not with Israel, to wit, with all the children of Ephraim.

8 But if thou wilt go, do it, [k]be strong for the battle: God shall make thee fall before the enemy: for [l]God hath power to help, and to cast down.

9 And Amaziah said to the man of God, But what shall we do for the hundred talents, which I have given to the †army of Israel? And the man of God answered, [m]The LORD is able to give thee much more than this.

10 Then [n]Amaziah separated them, to wit, the army that was come to him out of Ephraim, to go ‡home again: wherefore their anger was greatly kindled against Judah, and they returned home in §great anger.

11 ¶ And Amaziah strengthened himself, and led forth his people, and went to the [o]valley of Salt, and smote of the children of Seir ten thousand.

12 And other ten thousand left alive did the children of Judah carry away captive, and brought them unto the top of the rock, and [p]cast them down from the top of the rock, that they all were [q]broken in pieces.

13 ¶ But the ‖soldiers of the army which Amaziah sent back, that they should not go with him to battle, fell upon the cities of Judah, from [r]Samaria even unto [s]Beth-horon, and smote three thousand of them,[4] and took much spoil.

14 ¶ Now it came to pass, after that Amaziah was come from the slaughter of the Edomites, that [t]he brought the gods of the children of Seir, and set them up to be [u]his gods, and bowed down himself before them, and burned incense unto them.

15 Wherefore the anger of the LORD was kindled against Amaziah, and he sent unto him [x]a prophet, which said unto him, [y]Why hast thou sought after [z]the gods of the people, [a]which could not deliver their own people out of thine hand?[5]

16 And it came to pass, as he talked with him, that the king said unto him, [b]Art thou made of the king's counsel? [c]forbear; why shouldest thou be smitten? Then the prophet forbare, and said, I know that God [d]hath *determined to destroy thee, because thou hast done this, and hast not hearkened unto my counsel.

17 ¶ Then [e]Amaziah king of Judah took advice,[6] and sent to Joash, the son of Jehoahaz, the son of Jehu, king of Israel, saying, Come, [f]let us see one another in the face.

18 And Joash king of Israel sent to Amaziah king of Judah, saying, The †thistle that was in Lebanon sent to the cedar that was in Lebanon, saying, Give thy daughter to my son to wife: and there passed by ‡a wild beast that was in Lebanon, and trode down the thistle.

19 Thou sayest, Lo, thou hast smitten the Edomites; and §thine heart lifteth thee up [h]to boast: abide now at home; [i]why shouldest thou meddle to thine hurt, that thou shouldest fall, even thou, and Judah with thee?

20 But Amaziah would not hear; for [k]it came of God, that he might deliver them into the hand of their enemies, because they sought after the gods of Edom.

21 So Joash the king of Israel went up; and they [l]saw one another in the face, both he and Amaziah king of Judah, at [m]Beth-shemesh, which belongeth to Judah.

22 And Judah was §put to the worse before Israel, and they [n]fled every man to his tent.

23 And Joash the king of Israel [o]took Amaziah king of Judah, the son of Joash, the son of [p]Jehoahaz, at Beth-shemesh, and

CHAP. XXV. AMAZIAH'S EXPEDITION AGAINST EDOM, AND ITS CONSEQUENCES.—Ver. 6—10. If Amaziah had previously consulted God, the painful consequences of this measure would have been prevented.—As the hundred talents would not divide above eight shillings a-piece, among one hundred thousand men, we may suppose that it was only an earnest of their pay, or that they expected to be enriched with the plunder of the Edomites.—The kingdom of Israel was openly idolatrous, and the Lord would not have Judah join alliance with them. Perhaps the army which Amaziah had hired was chiefly of the tribe of Ephraim; or that tribe, being the most considerable in the kingdom of Israel, is put for the whole.—As the Lord was not with the men of Ephraim, he declared by his prophet that he would not prosper Amaziah, if he employed them: and if, after this prohibition, he would persist in taking them with him, he was warned that God would make him fall before the enemy: for he could help him without the aid of idolaters; and he could cast him down, though he thus made himself "strong for the battle." And as for the hundred talents, which he had given to the Israelites, and could not recover, and which he was unwilling to lose; the Lord was able to give him much more than that.—Amaziah, though destitute of true faith, paid so much regard to the Lord's message, that he discharged the hired army: and they were exceedingly offended at the affront put upon them, in being sent away as the enemies of God; and perhaps also by the disappointment of their avaricious or ambitious expectations. Ver. 13. The Israelites seem to have returned home, when discharged by Amaziah, as his powerful army deterred them from attempting revenge at that time: but when he was engaged with the Edomites, they took the opportunity, marched from Samaria, and plundered all the cities till they came to Beth-horon, where they slew three thousand of the inhabitants.—Amaziah had indeed dismissed these auxiliaries in obedience to God: but his savage cruelty to the prisoners of Edom, and his subsequent idolatry, ver. 14—16, proved that he acted by constraint or terror, when he was obedient: he therefore received for his complicated misconduct just rebuke. Had he broken the idols to pieces, and treated the prisoners with clemency, he might have expected comfort in his success, and not experienced such painful effects from dismissing the Israelites.—Perhaps the cities which were destroyed on this occasion, being in the vicinity of Israel, were infected with idolatry. Ver. 14—16. Ahaz, who worshipped the idols of Syria, by whom he was vanquished, was not so senseless as Amaziah, who sought unto the gods of the people, which could not deliver them from his cruelty. But Amaziah, who had borne with the prophet, who spoke to him concerning dismissing the Israelites, by which he lost one hundred talents, was so mad upon his idols, that he would not endure that subject to be insisted on.—He seems to have menaced the prophet with Zechariah's doom; and thus he made himself a sharer in the guilt of that atrocious murder. The prophet was a counsellor, whom the Lord had appointed him: and none of those whom he had chosen for himself gave him such honest, wise, and salutary counsel. But as he would not hearken to it, the prophet desisted, having warned him that the Lord had counselled to destroy him.—Scott.

DISGRACE AND DEATH OF AMAZIAH.—Ver. 17—28. We have here this degenerate prince mortified by his neighbour, and murdered by his own subjects. 1. Never was proud prince more thoroughly mortified than Amaziah was by Joash king of Israel. This part of the story was as fully related, 2 kings xiv. 8, &c., as it is here—The foolish challenge which Amaziah sent to Joash, ver. 17, his haughty, scornful answer to it, ver. 18, with the friendly advice he gave him to sit still and know when he was well off, ver. 19, his wilful persisting in his challenge, ver. 20—21, the defeat that was given him, ver. 22, and the calamity he brought upon himself and his city thereby, ver. 23, 24. Now, this story verifies two of Solomon's proverbs; (1.) That "a man's pride will bring him low," Prov. xxix. 23; it goes before his destruction, not only procures it meritoriously, but often the immediate occasion of it. He that exalteth himself shall be abased. (2.) That he that "goes forth hastily to strive," will probably "not know what to do in the end thereof, when his neighbour has put him to shame," Prov. xxv. 8. He that is fond of contention may have enough of it, sooner than he thinks of. But there are two passages in this story, which we had not before in the Kings. [1.] That "Amaziah took advice," before he challenged the king of Israel, ver. 17. But of whom? Not of the prophet he was "not made of the king's counsel," but of his statesmen, that would flatter him and bid him go up and prosper. It is good to take advice, but then it must be of those that are fit to advise us. Those that will not take advice from the word of God, which would guide them aright, will justly be left to the bad advice of those that will counsel them to their destruction. Let those be made fools that will not be made wise. [2.] Amaziah's imprudence is here made the punishment of his impiety, ver. 20. "It was of the Lord;" he left him to himself to act thus foolishly, that he and his people might be "delivered into the hands of their enemies, because" they had forsaken God, and "sought after the gods of Edom." They that will not be persuaded to do well for their souls, will justly be given up to their own counsels, to do ill for themselves even in their outward affairs. 2. Never was poor prince more violently pursued by his own subjects from the time that he departed from the Lord, (so it may be read, ver. 27,) the hearts of brought him to Jerusalem, and brake down the wall of Jerusalem from the [q]gate of Ephraim to the ‖corner gate, four hundred cubits.

24 And he took [r]all the gold and the silver, and all the vessels that were found in the house of God with Obed-edom,[s] and the treasures of the king's house, the hostages also, and returned to Samaria.

25 ¶ And Amaziah the son of Joash king of Judah lived after the death of [t]Joash son of Jehoahaz king of Israel fifteen years.

26 Now the [u]rest of the acts of Amaziah, first and last, behold, are they not written in the book of the kings of Judah and Israel?

27 ¶ Now after the time that Amaziah did turn away[y] from following the LORD they [z]made a conspiracy against him in Jerusalem; and he fled to [a]Lachish: but they sent to Lachish after him, and slew him there.

28 And they brought him upon horses, and buried him with his fathers in [x]the city of Judah.[10]

CHAP. XXVI.

Uzziah succeedeth Amaziah, and reigneth well in the days of Zechariah, 1: his buildings, 9: his host, and engines of war, 11: he invadeth the priest's office, and is smitten with leprosy, 16: his death, &c., 22.

THEN [a]all the people of Judah took [b]Uzziah, who was sixteen years old, and made him king in the room of his father Amaziah.

2 He built [c]Eloth, and [d]restored it to Judah, after that the king slept with his fathers.

3 Sixteen years old was [e]Uzziah when he began to reign, and he reigned fifty and two years in Jerusalem. His mother's name also was [f]Jecoliah of Jerusalem.

4 And he did that which was right in the sight of the LORD, [g]according to all that his father Amaziah did.

5 And [h]he sought God in the days of Zechariah,[1] who [i]had understanding in the [k]visions of God: and [l]as long as he sought the LORD, God made him to prosper.

6 And he went forth and [i]warred against the Philistines, and brake down [m]the wall of Gath, and the wall of Jabneh, and the wall of Ashdod, and built cities [†]about Ashdod, and among the Philistines.

7 And [n]God helped him against the Philistines, and against [o]the Arabians that dwelt in Gur-baal, and the Mehunims.

8 And [p]the Ammonites gave gifts to Uzziah: and [q]his name [‡]spread abroad even to the entering in of Egypt; for he strengthened himself exceedingly.

9 ¶ Moreover Uzziah built towers in Jerusalem at [r]the corner gate, and at [s]the valley gate, and at [t]the turning of the wall, and [§]fortified them.

10 Also he built towers in the desert, and ‖digged many wells: for [u]he had much cattle, both in the low country, and in the plains: husbandmen also, and vinedressers in the mountains, and in [*]Carmel: for he loved [†]husbandry.

11 ¶ Moreover Uzziah had an host of fighting men, that [x]went out to war by bands, according to the number of their account by the hand of Jeiel the scribe and Maaseiah the ruler, under the hand of Hananiah, one of the king's captains.

12 The whole number of the chief of the fathers of the mighty men of valour were two thousand and six hundred.

13 And under their hand was [‡]an army, [y]three hundred thousand and seven thousand and five hundred, that made war with mighty power, to help the king against the enemy.

14 And Uzziah prepared for them[2] throughout all the host shields, and spears, and helmets, and habergeons, and bows, and [§]slings to cast stones.

15 And he made in Jerusalem engines,[3] invented by [z]cunning men, to be on the towers and upon the bulwarks, to shoot arrows and great stones withal. And his name ‖spread far abroad; for he was marvellously helped, till he was strong.

16 ¶ But [a]when he was strong, his heart was lifted up to his destruction: for he transgressed against the LORD his God, and [b]went into the temple of the LORD [c]to burn incense upon the altar of incense.

17 And [d]Azariah the priest went in after him, and with him fourscore priests of the LORD, that were [e]valiant men:

18 And they [f]withstood Uzziah the king, and said unto him, It appertaineth [g]not unto thee,[4] Uzziah, to burn incense unto the LORD, but [h]to the priests the sons of Aaron, that are consecrated to burn incense: go out of the sanctuary; for thou hast trespassed; [i]neither shall it be for thine honour from the LORD God.

19 Then Uzziah was wroth, and had a censer in his hand to burn incense: and while [k]he was wroth with the priests, [l]the leprosy even rose up in his forehead before the priests in the house of the LORD, from beside the incense altar.

20 And Azariah the chief priest, and all the priests, looked upon him, and, behold, he was leprous in his forehead, and they thrust him out from thence; yea, himself [m]hasted also to go out, because [n]the LORD had smitten him.

21 And [o]Uzziah the king was a leper unto the day of his death, and [p]dwelt in a his subjects departed from him, and they began to form a design against him in Jerusalem. It is probable that they were exasperated against him more for his rash engaging in a war against Israel, than for his worshipping the gods of Edom. But at length the ferment grew so high, and he perceived the plot to be laid so deep, that he thought fit to quit his royal city, and flee to Lachish, either as a private place where he might be hid, or as a strong place where he might be guarded; but they sent after him thither, and slew him there. By this it seems to have been done deliberately, and to have been the act, not of a disgusted servant or two, but of a considerable body that durst avow it. How unrighteous soever they were herein, God was righteous.—Henry.

CHAP. XXVI. UZZIAH'S PROSPERITY.—Here are several particular instances of his prosperity. 1. His success in his wars. "God helped him," ver. 7, and then he triumphed over the Philistines, those old enemies of God's people, demolished the fortifications of their cities, and put garrisons of his own among them, ver. 6. He obliged the Ammonites to pay him tribute, ver. 8. He made all quiet about him, and kept them in awe. 2. The greatness of his fame and reputation. His name was celebrated throughout all the neighbouring countries, ver. 8, and it was a good name, a name for good things with God and good people. This is true fame, and makes a man truly honourable. 3. His buildings. While he acted offensively abroad, he did not neglect the defence of his kingdom at home, but "built towers in Jerusalem, and fortified them," ver. 9. Much of the wall of Jerusalem was, in his father's time, broken down, particularly at "the corner gate," chap. xxv. 23; probably his father had repaired it, but he, to prevent the like mischief for the future, fortified it, and "built a tower at the corner gate." But his best fortification of Jerusalem was his close adherence to the worship of God, which, if his father had not forsaken, the wall of Jerusalem had not been broken down. While he fortified the city, he did not forget the country, but "built towers in the desert" too, ver. 10, to protect the country people from the inroads of the plunderers, bands of which sometimes alarmed them and plundered them, as chap. xxi. 16. 4. His husbandry. He dealt much in cattle and corn, employed many hands, and got much wealth by it, for he took a pleasure in it; he "loved husbandry," ver. 10, and probably did himself inspect his affairs in the country, which was no disparagement to him, but an advantage, as it encouraged industry among his subjects.—Henry.

HIS PRIDE AND DOWNFALL.—Ver. 16—23. Uzziah had been remarkably prospered in every thing; but pride, instead of gratitude, was fostered by it: so that, deeming himself at least as much favoured as the priests were, he thought it a reproach to him to be excluded from any part of the temple or the worship of God.—Burning incense was the most honourable part of the sacerdotal office, and of that he became ambitious. The law had forbidden any but the priests of the family of Aaron, to enter the sanctuary, or to burn incense; and the fate of Korah and his company was an awful example upon record of the consequences to be expected from violating that statute. But perhaps Uzziah was tempted to disbelieve these ancient records, imagining that they had been falsified by the priests to keep up their own consequence; or that the law was now become obsolete: and he might be confirmed in this, by considering that nothing of the kind had taken place for many centuries. Thus "his heart was lifted up to his destruction;" his crime exposed him to eternal destruction, as well as present death; and though he was respited, yet his remaining days were spent, as it were, in a lingering ignominious execution.—None of the former kings of Judah had attempted to burn incense in the temple; perhaps none to invade the sacerdotal office in any way; though many of them had offended by forsaking the worship of God. Had Uzziah contented himself with imitating David, Solomon, Jehoshaphat, &c., in instructing and praying with and for his people, he would have done commendably.—The idolatrous kings, indeed, burned incense to their idols, and it seems he took them for his pattern in this instance, though he would not forsake the God of Israel. Azariah and the other priests behaved nobly on this occasion: they opposed the king's design, not with violence or reproachful language, but with plain scriptural remonstrances, precepts, and counsels; and by warning him, that his attempt would expose him to disgrace from the Lord God. But he was insensible to their arguments, and enraged by their faithful opposition: and Josephus writes, that he threatened them with death, when an extraordinary earthquake preceded his being smitten with leprosy. But however that might be, when he found that this divine judgment was inflicted upon him, and was conspicuous in his forehead, he became sensible of his sin and danger, and hastily yielded to the priests, who hurried him out of the sanctuary. It pleased God to continue this stigma upon him during the remainder of his life, though we know not how long he lived afterwards: and in consequence he was excluded from the precincts of the temple; from society, except that of the priests into whose office he had intruded; and from the exercise of his regal authority. Thus, by aspiring after that honour which did not belong to him, he lost all his dignity and reputation, and was in some sense degraded beneath the meanest of his subjects: and even after his death, notwithstanding his good and prosperous reign, he was, as a leper, excluded from the sepulchres of the kings.—But the long-suffering of God gave him space for repentance: and his patient and quiet submission to this severe rebuke, and to all its most painful consequences, (as they must have been to so [illegible]
